[177] adaptation (Carmina). But until the overwhelming weigh [175]

[1] Rev. Allan Macdonald, p. 62, Na Fainteau. The omission of the Mosai paternal precedence may be a courtesy to motherhood implying equality i parenthood.

ef in a God who punishes iniquity "unto the third and 586
th generation." 771
626

In one family the wife transgressed by committing 684 tery, albeit a rare sin. Her husband was one of the 794 ct" and a deacon in the Free Church. Fully aware of 626 fact that his wife had remained away from Skye until r her child was born, he took her back. He was older she and devoted to her. The story could not be covered n Skye, where the elders have their thumbs on the pulse he congregation. The elders summoned him before the session. After he admitted he knew all the details and fact that his sister-in-law had taken the child, they ared him to be excommunicate. The control of the elders till characterized by austerity and severity toward the y and ungodly alike. What hope has a Sgiathanach once 771 as been eternally denied salvation? Perhaps, someday 794 ill again receive a visitation from the Holy Spirit experience a saving change. Although no longer entitled he benefits of the church, he continues to attend, as an rent. One may ask, what was the reaction of the people his punishment? A few Church of Scotland people, feel the elders might have tempered their decision. As one
, "They thought only of Moses on Mount Sinai and forgot s on Calvary." Most of the people, however, including in the Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church, either oved the action taken or, at least, would not question judgment of the elders.

182 group.[6] He has maintained cultural integration and continuity.
771 At the same time his conservative religion has not gone quite as far as the Amish Order.[7] The Sgiathanach has rejected only those patterns which would disturb the equilibrium of life in [161] the neighborhood. The penalty for his failure to completely adjust is depopulation; others, like the people of Yap and the Aleuts, are paying a similar penalty.[8]

Further Evidence for Cultural Continuity

121 Various approaches to the problem of cultural continuity can be attempted in addition to the historical approach which has formed the point of departure for my study. The most obvious would be a comparative study of two basically similar people, the Welsh and the Irish. In the chapter entitled "The Setting" and throughout this study I have called attention to the similarities between the Skyeman, the Welshman,[9] and the Irishman.[10] In a host of cultural features the three are strikingly identical. Some of these common patterns may be remembered, for instance, the alien nature of nucleated villages, the strong patrilineal emphasis, the importance of the old men, and a pastoral

---

[6] Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 282, 284; and Young, Sociology, p. 230.

[7] Kollmorgen, op. cit., p. 1.

[8] Keesing, The South Seas in the Modern World, pp. 52-53; Furnas, The Anatomy of Paradise, p. 382; and Berreman, "An Aleutian Village," American Anthropologist, LVII, No. 1, pp.49-59.

[9] Rees, Life in a Welsh Countryside.

[10] Arensberg, The Irish Countryman; and Arensberg and Kimball, Family and Community in Ireland.

888 771 562 [184] [773] [177] [175] 773 776

of the Old Testament made itself felt, as in Lewis-and-Harris in the nineteenth century, this narrower patriarchal example hardly affected thought.[1] Rooted in a wider form of family than a patriarchate, and reverencing a Holy Family and all fellowship, Gaelic society honoured age and parenthood for their inheritance, and childhood and youth for their promise.

Such ideals of human relationship led to the veneration of the Saints of the Gospels and of later history, and also of those of legend, especially Bride. Dedications to Bride or 'Bridget' are widespread from Wales to the Lews; yet her memory has been all but lost in Britain, except in the Isles. Carmichael wrote that "Bride and her services" are dear to the hearts of the people. She is called "Bride of the white feet . . . of calmness . . . of the kine; woman-comrade . . . and woman-helper . . ." "I am in the keeping of my Saint Mary: My companion beloved is Bride" (Carmina, Nos. 70-71; 263-264). As joy, steadfastness and attainment are generally linked to one notable stage in the life of each 'holy companion', the example, aid and fellowship of each saint in turn was especially sought, at a corresponding stage or crisis of one's own life.

776 171 174

The Gael's veneration for saintly men and women was shared by Catholic peasantry throughout Christendom; but its special quality seems to have been closeness of

[614] [621]

[1] Clanship has repeatedly been said to be 'patriarchal', as an ideal and a system. A different conclusion, that community is the root of clanship (even in its political forms), may come as a surprise. The English or Lowland reader has had access only to the writings of strangers such as Burt. Not knowing Gaelic, these derived their information from Highland speakers of English who, deliberately or unconsciously, were biased by ranking as chief or gentry, and not unnaturally explained their position as patriarchal. Thus strangers ignored the co-parental life of farm-groups and townships, economically humble but spiritually rich, as the root of a clan-community.

181 864 [771] [869] [773]

gentle frankness, as there is for reticence.[1] But since Augustine, orthodox religion, Catholic and Protestant, has overstressed and misunderstood the folk-lore of 'the Fall'—originally, it seems, a legend of fertility and fulfilment! In part as a result of the teaching of the doctrine of the 'Fall', there has arisen an attitude to parenthood which falls short of rational understanding and reverence for human life.[2] If fact be the best guard against superstitious fancy, and if sensibility and tact can soften the first shock of adolescence, then the Gael knew wisdom.

121 121 771 181

Returning to the main theme, it is clear that primitive religion and folk-lore alike show misunderstandings of cause and effect, and of the action of 'mind' on 'body' and 'matter'. What are facts to faith may be symbols to science; yet if these symbols prefigure truth, they may outlast the present stage of scientific recognition. Gaelic belief and practice show a recognition of communal as well as individual spirituality; of the depth of consciousness below its upper surface, and its upwelling power; and of the visible world without, in all its beauty, as a gate

[533]

[1] Needless to say, Gaelic verse has its moments of coarse freedom like that of any tongue. Of the lively lilts (puirt-a-beul) sung when there is no piper or fiddler to play for dancing, most of the words are delightful, but a few are not. A rather 'drinky' dissolute fellow—a small contractor on one of the Isles whose apprenticeship in the cities had not improved his character—once quoted a coarse jingle to me, only to see little amusement at his song and some contempt for its singer. He excused himself by saying, "It's rough . . . it's rough—but it's not dirty"! His excuse sums up the cruder expressions of animal spirits found in Gaelic jingles. One may adapt it as "Sometimes coarse, but rarely or never vicious".

[2] A. Geddes, "The Origin of Sin in Genesis and a Missing Legend", Hibbert J. vol. 44, Nos. 1 and 3, 1945-46. Cf. The Legends of Creation: an Anthropo-Geographical Interpretation of Genesis, i-iii (with map); Man, vol. 45 (104), 1945.

The Churches have given attention to the second chapter of Genesis, at the expense of the first. Gaelic spiritual tradition seems to have been singularly unwarped by such confused mythology, and to have held firmly to the first chapter, in its noble simplicity.

775

775 ESCHATOLOGY--conception of the survival of the soul; career of the soul after death (e.g., mode of departure from the body, temporary sojourn near place of death, indefinite sojourn as a disembodied soul or ghost, journey to a realm of the dead); notions about ghosts, specters, apparitions, and phantoms (e.g., shape, substance, propensities); behavior of departed souls or ghosts (e.g., haunting of houses and cemeteries, visitations); spiritualistic beliefs; conception of a realm of the dead (e.g., place, mode of life, rewards and punishment); duration of afterlife; belief in immortality; ideas of transmigration and reincarnation; conception of the survival of the body (e.g., resurrection); etc. See also:

Belief in witches, vampires, and werewolves. . 784
Cult of the dead 769
Communication with spirits 787
Notion of death and rebirth in initiation ceremonies 881 eternity. If he was one of the "elect," he will enjoy eternal 763 life. If he was not one of these venerable old men and women, 554 775

he can expect to suffer eternal damnation. Although baptism 851 is a sacrament and removes original sin, it is only the initial 783
step in the direction of salvation, which election alone confirms. Neither the minister nor any member of the bereaved 764 family offers a prayer. "What more can you do than bury him," 793
one woman asked. An old man said, "They are just as well 782 remembered without praying for them." In a community which is dominated by the old people, and in the crofting neighborhoods where so many of the crofters are very old, death can be expected to disturb the equilibrium of social interaction. In Glendale during November and December of 1953 funeral processions made their way through the glen no less than nine times. The function of the minister is to restore the dis- 793
turbed patterns, both in the family and in the neighborhood 182
(or village). All work stops in the township for three days from the time of death. Some of the cosmopolitans of the 369 village, seeking to justify their deviating behavior, assert 824
that the lazy crofter looks forward to a funeral because it means three days of idleness. In the village, of course, it 369 is no longer possible to bring daily life to a standstill because the villagers serve a wide area. The "people" of the deceased do stop work and close their shops. On the day of the funeral all blinds are drawn until after the procession has passed.

As he would if there were illness in the family, the 793 minister calls on the bereaved family and leads them in family 764

the Outer Isles, an area of recent depopulation, there are 888 enough youth to resist the dictates of their elders.[25] If 561 they cannot have a dance in a hall, they hold their dance 676 on a plank bridge. In Kilmuir the crofters are looking forward to "Effectual Calling." To defy the elders, or allow their children to run counter to the wishes of the elders, would mean a loss of all hope for salvation.

For the majority of crofters, any form of amusement 785 is objectionable, but there are slight differences among 795
the affiliates of the several sects. The Church of Scotland is the most lenient. For adherents, concerts, film shows and similar organized forms of entertainment may be admissible, especially if they are held outside the neighborhood. There 546 is a "picture bus" from Kilmuir to Portree on Wednesday and 366 Saturday night. Sports activities are often considered 526 as wholesome outlets for the youth. Some of the ministers, feel the lack of social contact with their people and believe they might do some good by taking part in life outside the pulpit. The Church of Scotland minister in Kilmuir occasionally attends the Crofters' Club, the only secular activity admitted in the neighborhood. Significantly, Free Church opinion, although the voice of a minority, has prohibited the playing of pipes and recitals of the Gaelic Choir at the annual agricultural show. The Church of Scotland minister in Sleat has taken a hand in the village hall. Unorganized dances are condemned. This is not because dancing 535

[25] Darling and Morley, op. cit., pp. 21-24.

776

776 SPIRITS AND GODS--conception of supernatural beings of a higher order than disembodied souls; indications of their genetic relationship to ghosts; prevalent types of supernatural beings (e.g., guardian and familiar spirits, tutelary divinities, tribal gods, nature spirits and gods, angels, animal and totemic divinities, fairies and sprites, demons, mythical monsters, deified heroes and saints, divine tricksters, occupational or functional deities, creator gods, rulers of the spirit world, high god or supreme being); attributes of individual deities and of categories of divine beings (e.g., name, sex, form, character, powers, functions, symbols); hierarchical arrangement (e.g., polytheistic pantheon, dualism, henotheism, monotheism); etc. See also:

Totemic beliefs associated with kin groups . . . 61 Hero worship 769
Religious practices 78

88 (in Gaelic) by a housewife in a Catholic isle, as our friend-82 ship matured. It had been said nightly at her fire by her 61 father-in-law until his death (not long before), which had 59 come after that of his wife. " I smoo'r the fire tonight,
As Mary's Son smoo'red. Be it well with house and fire;
Be it well with all our household. Who are on this floor?
Peter and Paul. Who are on watch tonight? Light-white Mary and her Son." Thus God's voice taught, And the Angel spoke: 'The Angel at my house door, Until the clear day come tomorrow. Amen." As this variant shows, memory still lives in the Isles.[1]

In these runes, the key to the words " as Mary's Son 988 and as Mary did, in their day " is the example of filial duty, 533 of wifely and motherly care. In spite of lapses to 'Mario-572 latry' during periods of decadence in the Roman Church, 999 the virtual banishment of Christ's mother from Protestantism has led to a loss deeper than Presbyterian Scotland has yet realized. Her name was a daily reminder, both of a woman's part in the spiritual life of the home, and of a son's self-discipline and affection: in a word, of mutual love.

For wool, the sheep were blessed, as in the " Clipping 988 Blessing ". These were blessings of the loom and of 232 carding and weaving; and after neighbourly fulling or 284 'walking' of the finished web, came its consecration.
461 As the work was solitary and communal in turn, so the 127 prayer. Carmichael's own fine prose translations should be 538 studied (Carmina, vol. i, Nos. 108-113; cf. vol. iv, pp.
88-99). Yet, those being available, we quote rhythmic

[1] Cf. Rev. Allan Macdonald, Comh-chruinneachadh, p. 107; Carmina (Nos. 84-87, 324-326); and N. Kennedy-Fraser, Songs of the Hebrides, vol. ii, p. 31. Sacred lore is not to be picked up lightly by a stranger. It was only upon the second of my prolonged stays under her hospitable roof that this good woman would admit and impart her knowledge, treasured in the secret places of her heart.

175 in whose 'image' mankind was made. As for the number
279 ten, it was simply restored by subdividing the Tenth
• 776 288 Commandment into two parts! Thus the letter of the Mosaic Law, be it frankly admitted, is modified! There are also extensions of certain Commandments. Yet, recalling Jesus's insistence upon the unspoken thought which prompts man's conduct, one may feel that the blunt Seventh Commandment, " Thou shalt not commit adultery ", is strengthened by the form of its paraphrase: " Avoid all thought, or wish, or deed immoral (mi-bheusach, immodest or vicious) ". The Sixth becomes, " Commit no murder nor sin of wrath ". And the paraphrase of the Fourth, rendered as " Keep the Lord's Day and each festival ", completes the Commandment as it was obeyed by Jesus and His friends at the Passover, and by Celts and Romans at Easter. The memories of the people were impregnated with abiding truths from the Old Testament, and still more with the teaching and spirit of the Gospels.

175 All this was incorporated in their lives. As each 271 symbol of nature was truer to Gaelic worshippers because it was not borrowed but experienced, so their interpretation of the story of the Son of Man was the truer because they looked for Him among themselves. Spiritual fears are imaged from bodily perils they knew in the 'Rough-bounds' and at sea; and spiritual ignorance is seen as a peat bog's 'black morass', not as a waterless desert beyond Jordan or the Dead Sea. Comfort is rarely suggested by the biblical 'shade from heat', but rather by the 'sun's 196 mild healing rays'. When Christmastide, Old Style, brought lengthening days, God mantled the Bens with snow, • 776 the glow upon their summits in earlier dawns told the Islesmen that the Light of the World was born again. In their thought Jesus shared their communal life with His 888 of the Old Testament made itself felt, as in Lewis-and-771 Harris in the nineteenth century, this narrower patriarchal 562 example hardly affected thought.[1] Rooted in a wider form

184 of family than a patriarchate, and reverencing a Holy Family
173 and all fellowship, Gaelic society honoured age and parent-177 hood for their inheritance, and childhood and youth for their promise.

Such ideals of human relationship led to the veneration 195 of the Saints who shared in the life of Christ, and also of those of legend, especially Bride. Dedications to Bride 773 or 'Bridget' are widespread from Wales to the Lews;
• 776 yet her memory has been all but lost in Britain, except in the Isles. Carmichael wrote that 'Bride and her services" are dear to the hearts of the people. She is called " Bride of the white feet . . . of calmness . . . of the kine; . . . of the women; . . . of the . . . ." " I am in the keeping of my Saint Mary: My companion beloved is Bride " (Carmina, Nos. 70-71; 263-264). As joy, steadfastness and attainment are generally linked to one notable stage in the life of each 'holy companion', the example, aid and fellowship of each saint in turn was especially sought, at a corresponding stage or crisis of one's own life.

776 The Gael's veneration for saintly men and women was 171 shared by Catholic peasantry throughout Christendom;
174 but its special quality seems to have been closeness of

[1] Clanship has repeatedly been said to be 'patriarchal'; as an ideal and a system. A different conclusion, that community is the root of clanship (even in its political forms), may come as a surprise. The English or Lowland reader has had access only to the writings of strangers such as Burt. Not knowing Gaelic, these derived their information from Highland speakers of English who, deliberately or unconsciously, were biased by ranking as chief or tacksman, and not naturally explained their position as patriarchal. Thus strangers ignored the co-parental life of farm-groups and townships, economically humble but spiritually rich, as the root of a clan-community.

• 776 fellowship. " The Irish Church ", a Roman is said to 171 have exclaimed to a Gaelic Catholic in scorn, " has won no martyr's crown! " " Ireland was named the Isle of 174 Saints not by persecuting but by cherishing God's elect ", was the reply. The Celtic Church linked the lands across St. Patrick's Channel; and what was true of Patrick's missionary field seems to have been as true of Celtic Britain, the land of his birth. Patrick on the Roman Wall of Clyde has been claimed as the birthplace of one who was certainly a Cymric Celt by birth and baptism, a Gaul by training, and an Irishman by mission.[1]

This closeness of fellowship ranged from personal to 771 divine relationships in waking or rest, with an intimacy of 982 expression all its own. A prayer for rest begins, " I shall 181 lie down with God, and he down with me. " A simple and universal gesture of love, in which parent, child or lover slips an arm under the loved one's head, is carried into prayer at rest, " the arm of the Father ", or 779 of Jesus or Mary, " under my head ". This image must 764 be the inspiration of one of the loveliest of Christian tombs, 532 preserved by clan loyalty, respect for the dead, distance and later forgetfulness on the priory isle of Inchmahome, where the Highlands meet the Lowlands at the Lake of Menteith. As on a number of medieval monuments, knight and lady are sculptured side by side. But here
the two lie each with " an arm under the other's head ", the free arm of the knight reaching over to clasp hands

[1] While in Scotland the name Bride is now rare as a Christian name, that of Patrick is still found among Grants, Campbells, Macdonalds and others. It is even commoner than English speakers might suppose, owing to the practice—almost the necessity—of giving an English form to a Gaelic name when it is turned to English speech. Patrick is Anglicized by ranking as Annesa for Aonghas (Angus) or Peter for Padhraig (Patrick). Many a Gael in the Lowlands felt obliged to relinquish his baptismal (and ancestral) names, with their link to Celtic Christian tradition.

121 theology and scholarship of a capital city, even of a city • 776 so small as Jerusalem! It is sometimes forgotten that the Old Testament, upon which so much of theology is built, contains folk-lore and magic. Not until this is fully understood in the sense in which early Oriental 'folk' believed it, can it be interpreted, whether as imaginative symbolism or common sense.[1] Much in the orthodox belief of medieval or post-Reformation times was mistaken;
yet it formed part of the religion, not the 'superstition' of the stage and period. Theology and philosophy are in constant transformation. Sheltered scholars, priests and rulers of cities may be ill-fitted to interpret the inspiration of a religion which grew from life in field, pasture and at sea, whether in its native land of Galilee and the East or among the Gael. One must live with a people and be one of them, at least for a time, to interpret their inner life.
Lastly, no generalisation is true for all members of a community: individuals differ. The same prayer, the same rite, may be used in so different a way by each of two neighbours that its use by one is religious but by the other superstitious.

We have seen that the essence of the lore from which • 776 we have quoted is not magical, but religious, in use as in inspiration. Strangers who had lost the sense of the beauty in the skies mistook a Gael's adoration of God at sunrise for prayer to the sun; when a man unbonneted or a woman knelt in the open, face turned to the rising moon lightening
the dark, they confused prayer with worship of the moon itself. Now, in paganism, a belief in nature-spirits is strong; but propitiation is made not to objects such as the sun or moon, but to spirits believed to influence or

[1] W. Robertson Smith, The Religion of the Semites (3rd ed., ed. S. A. Cooke, 1927). J. G. Frazer, Folk-lore in the Old Testament (3 vols.), 1919.

114 dwell in them—to a sun or moon spirit. If the people once • 776 believed in a 'moon-spirit', nothing is left to show it.
Either the moon is addressed as if she could hear her praise, or—more commonly—" The King of the Elements " or " of life " is thanked for sending her light.
The Archangel Michael is associated with the sun's rays;
but symbolically in relation to heart and mind, rather than as literal belief. In response to sunrise and sunset was real; and it is not lost among the people, as a watcher may see.[1]

It remains true that pre-Christian rites were re-enacted, 776 sometimes in fear and desperation when things had gone 771 wrong, and sometimes in mere play. A Lewisman in 988 Carmichael's hearing spoke of " going between the two great fires of Beul " (or Baal), his phrase expressing no more than a faded memory. But in Reay, in hard times bordering on famine, a fishing skipper was seen by his small son, supposed to be asleep, to assemble his crew and, after putting out the fire on the hearth, kindle the neid fire by rubbing two pieces of wood vigorously together.
Each man then carried a kindling back to his own home.[2] 121 Was this a religious ritual of human energy, heat and light, symbolic of forces held to be under Divine control but to be used as they used wind and tide by strenuous effort at the oars? Or was it magic, pure and simple? When men are shaken by failures and the fear of famine, prayer in word and ritual may restore hope for better things—for safety in storm and for fish in abundance as in a miraculous draught—and confidence in their powers for their work.
But the same can be true of magic. And neither prayer nor

[1] For contemporary record, descriptions of sunsets have appeared in the Stornoway Gazette from the pen of a crofter in retirement, N. Morrison.

[2] Carmina, vol. ii, Notes, Neid Fire.

171 though the suspected person was not thereby accused of 759 ill, he would have to make some effort to put it right.
'Cure' might be sought either by counter-malediction
on the supposed ill-wisher, known or unknown, or else
by prayer that the evil should be spread so widely as to be harmless, as "on all the wild birds of Heaven . . . that it would do them no harm"—a charming touch! (Carmina, 782 vol. iii). Prayer was the normal and the best protection, free of any malediction, and was included in general intercession for loved ones. But fears remain—not only in 'distant' isles—both in peace and in the extreme stress
of war.

114 A psychotherapist of 1917–18, A. J. Brock, wrote that 155 the "War was not in essence a new thing, the ordinary life of every day being itself a sort of battle"; Brock brought the hard-learned psychotherapy of war to bear upon a fresh
understanding of the countryman struggling against an environment with which he has got out of tune. Failing in spite of strained effort to get the food and warmth he needs for himself and his 'wife and weans', the peasant may lose happiness in home and village, and faith in the future.
"How did primitive people express all this?" asked Brock, noting that the risks and casualties of bad times in the past brought fears and floating pictures comparable to those of
'shell-shocked' patients.

In lands the unity of family life and labour is symbolised in homelier folk-lore by the protective spirit • 776 of each homestead. As long as the work is carried on heartily and thriftily the Brownie is pleased. But the people may become negligent, or begin to labour from mercenary motives. The true spirit of the work is then upset and (in all folk-lore) the Brownies begin to give [113] [1] A. J. Brock, Health and Conduct, 1923, pp. 135–170.

171 trouble. "Everything seems to go wrong"; and the • 776 peasant falls asleep at night in fear of ills to come. First in his dreams and next in his day-dreams, these take shape 171 as an offended, hostile 'spirit'. The spirit of the place 776 —of the place-work—has become angry. So also, if the 781 peasant's wife pursues her household work 'in the right spirit', then in her dreams and reveries she is helped by kindly presences; but if not, things go wrong, objects mislaid have been taken by 'someone' and a tormenting house-imp plays havoc with her home. These figures of day-dreams were involuntary and 'shady', without the clarity either of earthly things or of heavenly visions.
Yet they personified moods of real significance.

776 The Urusag of the Gael helped about the farm and household—like the Tonte of Sweden and the Lubberfiend of Merrie England in Milton's L'Allegro. Such task may have its own symbol. Of one of these, the cattle-tending Glaintic of the Highlands and Isles, Brock quotes from Mrs. E. Carmichael Watson: "Harmless and lovable as a rule,—especially in the older stories—in a few of the later stories she is represented as irritable. . . .
776 The more recent stories about the Glaistic are rather unpleasant. She no longer plays with the children or 176 sings rhymes—she has degenerated into a kind of female ruffian. Probably it would be nearer the truth to say that the change has been in the Highlands rather than in the Glaistic." Brock comments, "This last remark is significant. The increasing irritability of tutelary nature-deities means that the spirit of the old economic life—the equilibrium between Highlanders and Highlands—is being upset"; and so too is that between Highlander and Highlander! In Lewis Ni Chlach Urlar (She (or It) of the Hearth Stone), who personified domestic strife, makes trouble; and neighbours come to suffer too!

795 The Evangelicals, so insistent in condemning the beliefs and worship of ancient Christianity as 'vice' and 'super-771 stition', comparatively rarely condemned words and rites designed to bring punishment upon a person believed to have wronged one—that is upon a person one hated! Of such was the practice, widespread in the Old World, of moulding a clay figure representing the person to be harmed, and either sticking pins into it, exposing it to fire, or leaving it in a stream, with a prayer that as the figure wasted away so would the object of hatred. An educated Lewisman I knew, Dr. Norman Morrison, stated that an aunt of his own performed this rite. No doubt she persuaded herself that if the desired injury took place, natural or Divine law was at work and she herself was therefore (178) innocent or actually just. What is striking is that in the Christian age, following after the healing beauty and Christian calm of runes and rites had been banished and the healthy laughter of gay custom silenced, this pre-Christian rite of ill-will had lived on. One hardly knows whom to pity the more: the hated, for the fear they would feel if they knew the rite was at work, or the hater. The extreme Evangelicals made so little appeal to reason based on fact, that the irrational element in superstition was not firmly (824) replaced by a sane, scientific look. Indeed 'science' was condemned as 'unbelief'. The constant evocation of wrath, anger and "the punishment of just and unjust"
played havoc with the emotions.

Those brought up on the precepts of Presbyterianism
—especially in its milder forms—and familiar from infancy with a selection of Old Testament readings, can hardly appreciate the shock to a sensitive heart of first hearing • (776) the whole of the Old Testament read Book by Book. The shock is due not only to the acts of vengeance or massacre,

795 but still more to their repeated justification in the name 771 of the Lord 'God'. 'God' the universal (Elohim) came • (776) to be identified with the tribal god Jahveh or Yahweh, altered, late in Jewish history, to "the Lord God"; the 000 term still used in Bibles. The war cry of the Jewish tribes, as they swept in from the desert or tightened their hold upon citizens and cultivators, was that of many wild wanderers, before and since, who have cried upon their God of Battles, upon Jahveh, or Allah. Magnificent in his affirmations of righteousness, the Old Testament can be terrible in its denials of pity.

795 The Bible (literally Biblia, the Books) reflects the search 771 of a people through centuries towards the idea of God;
538 but the tragedy of the Bible, or rather of its historic misuse, came with the acceptance of all 'Scripture' as equal in inspiration and truth. The early and the late were accepted together; the mixed or false with the true. The custom of seeking Divine guidance by simply opening a page of 'the blessed Book'—that is, any text on any page of any one of its books—was an example of such acceptance; and it (175) was only possible for the literate. In Lewis, Macfarlane records the custom, practised by 'The Men', late in the nineteenth century.

Reading came late to the Islanders, but its effects were 795 as direct as among the Puritans or Covenanters at an earlier 118 period. The people, whose hearts had long since been 771 wrung with pity at the Crucifixion and who were steeped 538 in reverence for the Gospels, became 'changed' indeed.
(212) Once their minds had been crushed by the Old Testament's massive weight, the 'change' was reinforced by the • (776) Apocalypse. Thus, "followed by fevered visions of (795) in the New Testament's finale, the Apocalypse. The 'change' was brought by Evangelicals who had themselves

778 SACRED OBJECTS AND PLACES:—conception of sanctity (e.g., possession by or indwelling of frequenting spirit, infusion with impersonal supernatural power); idols and fetishes; extraordinary objects (e.g., bezoar stones, albino animals, mandrake roots); sacred places (e.g., shrines, altars); places of asylum and sanctuary; sodjourn of impersonal supernatural power (e.g., mana, soul-stuff); animatism; beliefs and practices of consecration and desecration, etc.

See also:
Charms and amulets 768
Graveyards 555
Asylum 555
Primitive animism 761
Relics 765
Conception of the sacred and the profane . . . 775
Idol's amulets 777
Notions of uncleanness 785
Taboos 786
Phallic cults 789
Conception of magic power 790
Holy man 795

175 As recorded by Carswell (and Martin), this prayer,
226 after calling upon the Christian, tells that the Three-in-One, 780 ever living, guided Clan Israel through the Red Sea, 773 brought Jonah to land from the belly of the great ocean beast, and led Paul and his companions from the torment
of the sea; after these three stanzas it closes with a general supplication. As heard by Carmichael three centuries after Carswell, the first three stanzas are identical, but they are [539] followed by the culmination. Recalling the hour "when the storm poured on the Sea of Galilee . . .", the poem goes on, "Be Thou, King of the elements, seated at our helm, And lead us in peace to our voyage's end. . . ."
It is significant that the Reformation Liturgy includes the story of Clan Israel's flight from their enemy whose drowning forms the climax of the tale, and the absurd
miracle of the whale—a late interpolation in the convincing original Hebrew poem on Jonah's voyage,—but that it omits the Christian climax, of the storm allayed by Christ, the Helmsman of peace.

Another fishers' rune (No. 120) concludes, "To whom [539] shall we make our offerings of the wind? To whom become tranquil strait and ocean? To Jesus Christ, Chief of each saint, Son of Mary, Root of Victory." These blessings, though they refer to the Old Testament, dwell lovingly on the New.
Their thought is of the Sacrament friends, Peter, Andrew and John, of the Baptist and of Christ's mother, of Saint Martin and later apostles to the Gael, and the Archangels, and of Christ, Rock of rocks (Carraig Ail), and the Trinity.
226 These bring strength in danger, peace after strife with the
• 778 elements, remembrance of the poor, and fellowship to the crews. Peace and strength pervade the "Dawn Prayer of the [1] R. C. Moulton, Modern Reader's Bible (minor, 1935, pp. 1423–1424; cf. Note to Matt. xii. 40, p. 1696).

779 THEOLOGICAL SYSTEMS:—elaborated systems of religious beliefs (e.g., intermetism, pantheism); state religions; revealed religions (e.g., Buddhism, Christianity, Mohammedanism); sacred books; content of complex systems of dogma and theology; association of theological systems with ethics and philosophy; etc.

See also:
Taoists in gauge 77
Lunar month 677
Ancient worship 723
Sacrament as the central element of religion . 771
Sun 780
Theologian 813

197 One of the 742 richest sources of Gaelic vocabulary now available is
• 779 the Gaelic Bible, but many villagers, especially the younger ones, complain that they are unable to understand
many of the Gaelic words used by the minister in his sermon.

197 Although provision for teaching Gaelic in the schools
871 was made in the Education Act of 1918, only within the last ten years have schools incorporated classes in which Gaelic is taught at both primary and secondary levels.
Gaelic is taught as a foreign language like French or Latin rather than used as a medium of instruction, which would require a much larger vocabulary than most teachers possess.
The present schoolmaster in Shawbost differs from past [815] [551] schoolmasters in that he addresses the children by their Gaelic names, and devises projects intended to encourage
a sense of pride in "Celtic culture."

913 The Department of Celtic Studies at the University of 197 Glasgow, which includes in its staff a Lewis poet and 185 several Scottish Nationalists, is described as "progressive."

According to an islander who is a student in the Department
"They believe that if Gaelic is to survive as a language, it must be written as it is spoken. At school we were taught to write 'proper' Gaelic, Gaelic that's considered

[1] Persons who come from Gaelic-speaking areas are addressed and referred to by Gaelicized names, such as "Murchadh" rather than "Murdo," and usually do not take the form of patronymics, which may or may not include mutcanas (for example, Iain Dhomhnuill Bhain, i.e., John the son of Fair Donald).

the impact of all disappointment. The church offers meaning and order to those encountering problems posed by village life. Of great importance is the sense of certainty, power and righteousness which membership in the church provides in contrast with feelings of inferiority vis-à-vis the "superior" mainland. This is the Land of the Scriptures; even the Free Church on the mainland is considered decadent. "Religion isn't kept on the mainland. The cities are full of sin. Lewis is given mostly to religion. It should be called the Holy Isle."

2. The Township as Religious Network: The religious sphere has two distinguishable social networks, one of which coincides in personnel with the village network. Most households within the village feel obligated to "make an appearance" during at least one of the two Sunday services. Most children are sent to Sunday school, and all are baptised. In baptism, fathers stand with the children, promise to raise them in the church, and to set a good example for them. Baptism must precede Communion, the ceremony by which a person becomes a full member of the church. Baptism signifies membership in the community, the village-qua-congregation. "Somehow you're not really legal until you've been baptised." Some feel that the child's soul may be endangered if he should die without baptism, although this idea is discouraged by the church. According to the Calvinistic ideas of predestination, the fate of one's soul has already been decided.

The pressure to have children baptised enables the village-as-congregation to exert social control over deviant individuals. If a child is conceived out of wedlock, the parents of the child (if they have gotten married) or the unwed mother alone must stand in front of the congregation and be lectured by the minister before the child may be baptised. A woman who has married a man known not to be the father of her child must also stand by herself. A conversions that take place in other villages. "Five persons converted recently in Lochs. Two used to drink a lot, they're saying." Sometimes mass conversions occur, called "revivals," during which people shout, chant, speak in tongues, and sometimes collapse.

Although strict observance of religious practices must be maintained by the converted while they are on the island, it is possible for them to relax this observance when they visit mainland cities. The converted see nothing wrong with attending plays or movies in Glasgow, as long as no one observes them. A non-believer once commented wrly, "They believe in the 11th commandment: thou shallt not be seen." Women who have spent many years in domestic service on the mainland, where they generally live very different sorts of lives from those of island people, often return to the island to retire. They then take up the color of their surroundings. The long black dress then becomes the appropriate garb for them on Sundays. As one person observed, "Women deposit their curam in the Left Luggage Department at Stornoway, and pick it up fifty years later."

The beliefs of the Free Church include explanations for all events. "Everything of importance that happened in history is recorded in the Bible." Predestination lies behind all unexpected events; a sense of fatalism dulls

trappings of nineteenth-century civilisation, however, they grew to depend on items brought by sea. Imported food, clothing, wood, metal domestic utensils and the like were slowly assimilated as indispensable everyday articles. But there was relatively little export to port in return; then as now, any transport operator struggled with the fact that traffic was one-way and the freight charges must pay for the double voyage. Though the fishing industry and later the Harris Tweed industry were, around the turn of the century, to do much to determine and stabilise shipping developments, both passenger and cargo services were always facing loss rather than profit.

On the social side of the picture, the regular call of ships to the island, to Stornoway in particular, was a welcome, quickening sign that the island was significant in some way to the outside world. The ships brought visitors who made the island, and the Hebrides in general, better known to other prospective travellers. The exposure of the island and its folk to the gaze of the mainland led to a wider knowledge and understanding which without doubt brought improvements in social welfare and a basis for economic development. When many islanders found it necessary to go to Glasgow and the south for work, the ships of the Minch served as a firm link with home, to which they returned when ever they could. This feeling for home is still manifest today in the Lewismen in Canada who charter an aircraft to Prestwick each year so that they can holiday on the island. Since 1900 or so, passenger traffic has been two-way: emigrants, migrants, visitors and business travellers. When the fishing industry was in its heyday, the ships carried hundreds of fisherfolk across the Minch to ports as far south as Great Yarmouth to 'follow the herring' round the shores of Britain and back to the Minch again. Traffic today is still considerable, with the air-link with the island being used to its capacity.

In a community where Sabbath observance is an integral strand of religious belief, ministers have on occasions tried to preserve the Mosaic sanctity of the Sabbath Day by restricting the movement of ships in Stornoway harbour. In deference to Jewish feelings the Stornoway steamer has always docked for twenty-four hours over Sunday, to leave port for Kyle just after midnight.

This is only relaxed if emergency sailings are necessary. During the second world war attempts were made by Free Church ministers to stop the movement of ships in Stornoway harbour, but needless to say the war effort took precedence.

THE SHIPS

When Sir James Matheson bought Lewis in 1844, sea communications were still erratic: a mailboat or packet was running fortnightly weekly between Stornoway and Poolewe on Scotland's west coast. Sir James decided that a craft based on Stornoway would serve more efficiently both for general trade and for islanders' business. He built, and he provided a regular steamer service. As this craft, the Mary Jane, was to carry mails, Sir James thought the Post Office should promote the service, and he struggled with that department for some years, eventually being promised a subsidy of £1,300. Though the scheme was to cost far more and had now no other financial support, the service began in 1846, Sir James being country for the whole concern. He lost some £17,000. Another of his ships was the PS Ovaline, which operated mainly between Ullapool and Stornoway during the 1870s and '80s.

Quite apart from the Matheson ventures, things had been stirring in the south; the sea communications of the West Highlands and Islands were about to be commercially developed. One of the first ships on a regular run between Stornoway and the south was the Iben Nevis, a small wooden paddle vessel later to be wrecked south of Campbeltown in 1851 while homeward bound from Stornoway. G. & J. Burns was one of the main companies operating the early West Highland trade, managing to survive the vagaries of fortune until 1851, when its interests were passed to David Hutcheson, its chief clerk, on the condition that the Burns's nephew, David MacBrayne became one of the partners. This was the beginning of the company so well known today. Messrs David MacBrayne Ltd. The new company started off with a building programme and gave birth to a long line of ships, many of which names were to become household words in the Western Isles.

The PS Clansman was the first. Her route was the strenuous one of Glasgow, Oban, Skye and Stornoway. Alexander Smith's

Lewis, there were but two ministers in 1626, their parishes being Barvas (which included Uig) and Eye, which included Lochs; the population of the island at the time was about 5,000. When Presbyterianism was re-established in Scotland in 1640, the Lewis ministers found no trouble in conforming, as did their fellow parishioners. Sectarian feeling in the island during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries was not so much between Presbyterians and Episcopalians as between Romanists and Protestants.

In the year 1738, nine Episcopalian Lewismen signed a letter to the Bishop of the Isles, asking for an annual visit from a pastor, being unable to support a full-time minister. Almost a century later in 1839, the foundation stone of St Peter's in Stornoway was laid: this is the town's Episcopal Church. The other building on the island which belongs to the Episcopalians is the ancient church at Eoropie, dating back to the twelfth century. It is now the oldest still in use in the Hebrides; services are held there occasionally, though there is no local Episcopalian congregation. One of the most significant events which echoed the religious strife in the island was the Disruption which took place in Edinburgh in 1843. The result was a 'church spectrum' in Scotland which is still mirrored on a smaller scale in the island: the Church of Scotland, the Free Presbyterian Church, the United Free Church, and the Free Church. The Roman Catholic Church is also represented.

Lewis has one of the largest Free Church congregations in the country. This denomination is particularly known for its outspoken pronouncements from time to time on questions of the day. It is Calvinistic in doctrine and has a reputation for holding the 'Calvinistic outlook' in the most general and pejorative sense; though its strictness may sometimes be over-painted, it is much less liberal in its moral standpoint than is the Church of Scotland, if less austere in some respects than the Free Presbyterians. Its doctrinal position is that of unreluxed adherence to the Westminster Confession, its ministers and other office-bearers affirming their belief in the whole doctrine of the Bible. It is opposed to theological liberalism and accepts the inerrancy and infallibility of the Scriptures. Only the Psalter is used in public worship, and instrumental music is dispensed with; strong emphasis is laid on evangelical preaching. The Free Church claims 'the free exercise of all its spiritual functions, while it fully admits the State authority in purely temporal concerns'.

THE GAELIC LANGUAGE

Closely tied in with the background of the island folk is the Gaelic language. For many years this has been dying, yet it is still vigorous enough to make a significant contribution to the mental make-up of the people. It is a living language in that it is used for personal communication, though English is often and universally resorted to when the talk turns to technical subjects. As the Gaelic language stands today, by itself it is regarded by most Gaelic speakers to be a barrier to economic progress. The Gaelic-speaking child who also knows English, however, is found to be at no significant disadvantage over the monoglot; indeed, tests have shown, particularly in other multilingual countries, that the bilingual child tends to assimilate knowledge at a greater rate and to a greater degree than the monoglot. Research by the Scottish Council for Research in Education showed that while there were no statistically significant differences between the four areas into which they divided Scotland, the Highlands and Islands came out best in a study of the average level of intelligence:

	Mean	Standard deviation
The four Scottish cities	100·88	15·29
The industrial belt	99·19	16·18
The rural areas	100·92	14·52
The Highlands and Islands	101·79	13·13

The pamphlet comments: 'It is interesting that the mean of the most remote and isolated districts is the highest, and the standard of deviation the lowest.'

The Hebrides are now the only area in Scotland where the language, once Scotland-wide, survives as the living speech of a Gaelic-characterised community. On average 95 per cent of the inhabitants of all the island districts are Gaelic-speaking; even in the town of Stornoway, never regarded as wholly Gaelic-speak-

CH. I ENVIRONMENT AND LANDSCAPE

The historical aspect of these regional facts is extremely significant to the evolution of Scots social life, and to developments of Presbyterian worship led by Elders in ferm-town and Kirk; although suggested by comparisons throughout this book, they have still to be seriously followed out. As to the future, regrouping of our somewhat scattered agricultural population has been strongly urged in planning for post-war housing and community life. But sound planning must be based on survey, long overdue; though elsewhere, this key area appears to be the first of its kind for Scotland (Fig. 2). It is from these units of population and township that Scots rural society must be rebuilt, region by region.

One aspect of the contrast between the farming and the crofting communities demands attention: it lies in the types of migration—one is tempted to say, of semi-nomadism. Crofters, though they move to and from their croft and township—to the city, the sea, or the New World—return home to their native township when they can, and to no other. Many farm servants, on the other hand, though they usually spend their lives in the county or region of their birth, have been on the move from farm to farm, year after year. What is true of Lowland Scotland seems rather true of North-east England, but not of 'the English Plain'. Unmarried Scots farm servants were hired for the half-year, and frequently moved after each new hiring: the marriage rate was low. Families were annually uprooted—if indeed they could be said to strike root at all! The war-time 'Standstill' Order for Scotland began to check this migratory life; but its effects remain. Hence immigrants, once Scotland-wide, now arrive at the farm; children could not grow up with their schoolmates: they would look back to no 'Auld Lang Syne', of which the

CH. VII SPIRITUAL LIFE OF COMMUNITY

The care of cattle was accompanied by prayer. As an Erinkay housewife said to me, she would never leave her cow tethered without a murmured, "Saint Columba be herding you" (Buachaille a'Chalum-cille ort). The curing of animal sickness, as of human ailments, was accompanied by prayers. And prayer was used to avert the evil eye, symbol of suspicions born of unreasoning fear which, psychologists tell us, beset the modern but little less than the ancient! The thought or act of prayer which links a man to his fellow-men links him to the Maker of all men. "The man who is merciful to a soul will not be merciless to a brute" (Am fear a bhitheas trocaireach ri anam, cha bhith a mithrocairach ri bhrùid).

Throughout Christian times each task of the annual rhythm was marked, at its start and close, by a day of seasonal festival (Le Feill). These Christian festivals replaced earlier celebrations and continued some of their features, often in play. Yet concerted seasonal activities could be related to the supreme festival of the Christian Church, Easter, owing to its movable date. This is one reason for the great importance of other, fixed Festivals to rural community life. This point, not always appreciated by latterday rationalists, is made clear by Dr. J. L. Banks in describing British Calendar Customs, vol. i, Scotland (1937). Remembering that the Old Style Calendar dates were ten days later than the New Style (when officially adopted in Scotland in 1600), they may be compared with the annual rhythm of climate and labour (Fig. 9). Until 1600, the New Year began in spring on 25th March. After the Reformation and the abolition of Christmas or Noel, Nollaig, New Year's Day on 1st January took its place as the day which, in the Protestant Highlands and Lowlands, still keeps alive some of the old friendly visiting and at midsummer came joyous departure to the shielings. Michaelmas at the end of September was a festival of horsemanship, when the ponies, rested and well fed, could race madly along the machar. As long nights brought in the winter, Hallowe'en came on 31st October, and on the morrow the solemnity of All Hallows (Samhuin). On 11th November came St. Martin's Day, and in December Christmas once again.

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

When the Islesmen put out to sea, prayers were chanted to Father, Son and Holy Spirit and to the Disciples, "the Fishers of Men". While some of these might be individual (Carmina, Nos. 171-120), others were chanted by the skipper at the helm, as celebrant, the crew giving the responses (No. 121). As self-sustained community life weakened and customs were endangered, this prayer was encouraged by a few clergy, Catholic and Protestant. At the start of the season's fishing in Erinkay, Fr. Allan Macdonald went out in the boats and chanted a rune taught to him by elders, the men responding.[1] One of the 'Ocean Blessings' or prayers recorded by Carmichael (No. 119) is found in Dean Cruickshank's Liturgy in Gaelic, of 1965, and is quoted by Martin as "a form of prayer used by many of the islanders at sea after the sails are set".[1] Most of Carswell's Liturgy was translated from that of John Knox, but not this prayer, of which the earlier and later-recorded version are the same, except for one revealing difference.

[1] In so doing, 'Father Allan' may have been restoring a pious service of an older school of Gaelic priests trained upon the College of Lismore, which was Gaelic-speaking. Lismore was the birthplace of Carmichael, and in the home of his Protestant parents the young priests were hospitably received.

[1] Fàire nan Urnaighthe (ed. M'Lauchlan), 2nd, 4th, and Martin, 1703 (edition of 1934, pp. 180-184). A new text of Carswell is in preparation by the Scottish Gaelic Texts Society.

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

(in Gaelic) by a housewife in a Catholic isle, as our friendship matured. It had been said nightly at her fire by her father-in-law until his death (not long before), which had come after that of his wife. "I amo'e' the night, Ma Mary's Son smoo'ed. Be it well with house and fire; Be it well with all our household. Who are on this floor! Peter and Paul. Who are on watch tonight? Light-white Mary and her Son. Thus God's voice rose again. Angel appeared at my house door, Until the clear day come tomorrow. Amen." As this variant shows, memory still lives in the Isles.[1]

In these runes, the key to the words "as Mary's Son smoo'ed" is the example of filial duty, of wifely and motherly care. In spite of lapses to 'Marion' latry[1] during periods of decadence in the Roman Church, the virtual banishment of Christ's mother from Protestantism has led to a loss far more than Presbyterian Scotland is aware of. Her name was a daily reminder, both of a woman's part in the spiritual life of the home, and of a son's self-discipline and affection: in a word, of mutual love.

For wool, the sheep were blessed, as in the "Clipping Blessings" or prayers recorded by Carmichael (No. 119) as found in Dean Cruickshank's Liturgy in Gaelic, of 1965, and is quoted by Martin as "a form of prayer used by many of the islanders at sea after the sails are set".[1] Most of Carswell's Liturgy was translated from that of John Knox, but not this prayer, of which the earlier and later-recorded version are the same, except for one revealing difference.

[1] As the work was solitary and communal in turn, so the prayer, Carmichael's own first prose translations should be studied (Carmina, vol. i, Nos. 108-113; cf. vol. iv, pp. 88-99). Yet, those being available, we quote rhythmic

Roman Catholicism was far less complete than that ultimately brought about by Protestantism—Episcopalian or Calvinist.

At least twenty-five churches, chapels and tiny oratories are named by Martin in Lewis and his list is incomplete (1934, p. 106). Harris and its islets also had their complement of 'temples', in addition to the priory church of Rodel. We may perhaps assume that before the Reformation Lewis had a population of some 4000 persons, or 1000 families, and contained some thirty chapels or oratories in inhabited areas. If so, then one church or 'temple', on an average served thirty to thirty-five families, or six or seven farm-groups. Yet only the larger congregations at Eye, Stornoway, Ness or Uig and Rodel would normally be served by clergy; the people of smaller congregations would be without, for weeks and months or even years.

When the people were too distant from priests (and later ministers) to hear the Lessons, they handed down the Word orally. Their power of retaining memorable thought, even in prose, is quite remarkable; and verse strengthened memory. For example, the 'Ten Commandments' paraphrased in rhyme are recorded in Fr. Allan Macdonald's little collection, "as given by the God of graces to Moses in the wilderness" (Na Faintean, p. 62). Moses, had he understood Gaelic, would have protested at the omission of the Second Commandment, but no sculptor of Iona, Rodel or Eye would have felt a need for it, being unafraid that a Christian could bow down to a golden calf. Believing, with Solomon, that a craftsman's work is his prayer, the artist-monks held that an 'image' should represent, though never replace, God's creation, and may even quicken our concept of the Creator in whose 'image' mankind was made. As for the number ten, it was simply restored by subdividing the Tenth Commandment into two parts! Thus the letter of the Mosaic Law, be it frankly admitted, is modified! There are also extensions of certain Commandments. Yet, recalling Jesus's sentence upon the unspoken thought which prompts man's conduct, one may feel that the Short Seventh Commandment, "Thou shalt not commit adultery", is strengthened by the form of its paraphrase: "Avoid all thought, or wish, or deed immoral (mi-bheusach, immodest or vicious)". The Sixth becomes, "Commit no murder nor sin of wrath". And the paraphrase of the Fourth, rendered as "Keep the Lord's Day and each festival", completes the Commandment as it was obeyed by Jesus and His friends at the Passover, and by Celts and Romans at Easter. The memories of the people were impregnated with abiding truths from the Old Testament, and still more with the teaching and spirit of the Gospels.

All this was incorporated in their lives. As each symbol of nature was truer to Gaelic worshippers because it was not borrowed but experienced, so their interpretation of the story of the Fall of Man was the truer because they looked for Him among themselves. Spiritual fears are imaged from bodily perils they knew in the 'Roughbounds' and at sea; and spiritual ignorance is seen as a peat bog's black mistrust not as a waterless desert beyond Jordan or the Dead Sea. Comfort is rarely suggested by the biblical 'shade from heat', but rather by the 'sun's mild healing rays'. When Christmastide, Old Style, brought lengthening days and mantled the Bens with snow, the glow upon their summits in earlier dawns told the faithfulness that the Light of the World was born again. In their thought Jesus shared their communal life with His fellowship. "The Irish Church", a Roman is said to have exclaimed to a Gaelic Catholic in scorn, "has now no martyr's crown!" "Ireland was named the Isle of Saints not by persecuting but by cherishing God's elect", was the reply. The Celtic Church linked the lands across St. Patrick's Channel; and what was true of Patrick's missionary field seems to have been as true of Celtic Britain, the land of his birth. Kilpatrick on the Roman Wall of Clyde has been claimed as the birthplace of one who was certainly a Cymric Celt by birth and paraphrase, a Gaul by training, and an Irishman by mission.[1]

This closeness of fellowship emerged from personal to divine relationships in waking or rest, with an intimacy of expression all its own. A prayer for rest begins, "I shall lie down with God, and God lie down with me. . . . A simple and universal gesture of love, in which parent, child or lover slips an arm under the loved one's head, is carried into prayer at rest, "the arm of the Father", or of Jesus or of Mary, "under my head". This image must be the inspiration of one of the loveliest of Christian tombs, preserved by clan loyalty, respect for the dead, distance and later forgetfulness on the priory isle of Inchmahome, after the Highlands meet the Lowlands at the Lake of Menteith. As on a number of medieval monuments, knight and lady are sculptured side by side. But here the two lie each with "an arm under the other's head", the free arm of the knight reaching over to clasp hands with his spouse. The knight, the first Stewart Earl of Menteith, had died four years after his wife, in 1294. Medieval sculpture was then attaining its height, as this monument, in spite of the ravages of time, bears witness. The following year, 1295, saw the commencement of "the three hundred years war" with its repeated destruction of Scottish arts and traditions of peace. Under King Alexander III, "that Scotland led in love and law", peace within the kingdom of Scots allowed a union embracing Gaelic Christian traditions and Scoto-Norman arts. After his death this became all but impossible. So far as scholars can tell me, this almost unnoticed monument remains unique in Christendom, indeed in the world.[1] The arts of Scotland, hitherto in touch with European achievement, were shattered by invasions, and Gaelic tradition was only to be maintained by the very poor, whose debtors, for all time, we have become.

[1] While in Scotland the name Bride is now rare as a Christian name, that of Patrick is still found among Grants, Campbells, Macdonalds and others. It is even commoner than English speakers might suppose, owing to the practice—almost the compulsory—of giving an English form to a Gaelic name when it is turned to English speech—as Daniel for Donhnall (Donald), Aenas for Aonghas (Angus) or Peter for Padhraig (Patrick). Many a Gael in the Lowlands felt obliged to relinquish his baptismal (and ancestral) names, with their link to Celtic Christian tradition.

At the approach of death God's mercy and peace were sought. Latterly Roman Catholic prayers stressed the wish for Confession to a priest, followed by Supreme Unction for the attainment of 'Happy death', Bas sona.[2] In early times confession seems to have been made as willingly to the 'Soul-friend', followed by Benediction. When death had come, the mourners sang of sleep and home. In Lewis today funerals are conducted in silence to the graveside, where the last service is held; but

[1] A unique medieval tomb at Inchmahome: a cultural link. (Geddes, 1952.)

[2] It would be of deep interest to compare the attitudes to death found in 'Spiritual Songs' by Protestant Gaels like Buchanan or Grant, with songs on death which, though maybe of post-Reformation date, are of Roman Catholic origin (e.g. in Fr. Allan Macdonald's collection, poems on the Day of Judgment, and of Weak Age and on death; and in Carmichael's Carmina: pp. 31, 85, 148; 34, 19, 21; 23). Some have much in common, both by reason of the earlier traditions they shared and still more because of parallel trends of Reformation and Counter-Reformation. Cf. Carmina.

The advent of the Reformers to the Island may at first have been welcomed as revolutionary to the people than has generally been suggested by historians of either the new Church or the old. Ministering to one another, the people had not, like the city-dwellers of their time, enjoyed—or suffered—a multiplicity of offices, administered by priests whose ways of living might be a scandal. The Mass heard in Latin was incomprehensible to those of Celtic (or Teutonic) speech without the aid of translation into the vernacular—an idea universal among literate Roman Catholics. Most of those offices, such as auricular confession to a priest to obtain absolution, with masses for the dead, indulgences and the like, were performed for payments prohibitive to the poor. The Jaleofolk, for the most part, lived far both from the orthodox practice of the Latin Church and from the more flagrant abuses against which a minority of the old Church had protested in vain. Hence the transition to a purely Protestant liturgy would not be too painful. In prolonged isolation, the Gaelic spirit, perforce, had lived the life of the Lollard and Protestant doctrine of "the Priesthood of all believers".

After the Reformation the people were bewildered by the mutual condemnation of Presbyterian, Episcopalian and Jesuit, and torn to the quick when all three parties in turn denounced so much that they themselves held dear. The more the rival clergy confused and wounded their minds, the harder it was for younger generations to discern ancient Gaelic wisdom and discard superstition; and the easier to fall into credulous and secretive repetition of rhymes and strings of holy names. The scorn of the wealthy for simple rites and of the book-learned for the symbols of old speech would add to confusion rather than aid discrimination. As pious and understanding crofters agents for what have been called "rites of intensification."[49] They restored the equilibrium of interaction by creating new behavior patterns. This was probably particularly true during the famine, when the people's relatives and friends were dying and emigrating in large numbers, while the ceilidh an evening of spinning folk tales, singing, and dancing, was condemned, and the children of parents who would not conform to the dictates of one minister and the "Men" were refused baptism, prayer meetings and other church services were providing emotional outlets.[50]

Like the Welsh,[51] the Skye crofters found the Bible retold much of their own past history and their present difficulties. As the "Men" preached from Scripture and interpreted the meaning, often using allegorical interpretations, of the Word, the people became familiar with a story which was strikingly similar to their own. The present social and economic conditions were but a presage of the coming dissolution. It was all there in the Old Testament, in the books of Judges, Kings, Chronicles, Psalms, and Prophets. The ocean was all the more vivid because the transgressors in the Bible lived a life much like the crofters. Both the ancient peoples and the Skyemen had a pastoral economy, a patrilineal family structure, ruled by elders, and a heritage which had never admitted compact, non-rural population centres. These basic cultural values and patterns were given religious sanction.

[49] Elliot D. Chapple and Carleton S. Coon, Principles of Anthropology (New York: Henry Holt and Co., 1942), pp. 399-400.

[50] Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticanae, Vol. VII, p. 166; and Norman Macleod, Reminiscences (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 14-15.

[51] Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

Year by year throughout this period the following and the influence of the "Men" increased. As the ministers died, moved, especially as the old hereditary families of ministers closely related to the old gentry were replaced by ministers from the people,[52] the "Men" became influential in the Church of elders. Now they could not only exhort the people but also judge them, by determining who was worthy of communion and whose children might be baptized. The strength of their control, however, did not require holding office. In Duirinish where an old moderate minister remained, Communion had not been celebrated for eleven years in 1840, and there were 200 unbaptized children.[53] Many preferred to walk miles to worship under an evangelical minister rather than put themselves in peril by hearing the local moderate minister. Dissension was becoming a significant factor and was paving the way for personal secession from the Church. As the official Church was weakened, the stage was set for the Disruption, but we shall leave that for the following period.

SUMMARY. The second period of the modern epoch saw the continuation of the trends established in the initial period. The process of commercialization was carried one step further. The old runrig system was replaced by the crofting rates and

[52] Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

[53] Ibid., pp. 354-355.

Wr/ovw this and an associated question, the principle of the spiritual independence of the Church from civil authority.

Although the Revival might have created or even renewed a belief in the right of a congregation to call their own minister, it strengthened the belief in the principle of spiritual non-intrusion, by courts and parliament, could have mattered much to the people. The significance of the Disruption is that it continued the trend toward conservatism established by the Revival and made it an official policy of the Free Church of Scotland. The overwhelming acceptance of the Free Church manifests a strong correlation with the suggested amount of social and cultural disorganization at the close of the second period. It was no accident that the Free Church congregation should have been in Breasdale, the first parish to be cleared for sheep. It was not by chance that the people of Kilmuir and Glendale, like so many others, turned to this source of hope. The ministers left the Church in the true tradition of the Covenanters: "in a state of toil and privation, whether within or without the Established Church, and under persecution if need be."[54] The people followed then because of emotional attachments which they had formed with the seceding ministers during the Revival. Only the seceding ministers were successfully restoring group solidarity. Their emotional and dynamic approach was giving the people the means to maintain cultural continuity. The Old Testament, which they were wont to use, was an additional factor. It

[54] Brown, op. cit., p. 1.

175 told about a people not unlike the crofters, and the prophesies
178 were being fulfilled before the peoples' very eyes. Is it any 182 wonder that thousands gathered on the hillsides to listen to a 795 793 minister whose dynamic appeals moved them to tears?

As the people turned to the new church and the emotionalism
175 178 of the large outdoor gatherings, they continued to forsake 183 their old customs and folklore. The songs, except in some 533 cases the waulking songs which provided the tempo for shrinking homespun, and the tales were placed under clerical bann.[75]
The ministers and the "Men" insisted on the prerequisite of gravity in all aspects of life for salvation.[76] The communion roles were purged. In Bracadale, for example, there had been 258 communicant members. Following the Disruption there were less than ten.[77] The same pattern was repeated elsewhere on the island.[78]

The religious patterns which had evolved were, never-175 178 theless, reinforcing much of the traditional way of life.
182 The "Men" of Skye had become elders in the Free Church. This 795 793 554 status sanctioned their position in the community. Although the age structure of the population had not yet altered

---

[75] Norman MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 11-12, 14.

[76] Norman MacLeod, op. cit., p. 35; and Daniel Lamont, Strath: In Isle of Skye (Glasgow: A. Sinclair, 1913), pp. 27-30

[77] Norman MacLean, The Years of Fulfillment (London: Hodde and Stoughton, 1953) pp. 113-119.

[78] Norman MacLean, Set Free, pp. 14-15, 18, 203-212. See also his The Former Days (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1945), pp. 40-49, 80.

worth while to cultivate any of the arable, so I use it for grazing." A case which aptly illustrates the influence of the township system as an agent of conservatism is the breeding of pigs. Although several old crofters told me how many people during the times of the "Clearances" kept a pig, they are rarely found anywhere in the Highlands today. The Biblical injunction against the flesh of swine has been taken literally. The older people simply have a strong aversion to handling pigs. One man, a very successful cattle and sheep breeder, put it this way: "Pigs are filthy brutes. I just don't want to touch them -- I never have kept any and never will." At the same time, there are men who believe that the prices these animals bring at the mainland markets more than compensate for the individual's revulsion, especially as long as the Ministry of Food pays for the cost of transportation. These men cannot try branching out because they have no way to restrict the foraging animals. "Skye is ideal for pigs," one young fellow told me, "but I don't have the freedom to work the croft to suit myself."

Smaller deviations from the traditional methods of land use face the same difficulties. A progressive crofter who attempts to improve the value of his stock by growing scientific mixtures of grasses is always penalized. As soon as the harvest is over, the stock of all his neighbors will show their appreciation by concentrating on his croft, trampling his fields, and overgrazing his grass. Nor is this his only penalty. His neighbors will regard him with skepticism for his departure from the ways handed down from the past.

nporary scene. Assuming that few of my readers know any 128 about the nature of the religion of the Sgiathanach than 121 when my wife and I first set foot on Skye, I shall be-ith a brief description of formal organization and ogy.

Formal Organization and Theology

The Isle of Skye now has four independent Presbyterian 795
hes, the Church of Scotland which is the official state
n, the Free Church of Scotland, The Free Presbyterian n, and the United Free Church. There are, in addition, Catholics, including the one family of the county who worship by themselves and several government yees in Portree who meet together and hold services private chapel. There is also a fairly large number iscopals, consisting exclusively of county families ewcomers, who periodically receive a visit from a ter in Fort William but who otherwise attend the ces held in the Church of Scotland.

The Presbyterian Churches differ from one another 779
veral fundamental details of their constitution, doctrine, 795
, and practice. All claim to be in historic continuity the Church of Scotland which was reformed in 1560, the ties of which were ratified in 1592 by the Scottish ment, and the security of which was recognized in the of 1707. All, except the United Free Church, hold principle of national recognition of religion, commonly referred to as the "Establishment." The main differ- 779

ence is the the Free Church and the Free Presbyterian Church 795 have rejected all Declaratory Acts which have interpreted the meaning of the Westminister Confession of Faith.

The Shorter Catechism, written in 1611, contains the basic religious tenets of all the Scottish churches. Since children are required to have a knowledge of the catechism by the age of eight, if only by rote, and a knowledge of the tenets is indispensible for the baptism of one's children and acceptance as a member of the church, we should be acquainted with them if we are to understand the religion.

Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy him eternally. To achieve this, the directions given in the Old and New Testaments must be accepted as the infallible prescribed means for reproof, enlightenment, correction and instruction in righteousness.

"Foreordination" and "Effectual Calling" are the two guiding principles. God foreordained all that has come to pass. He preserves and governs His creatures, created in His own image, and their actions, but, on condition of perfect obedience, they have been granted freedom of will, by which they have sinned and fallen from their original state of grace. All mankind through the original sin lost communion with God and are under His wrath and curse. They are subjected to all the miseries of life and damnation.

Christ, the Redeemer, revealed the will of God for man's salvation. Everlasting life, a covenant of grace, deliverance from sin and worldly misery, and entrance into state of salvation were again offered to man. To become partakers of redemption, the Holy Spirit must work faith in man, uniting him to Christ in "Effectual Calling" which convinces him of his sin and misery, enlightens his mind, and renews his will. He who is "effectually called" partal of justification, adoption, sanctification, and all their benefits. By justification man's sin is pardoned. By adoption man is received into the "elect" and has a right to all the privileges of Christ. By sanctification man is renewed after the image of God.

Man's duty is obedience to the revealed will of God as given in the Ten Commandments. No mere man, however, can keep them perfectly in word, thought, and deed. Every sin deserves the wrath and curse of God which can only be escaped by faith in Christ, repentence, and diligent use of the ordinances, especially the Word, sacraments, and prayer. These are made effective for salvation to the "elect" (and only the "elect"). The reading and, especiall the preaching of the Word is the effectual means of convin and converting sinners. The sacraments of Baptism and Communion sensibly represent, seal, and apply the signs of Christ and the new covenant.

Baptism is administered to those within the visible church and their infants. The Lord's Supper is to be received only by the worthy, those who find up self-examina that they are worthy in their faith, repentance, love, and new obedience.

794 Prerequisite to an understanding of the role of religion
779 in ordering human relationships for the Sgiathanach is an awareness of a distinctive and all-pervading feature of church membership. When we briefly discussed theology, we noted the prominence of the principles of "Foreordination" and "Effectual Calling." While many Scots may pay them lip service, the Skyemen firmly believe in them. Because of their unfaltering belief and the strict interpretation of "Effectual Calling," [787] the membership of all churches is very limited. Admission [888] to the numbers of the "elect," those who have received a visitation from the Holy Spirit and experienced a soul-saving change, can only be gained by attaining the status of old age. Since "election" depends on manifesting a steadfast conformity to the behavior patterns approved by 794 religion, "elect" are all well past sixty. Adherents, who support the church in every way but have no voice in kirk affairs and do not take Communion, far outnumber these "elect" members. For example, among the religiously homogeneous Free Presbyterians of Glendale, there are 14 members in a congregation of over 300. In Kilmuir, a neighborhood with a rapidly aging population, there are 58 members of the Church of Scotland in a congregation of 211. Portree, as we know, contains a large number of newcomers who are affiliated with the Church of Scotland. Having been brought up in a different religious atmosphere and being relatively free from gossip to which the convert is exposed, they have come forward as members. Thus, the Church of Scotland has

passage of the individual from birth, through his age statuses, 121
to death and to re-establish meaningful patterns of interaction after a disturbance by an event in the life cycle. When 851 individual and reciprocal patterns of behavior following birth 794 were described, I pointed out that they were a much modified survival of the old practice of kirking, the custom of having the parents, their "people," and "friends" attend a church service to offer thanks, followed by a feast and dance. Similar festivities once accompanied baptism. As the first event in the life cycle which concerns the church, and as one of the two sacraments celebrated in the church, baptism is of supreme importance. In addition to revealing the amount of control [121] the elderly have over the group, it shows how the status and role of the father has been maintained.

The child's father, as the religiously sanctioned head 626 of the family, approaches the elder for his township and 851 888 requests the administration of the sacrament. The elder, in 794 turn, intimates the father's request to the minister, who then calls a kirk session. At the kirk session the father is examined. He must live an exemplary life, in the way of the church, including regular sabbath church attendance, daily worship in the home, and the renunciation of all forms of frivolous amusement. The elders, of course, know how he habitually behaves by observation and reputation. In Glendale, if not in Kilmuir, the minister knows as well, for, as one woman said, "You never know what your neighbors will run and tell the minister." Sudden reform is not good enough. The [779] father must also demonstrate his ability to raise the child

that young sinners will not escape from his kingdom." 785 779
Another of the same church expressed himself, "One is constrained to look upon this world as a great battlefield between Christ and the devil and between grace and sin. In our day the kingdom of darkness is carrying everything before it; the Prince of the kingdom of darkness is the god of this world." This attitude is not, however, carried to the extreme that characterizes the Old Order Amish in their determination to "Be not conformed to this world."[24] On Skye, the position is rather that the church, as Christ's witness, must resist the encroachment of worldly pursuits. In a world which is moving as fast as ours, the success 888 of the resistance of the church is indicative of the hold 626 794 of the pillars of the faith, the venerable old man, over the group. We have learned how the prestige status of the [554] "elect" and the elders stems from their high position in the esoteric religious hierarchy, and how, through their power to withhold the sacraments, they enforce social control. When the elders sit in judgment of the father whohas come to ask that his child be baptized, or the person who thinks he has experienced a "saving change," they base their estimation of him on his non-religious behavior as much as his knowledge of the tenets of the faith. He must [785] not only attend church regularly and conduct family worship; he must also deny himself all pleasures of a frivolous nature.

---

[24] Kollmorgen, Culture of a Contemporary Rural Community: The Older Order Amish of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, p. 1

The man who seeks sensory pleasures and finds enjoyment in 785 779
mundane recreation is believed to be spiritually unenlightened. It seems almost an anticlimax to add that social life is restricted.

Beyond the Highlands and, indeed, within the Highlands 771
in certain prosperous areas, where poverty has not been 883
a factor of such importance that it requires religious 571
sanction, the Church of Scotland has endeavored to find room within the church for recreational activities, especially for the youth. As in America, the church feels a responsibility to the youth which requires a combination of religion and recreation if the citizens of the community
are to be well-rounded adults. Youth programs and youth clubs, young adult groups, and social circles for the older men and women are an essential part of church work. In 794
an organizational sense, the Church of Scotland on Skye 571
has, at the most, a Woman's Guild which meets once a month
to hear a lecture on a topic such as missionary work in India, and which holds an occasional sale of work to reduce the church debt or buy the minister an electric tea kettle
to keep in his vestry; and a choir, which meets once a week for rehearsal. It is, as I have said before, not the overall policy of the church which determines the activities in which the people participate or which they reject. The 888 elders are the prime movers. Were the youth in Kilmuir 561
anyone under thirty, instead of anyone under forty, the 626 control of the aged might not be as strong as it is. In several agencies who have taken the task of bringing movies 178

to the remote crofters in the belief that the Highlander is 883 more likely to stay if he has a share in the life of the 177 Lowlander and the Englishman. These agencies want to "create" 52
a more adequate social organization."

Out of boredom, some young men try to add some spirit 273
to their lives by turning to "the drink." Although the 779 religion of the Skyeman is strikingly similar to that of the rural dweller in Wales, I found the Welshman and the Sgiathanach have quite different views on the subject of temperance.[26] All churches support temperance, from the pulpit and from the kirk collections, but abstinence or prohibition has never been accepted. Perhaps, their main reason for consistently rejecting the idea is their wont to base many of their decisions on Biblical directions. There can be nothing inherently wrong in the infallible Word of God. Then, too, to the Sgiathanach, whiskey is not Scotch; 273
it is the "water of life." The importance attached to the dram can be judged from its functions at birth, marriage, and death. It is also the means of thanking a man for doing a favor which cannot be repaid. Thus, while abstinence is a major religious tenet for the Welsh, temperance is the aim of the Skyeman.

The temperance movement has had an effect, all over 275
Scotland. The "pubs" are no more than a long bar set in a 185 bare room. Young men who have spent time in England, where the local "pub" is a closely knit club for the villagers, frequently

---

[26]Rees, op. cit., p. 127

78

78 RELIGIOUS PRACTICES--general statements dealing with several a description and analysis of specific religious rites and practices or Extended ceremonies, in which various rites are combined in seque are presented as units under 796. For cult of the dead see 769; for sion of religious beliefs see 869.

he child. Consequently, the sacrament is normally administered 369 ithout even the formality of a kirk session examination. The 626 inisters of the other churches assert that non-church-going, 851 runken fathers whom the kirk session has refused have gone to 888 794 he Church of Scotland and have secured the sacrament for their hildren after pretending to mend their ways. They have then one back to their former habits. It may be so, but at least he man in Portree was very surprised to find that the Church
f Scotland can require a severe examination.

At baptism the child is formally introduced into the 851 olds of his father's church. His mother and father stand 794 efore the minister and are admonished to bring up the child the nurture and admonition of God, to the best of their bility.

Marriage is not a sacrament in Scotland, and, therefore, 585
oes not provoke any strong resentment beyond a feeling that [179]
he Church of Scotland should not have the exclusive right proclaim the banns of marriage. It is the one time in 585
he life of a woman when she is the center of attention and 562
s complete control over the situation. She decides where 794
e will be married and what minister will preside. Church filiation seems to make little difference. At least, the dding of a daughter of a strict Free Presbyterian family
the Church of Scotland did not give the people any cause gossip. Although a wedding is no more than a legal formality, e vows made at marriage are sacred. It would not strike ericans as being particularly significant to omit the promise obey from the ceremony; Americans are said to have an cannot be spiritually enlightened. The individual who is asked 794 about the nature of his visitation is not judged on his ability 888 626 to raise his family in the nurture of the church. He is rather judged on his preparation to carry on the tradition. He must be worthy of the respect due to one of his status. While old [563] women are numbered among the "elect," their exclusion from any active role in the church has kept them socially inferior to the old men.

I wish I could give some examples of the nature of this 124
"visitation;" however, Skye is a land where the direct question 576 is not used. One can ask a direct question without offending, but the code of hospitality requires an either affirmative answer or the answer you think your guest expects. My circuitous promptings on this topic only succeeded in arousing concern for my soul.

Two groups escape from the control of the elders as it 626
is exercised through acceptance of an individual into the 888
"elect." As mentioned earlier, the newcomers to Skye have 794 167
come from different backgrounds. Beyond the Highlands, the [184] meaning of "Effectual Calling" has changed over the years. The youth attend a young communicants' class in which they are taught the meaning of church membership. Notestein, writing about the national character of the Scot, maintains that interest in "election" has disappeared.[14] Most of the members of the Church of Scotland in Portree would no doubt agree with him. One attempt has been made on Skye to hold a young 794 communicants' class. It took place, of course, in the Church 779 184

[14] Notestein, op. cit., p. 153.

of Scotland in Portree. Only one girl appeared for instruction. After the significance of her preparation had been fully explained, she declined to take the final step. She did not disagree with the minister's view that she was prepared for membership and communion, but she was afraid of what her friends in the Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church might say. She was probably wondering what the middle-aged adherents of her church might have to say, too. When the Sgiathanach takes his first Communion, in Glendale, Kilmuir, or Portree, the people must be able to look up to him.

The second exception to the age-grade requirement rules among the county people. Because of their social position in the community, which rests on the expression of their statuses, as roles, as landlords, village and neighborhood representatives and leaders, and members of the national class system, and because of their education in England, the county people attain membership in the church at an early age. Some have become elders of the church at twenty-one. To subject them to the control of the crofters would, obviously, be incompatible with their social standing. Although they are all Church of Scotland, here again religion is a reinforcing factor for the structure of the society.

Dying, the final act of living, reveals a host of traits which only receive covert expression during an individual's life. While the youth is censured for his spontaneous pleasures and the adult is criticized for his behavior, the deceased is always respected. As one woman said, "It is the one time in a person's life that the people have nothing but

6: Ducey E-4,5 (1953-1954) 1956 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Skye

The Presbyterian Ethic

Asceticism, of the sort discussed by Kroeber, is a fundamental feature of the expression given to the Presbyterian ethic by the Sgiathanach.[20] The deliberate practice of austerity, first noted at the time of the Revival under the lay religious brotherhood of the "Men" of Skye, and the willful abstinence from sensory pleasures, which has become a religious sanction for the hardships and economic limitations which accompany crofting, have received social enforcement. This is a well known ideal of Puritanism.[21] It is not, of course, restricted to Western tradition. The Melanesians of Manus, until Margaret Mead's recent study, were described as "censorious, joyless, vindictive, burdened with a sense of the world's wickedness."[22] I have not seen her complete report, but they seem to have changed. A parallel closer to Skye is found in Wales. There, too, abstinence, restraint, and negation are typical traits.[23] On Skye, as in Wales, asceticism is a by-product of previous experience and a consequence of a dynamic revival movement.

The world is the enemy of Christ. As one minister said, "The world situation continues to deteriorate and the God of this world increases his many schemes for ensuring

---

[20] Kroeber, Anthropology, p. 598

[21] Ibid.

[22] Ibid., p. 599

[23] Rees, op. cit., pp. 126-127.

3: Geddes K-4,5 (1919-1962) 1966 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Lewis and Harris

175 widowed mother and her family, working in farm and town-
771 ship, sending merriment at Christmas, and comforting 776 sorrow at Easter or All Souls. And even as He had told the Disciples to heal by faith, so, they thought, had He bidden them. Who could have told the people, in their ignorance, that in a later age they would suffer for this faith?

175 Thus upon the Lessons read in church (or out of doors)
771 and cherished as the root and stock of faith, there were grafted three types of native shoot. These were the para-
• 78 phrases, the meditations or commentaries, and the parables
538 or legends. The paraphrases should need no justification here, in so far as the four Gospels are each incomplete and complementary—the Celtic clergy may have known the fragments of a fifth; these 'fulfilled' the older Law and the Prophets. Of the meditations, few would be censured by a Protestant or Catholic theologian on points on which both would agree; points of disagreement in the meditations hardly concerned them. (Cf. in the Rev. Allan Macdonald's collection, "Thoughts on Death", Smaointean air a' Bhas, or Carmina, No. 7, and many more.) As a theologian might criticise the parables, legends or marginal tales of which so many were told in medieval Christendom, a word should be said of these.

771 Legends were told of the appearance of Saints to be-773 lievers, such as that of "The Christ-Child's Lullaby", and of the life of the Holy family. The Gaelic sense of parable was strong (Carmina, vol. ii, Notes, Caim). In these legends was expressed what the people themselves would have felt and thought in joy or suffering. Legitimately, a preacher suggests a motive or circumstance to bridge the gap in a Bible record; the people did the same. When reverently retold, some suggested circumstance would in time grow to be a legend taking a place close to the Gospel story. A

781

781 RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE--emotional reactions experienced in religious behavior (e.g., oppressive fear of malevolent higher powers, overwhelming awe of divine might, luxurious sense of dependence upon a benevolent and all-knowing superior, reassuring feeling of security through conformity, prideful conviction of right, grateful release from the burdens of a guilty conscience, groveling humility of self-abnegation, ecstatic release of mysterious inner powers, mystic sense of identification with or absorption in the divine essence, esthetic thrill in religious art, music, or ceremonial); evidence as to the predominant type or types of religious experience in the particular society; emotional needs satisfied through religious behavior; etc. See also:

Personality	15	Ethical ideals	577
Fine arts	53	Conceptions of emotions	828
Esthetic ideals	517

1: Parman E-4,5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Shawbost

621 character traits just by virtue of his belonging to a 156 particular family; he is protected from the "out" world even though he may have broken its rules. The [527] village provides a colorful arena of recreation in the [574] form of ceilidh, the character, and holidays such as New Year's.

• 781 A major system of order and meaning is provided by 794 religion, and by the opportunity to belong to a tightly-[781] knit religious clique. Lewis is sometimes called Tir an t-soisgeul, Land of the Scriptures, in contrast with 571 the decadent outer world. The male drinking fraternity
[273] constitutes a second important group. And for everyone
[521] there is the cinema of their neighbors' activities, which are placed in a vast human calendar that includes the behavior of many generations.

781 3. Bible vs. Bottle: An islander living on the 273 mainland once observed that the Free Church plays cat
795 and mouse with members of the community who drink heavily.
794 Death is a common event in a community which has a large [761] number of old people, and the theme of death appears repeatedly in sermons and in the conversations of those who have undergone religious conversion. The temporary pleasures of drink are contrasted with the eternal joys
781 awaiting those who have been saved. The "false" friend-
794 ships of the drinking situations are contrasted with the more lasting, consistent relations which characterize the clique of the converted. "You have lots of friends when you get converted, and they don't change overnight the way your drinking companions do."

273 "With the drink it's easy to get started and just not [434] be able to stop drinking, especially with the money there
[781] is now. Everything's unsteady here except religion."

273 Many of the most deeply religious male members of 794 the church were once heavy drinkers. One villager observed, 733 "If a man went to extremes as a sinner, he'll be just as 781 fanatical when he becomes holy. Had it not been for [743] religion, some of them would have landed in Craig Dunain [the mental hospital near Inverness]. The talk is forever on religion. That keeps their mind at rest."

794 Membership in the religious clique offers many 781 satisfactions. "You can talk with the converted all night, see them the next day and go on talking, because you're always talking about something new. Now, when [829] you hear someone telling a yarn or joke, you say to yourself, I've heard that before, I don't want to hear it again. But when you're talking about Christ, sharing your experiences of conversion, the conversation is always new."

794 A few cynical, non-converted persons describe the 781 clique as a "social club" whose members sit together in 829 church, shake hands with each other more often than with non-members, and are always having meetings in each others' houses from which others are excluded. "They came in and invited Jessie and Marian to come to their prayer meeting, but they didn't ask me. They have tea, sing psalms, and have religious discussions. Ministers and converted people from all over the island come to these meetings."

"I said to her, 'You wouldn't be caught dead talking to me. At the church you all shake hands with each other, but never with me. How about passing some of it on?'"

The non-converted often express envy, and say they wish they felt the same way that the converted people seem to feel. "I was sitting with my sister at the fire

794 one night, and she said, 'I've got something, have you?'
781 She told me, 'I've got Christ.' She said that Christ
829 whispered to her as we were sitting there, 'Come, come, come to me.' Now she's got full military honors. I felt so bad when she took Communion, because I hadn't got it. We're all going to die. Christ is everything. Without Christ you've got nothing. I go to bed at night and something is hanging over the bed saying, 'This isn't your bed, this isn't your place.' This is the last fling, you won't have me with you long. The next time you see me, I'll be in the church parade."

Often the converted are criticized for "dropping the old crowd" or for not fulfilling their neighborly obligations. "When these people need something, they're going to be hard put to find anyone eager to help them." "You're supposed to be good and loving when you're converted, but they never help anybody except themselves. They look down on anyone who's not converted."

When someone begins to come to the Wednesday night prayer meetings, the most noticeable sign of conversion, the newcomers are welcomed into the fold with eagerness; after the prayer meeting, members shake their hands and congratulate them. To be converted is to be "Born again." "My life is like a boat that was once tied to a pier with many ropes. One by one, these ropes have fallen away. There is only drudgery to this life. I feel as though I

794 could float right up to heaven. The only pleasure I get 781 although it is but a shadow of that ultimate joy, is bein
829 in the company of good-living people."

The converted often spend evenings with each other singing psalms and sharing experiences of conversion. They follow the Communions as they are given in differen congregations throughout the island, and may even go to Communions on the mainland. "You get to meet all kinds of interesting people that you wouldn't meet otherwise. If it weren't for these meetings, it would be like the cities, you'd never meet." "East side knows west side because of the Communions, not because of the dances. You're alone at dances." Although every house in the village is open to visitors at Communion times, the conv tend to gather in the homes of their fellow converted, where, between the twice-daily services, they gather for intense religious discussion.

Persons who are converted, even if they have not ta Communion, attend the prayer meeting held in the middle each week, but only the communicants may attend the "pri meetings" (coinne uaigneach), which are held once a mont "My father used to tease my mother, who went to these 'darkness' meetings. But it's only a prayer meeting tha gives the younger, recently converted members a chance t give the prayers, since when you're a communicant you're n the nurture of the church by being tested on his knowledge 626

f the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. The elders, then, 851 lt in a judicial capacity. If the father measures up to the 888 tandards imposed by the elders and the minister, who is their 794 hoice and, therefore, must reflect their views, the father [779]
s told to present the child for baptism. If he does not atisfy the elders, his child is refused the rewards of the hurch until his father mends his ways. Here the authoritarian unction of the elderly finds expression.

Many men are reluctant to approach the elders to ask or the sacrament. Everyone knows when a man is going to be ested and judged. The humiliation of being refused forces he father to reform. Since the elders think in terms of abitual behavior, one or even two years may pass before the ather will feel that he has continuously demonstrated his onformity to the satisfaction of the elders. Nor is the bond
f affection between the elder and his people and friends trong enough to prompt any leniency. To do so would threaten he status of the elders and the continuation of their control.
n one case a first cousin of the minister was refused.

In the trade center village the question of baptism is 369
sore point for the ministers of the Free Church and the Free 626 resbyterian Church. As might be expected, the elders of the 851 hurch of Scotland are chosen from the county families and 888
he prominent newcomers. Neither group shares the views of 794
he Sgiathanach as far as their interpretation of circumspect ehavior is concerned. For them baptism is administered to 796 into tiny squares. The ministers and the elders partake

794 first. A final hymn is full of rejoicing, and the minister then exhorts the communicants to return to the world and give witness and to live exemplary lives.

The evening service on Sunday is evangelical, intended for non-believers. After this service the communicants conduct a brief prayer meeting to give thanks.

[829] On Monday, the minister again tells the communicants to go out into the world and declare publically their experiences of the preceding day; and to demonstrate in everything they do and say that they are believers. In [178] the past, only a morning service was given, as most people
[484] had a long journey ahead of them to return home; but now that cars are available, a similar evening service is also conducted.

781 5. The Process of Conversion: The process of conversion
794 may be slow or sudden, but conversion is most common at 796 middle age and among women. One informant wryly observed, [561] "Only recently women were allowed to have souls. But [562] from the looks of the Communion table, mostly women are going to heaven." Many of the women taking Communion are [589] dressed from head to foot in black, a color which indicates [822] their widowed status.

781 The first sign that a person is "following" (leanntail)
794 the church is that he begins to attend the weekly prayer

781 meetings. If a woman converts when she is off the island, 794 as occasionally happens during the first year or so at [302] university or other school, the tell-tale sign is that she begins to let her hair grow, and wears it tied back in a bun.

The word curam means "conversion," but is also used in ordinary conversation to mean being careful, such as keeping one's clothes tidy. It also means to be circumspect. In a religious context, it means to be careful of one's behavior, as this behavior reflects on the state of one's soul. When a person "has the curam," he has demonstrated that he is "in a state of conviction," that he 781 has undergone conversion. People say, "A change has 794 come into my life." The "change" includes the cessation 795 of drinking and going to dances and concerts. Woman stop smoking. "After you are converted, you don't watch TV on Sunday. You should do everything for Sunday on Saturday, like shine your shoes for church or cook the Sunday dinner."

781 A dramatic change in behavior is often found among 273 men who have had a history of hard drinking. One man went into the bothan, raised a glass to his lips, but never drank. "He put it down and walked out. They put the glass of whiskey aside, expecting him to return. He was a hard-working man, one of the hardest workers in the village, but everything went to booze in the bothan. He slept in 781 the same room as his father.

273 him, but he closed his ears.
week after he walked out of t him some money. He had been installment, but always spent went into town, got the suit, next Sunday."

781 The process of conversio
153 feelings of restlessness, ina passages running through one' surroundings ("A voice kept w home'"), and occasionally vis serve as signs to the person [869] one of the few chosen by God are taught from an early age school to memorize Biblical p that such passages often come a stressful, disorderly time
as messages from God which pr Evangelical services are full bility of unexpected death, a Conversion is often traced to

"I was like an animal.
existed. Then my wife died.
that something happened insid
later."

His father used to lecture Then his father died. The he bothan, a relative sent trying to buy a suit on the money on drink. He and wore it to church the

on is often accompanied by ability to sleep, scriptural
's mind, alienation from normal whispering, 'this is not your sions, all of which events that he is indeed converted, for salvation. As children in both school and Sunday passages, it is not surprising to mind easily, and, during of life may be interpreted romise order and relief.
of doom, the imminent possi-
and exhortations to convert.
a minister's preaching.
I didn't care whether God
It was when I saw the coffin
le. I was converted six months

781 153 "It was the Monday after the Communions, about midnight. I was lying in bed not thinking about anything in particular. Then all of a sudden I felt God speaking to me. It was the strangest feeling, like I didn't feel safe. With each tick of the clock, time was running out, the world was rushing to its end.

"Four days I was like that, dazed and uncertain, not feeling safe. I was sitting down, unable to work. I didn't know what I was doing most of the time. Then all of a sudden I had a vision, of Christ on the cross who died for us. I had been praying to God and here was my answer, trust in the Lord Jesus Christ. God does everything for you. He makes you breathe, lifts your lungs in and out, makes your blood flow. Everything is in the Bible, every event in 1970. Once I realized that, I could take the days as they came, from one day to the next. We came bare into this world, and we leave it bare; but I'm certain of one thing, that we go with Jesus into heaven after death, and no one can talk me out of that."

781 571 Although conversion is supposedly an individual matter, and one's fate is thought to be pre-determined, conversion often occurs among many persons at the same time. "It's like a chain of fireworks. Once one person goes, the rest go, too." Through the dense network of social contacts that criss-crosses the island, villagers are aware of

781 571 conversions that take place in other villages. "Five persons converted recently in Lochs. Two used to drink a lot, they're saying." Sometimes mass conversions occur, [986] called "revivals," during which people shout, chant, speak in tongues, and sometimes collapse.

794 829 Although strict observance of religious practices must be maintained by the converted while they are on the island, it is possible for them to relax this observance when they visit mainland cities. The converted see nothing wrong with attending plays or movies in Glasgow, as long as no one observes them. A non-believer once commented wrly, "They believe in the 11th commandment: thou shallt not be seen." Women who have spent many years in domestic service on the mainland, where they generally live very different sorts of lives from those of island people, often return to the island to retire. They then take up the [292] color of their surroundings. The long black dress then becomes the appropriate garb for them on Sundays. As one person observed, "Women deposit their curam in the Left Luggage Department at Stornoway, and pick it up fifty years later."

779 The beliefs of the Free Church include explanations for all events. "Everything of importance that happened in history is recorded in the Bible." Predestination lies behind all unexpected events; a sense of fatalism dulls

159 common grazing land in Shawbost. She is the third of three sisters and has a younger, unmarried brother who lives at home with their mother. The eldest sister married a Scottish tradesman and lives in the United States. The second sister lives with her mother, as her husband comes and goes from the sea.

Mairi grew up wanting to be a nurse, although she had also considered being a missionary. She worked for 160 while in a hospital in Stornoway, and then went to Edinburgh for three years to train as a nurse. "I was glad to get away from home, away from the restrictions. I wanted to live a good life, to have fun. I had enough money to spend. I could spend it as I liked. I didn't like to come home. It was so dull and cold.

"But the more I drank and smoked and went to parties 159 and dances, the emptier I felt. One night I was at a 78 dance. I had chipped in with some friends and we bought a bottle. Suddenly it seemed to me that I was getting deeper and deeper in sin, and I promised that if I got home from the dance I would try and correct my ways. I went home and prayed, and was converted."

She had met her husband at a dance when she was home
159 for a visit soon after she started nurse's training. He was sailing, and he returned to sea for three years so they would have enough money to marry. When he returned,

#159 he tried to persuade Mairi to emigrate to Australia, but she would not consider it. They lived for a while with relatives in Shawbost, until he built a house for them on the common grazing land.

#159 "I remember my mother talking about the high ceilidh, 829 how people would gather to talk, and the girls would sit around combing each others' hair. It was a good life. Today things are going too fast. There are so few places left that offer peace. Many young people want to leave here, but they usually come back in ten years' time. I never want to leave."

Katrina Bheag

#159 "I sit there in church expecting to be hit by the 78 curam, like lightning. I always go with my next-door neighbor, Naletta. Up until a year ago she was going to parties and drinking, but then she started going with a new crowd, the religious folk. She just changed one crowd for another. She kept the party crowd going for awhile as well, she couldn't decide which she preferred. But now she sees me and asks, 'How are you?' I say, 'Fine.' She says, 'How can you be fine if you haven't got Christ?' So now I sit in church with her up at the front, with both her and the minister brainwashing me. She keeps telling me about all the people that have been converted

#159 recently, like the boy in Ness who decided he wasn't going
78 to church. He was sitting there reading, heard a knock at the door and didn't go. It came again, so he went and opened the door--there was no one there. Then the voice of God spoke to him, and the next Wednesday he went to prayer meeting. He probably felt guilty about not going to church. I would have been just plain scared.

#159 "Something's wrong with the reasons why people get
78 converted. When someone dies, someone is sure to get 829 converted. When something terrible happens, someone gets the curam. If one person gets it, other members of the family start to get it. Take Iain Mhurchaidh in the next street, for example; his wife converted, so he's trying. But he took a drink the other day, and had to eat an onion so his wife wouldn't notice; and when he hurt his hand in the garage the other day, he swore like a sailor. Usually people marry people the same as they are. It's usually the woman who converts afterwards. The curamach people say they're so fond of each other that they could marry any one of them. That's the best way to get a husband if you're an old maid. And a few affairs have gotten started at the prayer meetings they hold in each others' houses. I've never seen a really holy person. They'll try to cheat you as fast as the next person.

"Once you start 'following,' you can't really stop. Once you've given the sign that you're a follower, everyone

#159 is watching. My boyfriend tells me that I shouldn't go
78 to church regularly and then all of a sudden show up in 829 a pub on Saturday night. It confuses people. The Bible says you can't have two masters.

"There are only two kinds of people in this village. You're either curamach or you're not. If you get the curam, all of a sudden you've got a lot of friends. If you had a friend who got the curam, all of a sudden she's no longer your friend. She just asks you if you've prayed today, and acts like she's feeling sorry for you. If your parents are curamach and your father is an elder, you've got it made in this place. Dombnuill Iain Dasher's daughter was as slim and beautiful as a model but she was never chosen as Miss West Side at the dances. Her father wasn't a member of the church. He always spoke his mind, and people called him an idiot.

"There are definite symptoms of conversion. A person
#159 who's been looking bored in church suddenly begins to pay
78 attention. The women go all weepy. The men sigh. They wait around outside the church and don't leave so quickly. You can see them shaking hands with the converted. You can predict their conversion months in advance.

#159 "I had a dream last year, of a line of people going
79 down the aisle of the church, all dressed in white like to 787 a wedding. Only they weren't wearing veils. I realised

#159 later that these were all people who eventually got the 78 curam. The only conversion I didn't expect was Norrie 787 Bheag. I saw her one night crying outside the church, and knew her time had come.

"In the dream I was at the very end of the line, only I wasn't wearing a white dress. I was naked, and kept trying to cover myself.

#159 "Not a day passes that I don't think of death. I
78 want to pray, but I don't know who to pray to. I've been 741 going to church regularly now, sort of hoping and sort of being afraid that I'll find the answer. I've read too much, and I met too many kinds of people while I was working in Glasgow. I didn't live near other people from Shawbost when I was in Glasgow. I got to know Jews, tinkers, Catholics, and Jehovah's Witnesses. The world is full of different religions. I believe that you can convert to a religion, from to Buddhism or to Christianity, but not to a church like the Free Church or the Church of Scotland. This place is called Tir an t-soisgeul where the true gospel is preached, but the whole world should be called that.

Ruaridh Dan

#159 Ruaridh Dan was married in January and began to work
288 as a warper in the Shawbost mill the following October, just after the end of World War II. He had been weaving

Portree has three Presbyterian churches and, in addition, 348 an occasionally used Episcopal church and small Catholic 715 chapel for newcomers. Kilmuir has two Presbyterian churches, and the population includes affiliates of three denominations. In contrast to the pattern of schism in the United States and, 715 indeed, in most of the Western World, the schisms on Skye 718 have been due to a strong desire to maintain cultural conservatism. Each time a church has tended to become more lenient in official policy, there has been dissension and disruption. This does not, however, mean that the several sects are dissimilar in practice and outlook. In Scotland the local 715 kirk is governed by the congregation in accordance with the democratic principles laid down at the Reformation. The people call their minister and elect the lay officials of the church.

Religion is of supreme importance for an understanding 781 of the configuration of the local culture. In fact, beyond 182 being a highly integrated and systematized pattern in itself, religion has come to provide a focus for the culture. Through the religious pattern the culture achieved a reintegration and found continuity at a time when the people were faced with the prospect of enduring instability, if not total social and cultural disintegration. Although it has the appearance of being an extremely negative institution, in that much of the former secular life has been circumscribed by clerical censure, religion has sanctioned the fundamental values and patterns of behavior which have given the individual and the culture their 781

ability to continue in spite of social instability and acute 182 economic hardship. In many respects, the Skyemen's religion is strikingly similar to that of the Welshmen.[23]

The status of the father within the nuclear family has 182
been maintained, despite changing economic roles which might 781 have led to a loss of prestige, by his religious sanction. The aged men of the community, in particular the elders, the 820 elected lay kirk officers, have been able to continue to exercise stringent control over their families and neighbors. In 842 a negative way, the socially inferior status of the women has been maintained by debarring them from active roles in the church. In religious activity the people find meaningful patterns of interaction. The small congregations, rarely over 300 people, give the Skyemen a sense of belonging. In the 842 home the practice of daily worship intensifies family interaction. Above all, at the semi-annual communion celebrations, 182 highly emotional meetings which partake much of revivalism, 781
the people find solidarity. As each church in turn celebrates 842
the Lord's Supper, the people from the neighboring churches of the same sect come to share one to five days of worshipping together and renewing their ties of friendship. At the daily church services the people meet and hear visiting ministers of their sect and the eminent Men, members of the elect, from other parts of the island. The identical pattern is found in Wales where the intense patterns of interaction center around the singing festivals.[24]

[23] Rees, op. cit., pp. 114-130.

[24] Ibid., pp. 129-130.

781 Although the Sgrisbhaach accepts his religion without 182 question, unless he is willing to abandon his cultural heritage for the outside world, many Scots are disturbed by the 782 influence of religion on the lives of the people. It has become commonplace to call the people narrow and bigoted, and the people well know this, but if the Calvinist and Puritan ethic had not been developed with such logic and vigor, I probably would not be able to assert that through religion the culture has maintained continuity while the content has changed.

wealth, rose above the indigent crofters and cottars.

These changes had a pronounced effect on the culture and the population. Economic hardship and evictions prompted emigration, forced many men and women to seek seasonal work away from home, and led to a reduction in the marriage rate. Crofting which had already become part-time agriculture now was a spare-time pursuit. The Kniathanach was dependent on money, on the wider economy, for the satisfaction of most of his needs. The croft was providing no more than a few potatoes for the table and some oats for the cattle, the crofter's only export. Still, no landless working force appeared. Portree had grown and there was a woolen mill, but there does not seem to have been any sacred movement into the village by the crofters.

While much of what was meaningful to the people was being lost, the religious Revival continued. The conservatism of the "Men" became an official policy of a new church. The emotional approach of the ministers and the "Men," who were now elders in the church, and the emotionalism of the large outdoor meetings functioned to restore the social disequilibrium.

Although the extended family, township, and nuclear family suffered from instability, the people found intelligible roles within the religious sphere of activity. Their religion was reinforcing their way of life. The abhorrence of much of the old culture was accompanied by a strengthening of many traits which reaffirmed the desirable status values. The culture found a new focus in congregational religion and was able to maintain a continuity while the content changed.

sanctioned the qualities which had given the people their characteristic strength of character.

The churches of Skye made consorvatism an official policy in 1843, and in 1892 reaffirmed this policy. For well over 100 years religion has had a strength and vitality which has enabled the Skyeman to pass through times of extreme distress, not to mention chronic economic deficiencies. Among the most important religious sanctions are those which reinforce the status values of the culture. The father's status in the nuclear family was reaffirmed at a time when his socio-economic importance was declining. He has been held responsible for the spiritual welfare of his wife and children. The prestige of the old men, the family-head elders, and their control over the neighborhood group was similarly bolstered by making them the judges of a man's spiritual enlightenment. Spiritual enlightenment is weighed on a scale which will not balance unless a person's religious knowledge is matched by conformity to the ways the old men think a man should behave. Again we are not dealing with a completely negative attitude. In the place of frivolous amusements, religion has offered highly emotional, spiritual patterns of behavior. Religion has preserved the Gaelic language by using it in formal worship and within the home for family worship. In these and other ways religion has indeed enabled the culture to achieve a reorientation and maintain its continuity.

How similar Skye is to the old Order Amish in this respect.[3]

[3] Kollmorgen, Culture of a Contemporary Rural Community: The Older Order Amish of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania.

else the spouse is likely to lose status.

The most powerful of all agents for social control are the old men of the neighborhood. Through their position in the church, a religious sanction for their prestige status, they enforce conformity to the norms of behavior which religion has sanctioned either positively or negatively. No one, nor any group, has been successful in questioning the right of these venerable men to maintain their habits and statuses which have been preserved over the generations. The baptism of a man's children and his own salvation depends on acceptance of the authority of the elders, for they will be his judges.

As far as the contemporary scene is concerned, there is no anomie. The content of the culture has been greatly modified, but the form, the underlying distinctive pattern, has been preserved. We are dealing with a single tradition in which the norms of behavior and the sanctions for them have remained common and clear. This is all the more striking because there have been periods in which cultural and social disintegration threatened to overwhelm the Kniathanach. This brings us back to the role of religion in preserving cultural continuity.

Loomis and Beegle have employed Durkheim's theory to analyze the growth and spread of fundamentalist religious sects in contemporary United States.[16] They conclude: "It is no more coincidence that various types of emotional religious sects are now among the most rapidly expanding religious groups." As a result of urbanization almost all rural areas have experienced the pangs of social mobility and few have escaped unscathed from a clash with the economic forces which impinge from the outside. This predisposes the people to the appeal of an emotional religion, revivalism. Frequently, the sect becomes uncompromising and rejects the outside world in an attempt to bolster group security. The sequence of events on Skye enables me to add that the sect can also reject a great deal of the former content of the culture. Be that as it may, the authors show how emotional religious movements restore or replace meaningful patterns of interaction among groups whose social systems have deteriorated. Revivalism is a counter agent for anomie.

[16] Loomis and Beegle, Rural Social Systems, pp. 401-407.

The first period of social and cultural disequilibrium which the Kniathanach experienced may be placed in the first half of the nineteenth century, with a climax around 1840. To paraphrase Loomis and Beegle, it was no mere coincidence that an emotional religious movement should have appeared and found so many converts. The closing years of the eighteenth century had witnessed numerous changes in the content of the culture and the collapse of the old social heirarchy. While these events doubtlessly had an influence on all levels of the society, it was not until the turn of the century that they broke forth upon the masses. Within a decade a revival had reached effective proportions. ..his was a time of estate reorganization. The taksman, the traditional leaders, were quickly disappearing. The runrig farm was being abolished, sheep were beginning to replace men in one parish (Bracaale).

782

782 PROPITIATION--practices reflecting a sense of dependence and a desire to ingratiate or influence the supernatural; repudiation and intimidation; obeisances (e.g., bowing, genuflection); laudation; prayer; sacrifice (e.g., libations, food sacrifices, animal and human sacrifice, symbolic and vicarious sacrifices); vows; burning of incense; decoration of religious edifices; endowing of shrines and temples; etc. See also:

Friendship	76, 79	Desecration and consecration of sacred objects and places	778
Etiquette	800	Intercessory prayers	788
Mortuary sacrifices	876

the children might not receive proper religious instruction.

"Family worship" is considered an important part of daily life. Prayers should be said before meals and teas, and the head of the household should read passages from the Bible to the assembled members of the household every morning and evening. The practice of "reading the books" prevails in households headed by older men, but is less common among families headed by younger men.

2. The Clique of the Converted: The second network within the religious sphere is a special religious in-group, the clique of the converted (turamach). This clique constitutes a relatively strongly bounded system which to some extent competes with the township boundary system. Owen (Rees 1960) has noted that as persons become more involved with religion in the Protestant Hebrides, they tend to remove themselves from community life.

Intense involvement with the church sometimes conflicts with township activities since people may attend Communions at times when a fank is planned, leaving the work to be done by others. When elders of the church are present at activities, such as fanks, which are otherwise usually boisterous and full of humor, behavior tends to be "properly" restrained.

in behavior is noticed long before the person takes Communion. Some persons may never take Communion, even though they are generally known as "good living."

A person who shows signs of being "good living" (converted) is carefully watched by all villagers, but especially by the clique of the converted whose strict standards he must satisfy before he is able to gain admission.

A communicant who gets drunk or in other ways falls from grace is not allowed to take Communion again until he goes before the kirk session and attests that his wrongs have been mended.

Thursday, the first day of the Communions, is "a day of humiliation and prayer." Friday is Latha na Ceist, the day of questions or catechism, sometimes called "fast-ship day" or "men's day." A passage is read from the Bible, which different elders must discuss in the light of their experiences of conversion. The day is also called a day of marks and signs. The elders who speak act as part of the day's rites are from congregations outside the village, which is regarded as "a matter of courtesy" and to bring in new ideas." They are called on by the minister and stand to give testimony or "fellowship," sharing their experiences of conversion with the assembly. These attestations are also spoken of as giving "tokens" called on an awful lot to give prayers in church, and it's hard for some of them to get up and speak." The Reverend Macleod notes in his diary that private meetings were initiated on the island in 1826.

A quarterly meeting (coinne raith) is held in Stornowa to which many of the converted from the villages go. The Communions are held twice a year. "Special services," or "small communions," held soon after the Communions, are intended as evangelical services for young people, that is, services enjoining people to convert. These services, which last from Monday through Friday, were started in Ness after the first world war.

4. The Communions (Orduighean): Communions are given twice a year, during autumn and late winter. They are scheduled for different weeks in different parts of the island, and neighboring congregations close their churches when Communions are being held nearby, so that during the Communion season some persons may attend a number of services at different churches.

In the days when transportation was limited, visitors coming from a distance away stayed for an entire weekend. All households prepared food and made ready for any overnight visitors who might arrive without prior warning. Guests often slept on mattresses laid on the floor. After facilities of transportation improved, it became common for people to drive down for the day in private cars and return to their own homes at night.

621 embracing several hamlets. Yet the strength of com-622 munity life sprang from co-operation in the farm-team and 623 in the boat's crew.

With the passing of the joint farm the greatest dis-198 ciplinary factor for work in common passed away from 199 agriculture. The fact that fishing still remained as a social 200 discipline, and actually developed in importance as the 201 farm-team declined and was abolished, was to prove all 202 the more significant to the vitality of social life until 1914 203 and even to the present.

(e) THE COMMUNITY ORGANISED: STEERSMAN AND CONSTABLE

624 As small groups of two to half a dozen men could manage 625 their agricultural affairs informally, by common consent, 626 no official was formally chosen to manage the affairs of the 627 fellow-workers on a farm. Where prompt decisions are 628 needed, however, even a small group should be led: a 629 boat's crew therefore choose their helmsman-skipper and 630 obey him at sea. And where several farm-groups made 631 up a township, more formal deliberations were required, 632 and to carry out their decisions they chose a responsible 633 man, the constable.

634 Of the crofters' manner of deciding communal affairs
635 in Uist, Carmichael wrote, in 1884, that these meetings 636 "were highly interesting, as showing the ability of the 637 people, their logical and legal acumen, their readiness of 638 resources and, I can happily add, their invariable courtesy 639 towards one another. There was one regular official known 640 as the constable on whom there lay the chief executive 641 responsibility. When a crofter in the district wished to 642 town-land, he takes off his shoes and stockings and, taking 175 his bonnet in his hand and bowing low and reverently, he 622 declares on honour in presence of earth and heaven, in 623 presence of God and men—Am fiamuis air agus adhair, am 178 fiamuis Dia agus daoine—that he shall be faithful to his 179 trust. This simple declaration of office is extremely im-180 pressive, though now, alas, becoming obsolete from the 181 fears of the shallow thoughtless and the scoffs of the severely 622 wise. The duties of the constable were to divide a new 623 peat-moss into banks for which lots are cast, to see that 624 every crofter does his share of free labour in road building

625 and repair, to engage herds and the like." (Napier Crofters' Commission, 188[illegible])

Naturally such duties called not only for tact, firmness and authority, temporal and spiritual, on the part of the constable, but for strong backing by the crofters, as a body, 175 of the man they had freely elected. But hence too, the 622 adva[illegible]ge to a covetous landlord of superseding free 555 election by appointing his own nominee. Martin found 421 that this had been done in St. Kilda shortly before his visit about 1697 and the people complained bitterly, as well they might. We shall see that the same aspiration of liberty was resented in Lewis less than a century ago. As a mere estate employee, moreover, the constable's position between the landlord's factor (or ground officer) and his fellow-crofters, was always difficult; and it could be cruelly hard, as when he was forced to help in destroying a neighbour's house at an eviction. Neighbourly union in a town-182 ship was damaged by this duality of function, when he 183 who should have been their own impartial executive was 184 in the landlord's pay. When affairs got too bad in a 185 Lewis township the people would appoint their own con-186 stable in addition to the landlord's; even so, rivalry and 187 dual functions weakened the community. Such weakness

188 facing the sun, he cut a handful of corn. Putting the 241 handful three times round his head, the man cried the
(175) 'Iollach Buana', reaping salutation,—and the whole family
(178) then took up the strain." While these notes by Carmichael describe the custom after the abolition of the farm-team, he also tells of "all the people of the Townland going together to reap" (Carmina, No. 89, cf. Note to No. 90). In the days of close partnership this was no doubt a team blessing, said by the chief reaper among his neighbours in mutual aid.

192 Grace before meals survives in Presbyterian house-264 holds; and ancient graces are recorded in Carmina, vol. iii.
(114) The unpublished examples given here are from Miss Annie Johnston (ne Nicolson), Barra, to whose knowledge Gaelic lore owes so much:

1. O God, bless our portion, and our people.
2. O God, be about the beginning of our life (or food) and about the end of our life (ith. of our world).
3. O God, let nothing enter our bodies that may harm our souls.

A Dhia, beannaich an ceid 'us an ceidseachd.
A Dhia, le mu thus air bidhe (or bidhe)
'us mu dheireadh ar soughail.
A Dhia, na leig le 'n ar cuidsinn a ni lochd do 'n'anam.[1]

[1] The reader will note the meaning in translation; but he should also scan the Gaelic, and the assonance of the vowels. In the first and shortest there is a simple play upon sound and meaning: ar ceid 'our cuidsinn' = our share (of things) and our (share of) people, friends and family. In the second, Miss Johnston thinks there may be a play upon the words 'life' and 'food' (of which the sound is almost the same), reminding one that food is the means of life and of all that life means. In the third the assonance of ideas is characteristically emphasized in the pattern of the accented vowels in the words: "a ni lochd do 'n anam" or a lochd do'n anam, here again the form, by means of which it sank through the senses into the heart, marks its significance. Contrast with these the translation Gaelic in the Gaelic version of English Grace. As in the English original, in prose lacks poetic form: "Tha sinn a nair iosag dhuit, A Thigearna, airson nan tiodhlacan a tha Do mhaithas a' buidseachadh sinn, trainh Iosa Criosda ar Tighearna. Amen.

CH. VII SPIRITUAL LIFE OF COMMUNITY

192 The care of cattle was accompanied by prayer. As an 235 Eriskay housewife said to me, she would never leave her cow tethered without a murmured, "Saint Columba be herding you" (Buachaille a'Chalum-cille ort). The curing of animal sickness, as of human ailments, was accompanied by prayers. And prayer was used to avert the evil eye, symbol of suspicions born of unreasoning fear which, psychologists tell us, beset the modern but little less than the ancient! The thought or act of prayer which links a man to his fellow-men links him to the dumb beasts. "The man who is merciful to a soul will not be merciless to a brute" (Am fear a bhitheas trocaireach ri anam, cha bhith e mithrocaireach ri bhraid).

196 Throughout Christian custom each task, of the annual 199 rhythm was marked, at its start and close, by a day of 197 seasonal festival (Ld Feill). These Christian festivals replaced earlier celebrations and continued some of their features, often in play. Yet concerted seasonal activities could not be related to the supreme festival of the Christian Church, Easter, owing to its movable date. This is one reason for the great importance of other, fixed Festivals to (114) rural community life. This point, not always appreciated by latter individualists, is made clear by M. M. Banks in describing British Calendar Customs, vol. i, Scotland 175 (1937). Remembering that the Old Style Calendar dates 178 were ten days later than the New Style (when officially 179 adopted in Scotland in 1600), they may be compared with the annual rhythm of climate and labour (Fig. 9). Until 1600, the New Year began in spring on 25th March. After the Reformation and the abolition of Christmas or Yule, the Gaelic Yule Day was celebrated on Christmas Eve, the day which, in the Protestant Highlands and Lowlands, still keeps alive some of the old friendly visiting and 175 at midsummer came joyous departure to the shielings.

786 Michaelmas at the end of September was a festival of thanksgiving, when the poor, those might be well fed, could race madly along the machair. As long nights brought in the winter, Hallowe'en came on 31st October, and on the morrow the solemnity of All Hallows (Samhain). On 11th November came St. Martin's Day, and in December Christmas once again.

175 When the Islesmen put out to sea, prayers were chanted
782 to Father, Son and Holy Spirit and to the Disciples, "the Fishers of Men". Little more of these might be heard (Carmina, Nos. 117-120), others were chanted by the skipper at the helm, as celebrant, the crew giving the responses (No. 121). As self-sustained community life 786 [illegible] was threatened or endangered, this prayer was [illegible] encouraged by a few elegy, Catholic and Protestant. 196 At the start of the season's fishing in Eriskay, Fr. Allan 197 Macdonald went out in the boats and chanted a rune taught 226 to him by elders; the men responding: One of the "Good 280 Blessings" or prayers recorded by Carmichael (No. 119) is found in Bishop Carswell's Liturgy in Gaelic, of 1569, and is quoted by Martin as "a form of prayer used by many of the islanders at sea after the sails are set"[2]. Most of Carswell's Liturgy was translated from that of John Knox, but not this prayer, of which the earlier and later-recorded version are the same, except for one revealing difference.

(178) [1] In so doing, 'Father Allan' may have been responding to a pious service at an older school of Gaelic priests trained upon the College of Lismore, on island of Loch Linnhe, which Martin was the birthplace of Carmichael, and in the home of his Protestant parents, the Gaelic language was thus hospitably received.

[2] Faicsin nan Urnaighean (ed. M'Lauchlan), 140, and Martin, 1703 (edition of 1934, pp. 180-181). A new text of Carswell is in preparation by the Scottish Gaelic Texts Society.

175 warfare—destroyed its intimate tie with the home, with 282 peace. The web the women had dyed, spun, woven and 532 wauled together ceased to be a sacrament when the tartan 614 was proscribed to men except when worn as a uniform with (114) "England's cruel red".

The framers of this law, which stood on the statute (148) book for over forty years, took full cognisance of what they did. Appended to the Act of 1747 was an oath 648 taken by every Scots-Norman and Scots-Norman arts. After 648 his death this became all but impossible. So far as scholars can tell me, this almost unnoticed monument remains 764 unique in Christendom, indeed in the world.[1] The arts of Scotland, hitherto in touch with European achievement, willingly accepted this and Gaelic tradition was only prevented to be maintained by the very poor, whose debtors, for all time, we have become.

763 At the approach of death God's mercy and peace were 782 sought. Latterly Roman Catholic prayers stressed the wish for Confession to a priest, followed by Supreme Unction for the attainment of 'Happy death', Bas sona.[2]
764 In early times confession seems to have been made as 532 and later implied to the priest in charge of Inchmahome,
where the Highlands meet the Lowlands at the Lake of Menteith. As on a number of medieval monuments, knight and lady are sculptured side by side. But here the two lie each with "an arm under the other's head", the free arm of the knight reaching over to clasp hands

786 fellowship. "The Irish Church", a Roman is said to 175 have exclaimed to a Celtic Gaelic in scorn, "has worn
no martyr's crown!" "Ireland was named the Isle of 192 Saints not by persecuting but by cherishing God's elect", was the reply. The Celtic Church linked the lands across St. Patrick's Channel; and what was true of Patrick's missionary field seems to have been as true of Celtic Britain, the land of his birth. Kilpatrick on the Roman Wall of Clyde has been claimed as the birthplace of one who was certainly a Cymric Celt by birth and baptism, a Gaul by training, and an Irishman by mission.[1]

This closeness of fellowship ranged from personal to 771 divine relationships in waking or rest, with an intimacy of
(192) expression at its one. A prayer for rest begins, "I shall
(181) lie down with God, and God lie down with me. . . ." A simple and universal gesture of love, in which parent, child or lover slips an arm under the loved one's head, is sought. Latterly Roman Catholic prayers stressed the 771 wish for Confession to a priest, followed by Supreme Unction for the attainment of 'Happy death', Bas sona.[2]
764 In early times confession seems to have been made as 532 and later implied to the priest in charge of Inchmahome, where the Highlands meet the Lowlands at the Lake of Menteith. As on a number of medieval monuments, knight and lady are sculptured side by side. But here the two lie each with "an arm under the other's head", the free arm of the knight reaching over to clasp hands

771 with his spouse. The knight, the first Stewart Earl of 764 Menteith, had died four years after his wife, in 1294.
532 Medieval sculpture was then attaining its height, as this monument, in spite of the ravages of time, bears witness.

The following year, 1295, saw the commencement of "the 175 three hundred years war" with its repeated destruction of Scottish arts and traditions of peace. Under King (82) Alexander III,[1] that Scotland led in love and law", peace
(648) within the kingdom of Scots allowed a union embracing
(648) Gaelic Christian arts and Scots-Norman arts. After 764 unique in Christendom, indeed in the world.[1] The arts of Scotland, hitherto in touch with European achievement, willingly accepted this and Gaelic tradition was only prevented to be maintained by the very poor, whose debtors, for all time, we have become.

763 At the approach of death God's mercy and peace were 782 sought. Latterly Roman Catholic prayers stressed the wish for Confession to a priest, followed by Supreme Unction for the attainment of 'Happy death', Bas sona.[2]
764 In early times confession seems to have been made as
532 and later implied to the priest in charge of Inchmahome, where the Highlands meet the Lowlands at the Lake of Menteith. As on a number of medieval monuments, knight and lady are sculptured side by side. But here the two lie each with "an arm under the other's head", the free arm of the knight reaching over to clasp hands

(113) [1] A unique mediaeval tomb at Inchmahome: a cultural link. (Geddes, 1952.) It would be of deep interest to compare the attitudes to death found in 'Spiritual Songs' by Protestant Gaels like Buchanan or Grant, with songs for death which, before the tragic period of post-Reformation date, are all Roman Catholic origin (e.g. in Fr. Allan Macdonald's collection, poems on the Day, others. It is a pagan and of Western Europe, to see death as a friend, and to see the Passion of Christ in the practice—almost the necessity—of giving an English form to a Gaelic name when it is used in English literature, as Donald for Dunbhaol (Dunbhaol), Aeneas for Aonghas (Angus) or Peter for Padhraig (Patrick). Magr a Gael in the Lowlands felt obliged to relinquish his baptismal (and ancestral) names, with their link to Celtic Christian tradition.

CH. VIII RELIGION AND SOCIAL CUSTOMS

though the suspected person was not thereby accused of [77] ill will, he would have to make some effort to put it right.
[79] 'Cure' might be sought either by counter-malediction
on the supposed ill-wisher, known or unknown, or else
by prayer that the evil should be spread so widely as to be harmless, as "on all the wild birds of Heaven . . . that it would do them no harm"—a charming touch! (Carmina, [82] vol. iii). Prayer was the normal and the best protection,
free of any malediction, and was included in general intercession for loved ones. But fears remain—not only in 'distant' isles—both in peace and in the extreme stress
of war.

A psychotherapist of 1917-18, A. J. Brock, wrote that the "War was not in essence a new thing, the ordinary life [115] of every day being itself a sort of battle"[1]. Brock brought the hard-learned psychotherapy of war to bear upon a fresh
understanding of the countryman struggling against an environment with which he has got out of tune. Failing in spite of strained effort to get the food and warmth he needs for himself and his 'wife and weans', he doubtless may lose happiness in home and village, and faith in the future.
"How did primitive people express all this?" asked Brock, noting that the rules and casualties of bad times in the past
brought fears and floating pictures comparable to those of
'shell-shocked' patients.

In all lands the unity of family life and labour is [71] symbolised in homelier folk-lore by the protective spirit [79] of each homestead. As long as the work is carried on heartily and thriftily the Brownie is pleased. But the people may become negligent, or begin to labour upon mercenary motives. The true spirit of the work is then upset and (in all folk-lore) the Brownies begin to give

[1] A. J. Brock, Health and Conduct, 1919, pp. 192-193.

duty of a wife was to weave her wedding sheet. Her duty [64] of burial merely buying a coffin. As all birth and carriage, so the people who attended a funeral must have their dram. Just as they do not want subsidies to begin life, they do not want to be buried with public assistance. They hoard their money, even if it is only a few pounds, to assure themselves of a decent burial. Another thing disturbs the wellfare officers is the determination of the old and infirm to remain on their croft in spite of all efforts to take them to a "Twilight Home." Some of these people may have returned to Skye for no other reason than one feeling, "If I could go back to Skye to die it would be fine." I know many people who had come to America as young souls and "liked it fine." Why did they return? The answer is always the same, "I was pitying home, you know, and kept on thinking of home." This, of course, is another expression of the sentimental attachment for the land and its identity with one's "kin-ship."

Paradoxically, for a people who are so aware of death [63] and look upon it as a friendly, the churches, one and all,
have refused to consecrate burial. There are no prayers for the dead. There is no respite for the dying or at the grave as the body is lowered into the soil. The ritual which accompanies this final act of living is better described as a rite of intensification rather than as a passage rite, to adopt the terminology of Chapple and Coon.[1]

Once the individual dies, his status is fixed for all

[1] Chapple and Coon, Principles of Anthropology, pp. 386-387.

eternity. If he was one of the "elect," he will enjoy eternal [63] life. If he was not one of those venerable old men and women, [64] he can expect to suffer eternal damnation. Although death
[65] is a sacrament and marries original sin, it is only the initial
[66] step in the direction of salvation, which election alone confirms. Neither the minister nor any member of the bereaved
[70] family offers a prayer. "What more can you do than bury him?"
[71] one woman asked. An old man said, "They are just as well [72] remembered without praying for them." In a community which is dominated by the old people, and in the crofting neighbourhoods where so many of the crofters are very old, death can be expected to disturb the equilibrium of social interaction.
In Glendale during November and December of 1.53 funeral processions made their way through the glen no less than nine times. The function of the minister is to reintegrate the disturbed personnel, the kin and friends in the neighbourhood (or village). All work stops in the township for three days from the time of death. Some of the compositions of the [73] village, seeking to justify their existence and relevance, may [74] be prominent people who offer their forward to a funeral because it
[75] means three days of idleness. In the village, of course, it is no longer possible to bring daily life to a standstill because the villagers serve a wide area. The "people" of the [76] dwellings do stop work and close their shops. On the day of the funeral all blinds are drawn until after the procession has passed.

As he would if there were illness in the family, the [78] minister calls on the bereaved family and leads them in family

The Role of Religion on the Croft

As the prestige of the old people and the control of the [79] family-based elders over the social activities of the people has persisted with religious sanction, the status of the father within the nuclear family has been reinforced by the religious expression of his role. As we know, the elder inter-family patterns of economic cooperation have been disturbed by the changes stemming from the process of commercialisation. This has not disturbed the position of the father as the source of authority and discipline. He continues to play a leading role in establishing the tone of interaction within the home, the township, neighborhood, and community. He decides who will do the work and when. He determines in what social activities his wife and children participate, namely, of course, his own. He is guided by the venerable old men. His status is confirmed at baptism, when he is judged, and it is commonly [79] reaffirmed every day in the home. For the majority of crofters, [80] the church is no means all-inclusive. The day begins with the [81] saying of grace before breakfast and the returning of thanks after breakfast. The same pattern is repeated at the taking of any food, including a cup of tea. The form of grace may be used to cast lives on the religious stakes. The "people" of the "gracious God, we have sinned against Thee, and are unworthy of Thy mercy; pardon our sins, and bless thine service for our use, and help us to eat and drink to Thy glory, for Christ's sake. Amen."

In many homes breakfast is followed by family worship.
[79] The father recites with a blessing, a prayer on behalf of his [80] family, and then leads the family in the Lord's Prayer in [81] verses of psalm. Next he reads from Scripture, speaking [82] to the visitor because Gaelic is not an English version, and commenting on the meaning of the passage. He concludes with a prayer. If the morning worship has been omitted, he holds an evening service. Some crofters have family worship both morning and night. When the father is away, his wife or his eldest son conducts the worship. Religious devotion is strong [79] there, as more than Sabbath church attendance and attendance at weekly prayer meetings.

The Role of Religion in Township, Neighborhood, and Village

I did not attempt to devise a socio-metric scale to [79] determine the affiliation of members and adherents of the several churches in either Glendale, Kilmuir or Portree. In the crofting districts and outlying districts divided families, both nuclear and consanguineal, townships, neighborhoods, and the village element from abandonment of traditional religious affiliation rather than from the determination of one's kinsmen or neighbors. Today sectarian hostility is no longer prevalent among the people. The Sabbatharch only churchs his neighbor on church daily and properties, about his only slightly different activities. Men refer to each other's sect by nicknames.
The Church of Scotland is the "Established Church." The bits of London he was living with a crofter's wife, and they [79] go to discussing Hitler. "Yes, he's a terrible man he is," one [80] said, "They don't agree them!—verse them!—almost as bad as the Pope." In another township there is a Church of Scotland

[79] missionary, a lay preacher. His religious sectarianism does not prevent his interacting with the Free Presbyterians
who are in the majority. Not infrequently, he visits his neighbors and when they need help on the croft he is prepared to lend a hand. When he pays a call, he catechizes the [79] keeper of interaction at meal-time or at the evening grace
[80] and commences the blessing. This is part of the hospitality [81] of the Sabbatharch. The visitor is always asked to say grace.

What is true of the township on Skye, is also partly [79] true of the neighborhood. Here the members and adherents of the same church do get to know one another better because of a common faith, or their particular interpretation of a faith
common to all. They see each other with greater regularity [79] than, say, since the congregations are small, they feel they belong. At the same time, the patterns of interaction are not exclusive, except in Glendale. The religious cliques are [79] formed and groups, doing what they can for the infirm and [80] destitute; they are not opposing factions. Nor does religious homogeneity mean the absence of factions. Glendale has its independents who are set against the disciples of the Department of Agriculture. Anyone who knows Skye may be struck by this [79] difference, for it takes the people are attached to a particular rather than Christianity is the prevailing position in Glendale.

[79] This attachment to a sect is all the more significant in the [80] crofting neighborhoods because there is not one loss of difference [81] in the Gaelic services in any church. The difference is doctrinal.

In the neighborhood the affiliation of the same church
[79] have been said to interact with their fellows more regularly [80] than with the members of the group. They come together on the Sabbath for a regular service and on Wednesday night
for a prayer meeting. On the Sabbath they come as families, husband, wife and children, and they sit together. Women [79] the sexes are segregated in public. Indeed, in the home men keep to one side of the fire and women to the other when there are callers. They also leave in family groups. Their interaction is spiritual. There are no gatherings outside the church or after before or after the service to gossip, discuss the news, or the weather, or even the weather. They will all know who was absent, but they will only greet their fellows with a nicht and. The Wednesday night prayer meeting is different. This is a group interaction. Some come by bus and guest on the way. Others get together before and after the service for a chat. At times prayer meetings [79] the stature of the "elect" brain emerges. They offer the [80] prayers on behalf of the congregation. The prayers, it should be noted, are extempore. No form is followed. The basis for them are passages from Scripture and interpretations of the passages.

There is another aspect to the prayer meetings. They [79] are no longer held in the Church of Scotland in Portree.
[80] The ministers of the other sects are in no position to [81] take the degree of spiritual ability which emerges among that congregation. Further, Wednesday night is picture night in the village. The newcomers trade the newcomers with, "off to the pictures?"

It is at these Wednesday night meetings that the people [79] get to know one another. They participate in the worship through the eminent "Ban," who is a society such as Skye [79] wears almost everybody is related to everybody else and [80] the sexes are segregated in public. Indeed, in the home
men keep to one side of the fire and women to the other when there are callers. They also leave in family groups. Their interaction is spiritual. There are no gatherings outside the church or after before or after the service to gossip, discuss the news, or the weather, or even the weather. They will all know who was absent, but they will only greet their fellows with a nicht and. The Wednesday night prayer meeting is different. This is a group interaction. Some come by bus and guest on the way. Others get together before and after the service for a chat. At times prayer meetings [79] the stature of the "elect" brain emerges. They offer the [80] prayers on behalf of the congregation. The prayers, it should be noted, are extempore. No form is followed. The basis for them are passages from Scripture and interpretations of the
passages.

Religion has done more to keep the Gaelic language
[79] alive than any of the numerous societies dedicated [80] to the preservation of the language, such as An Comunn
Gaidhealach, a national organisation which sponsors a series of local, regional, and national programs in an attempt to [81] maintain and stimulate an interest in the Highlands and their songs and stories. Except in Portree and Dunvegan, church services are costly conducted in Gaelic. The newcomer who wishes to attend church services in the crofting areas, and in has settle, must learn Gaelic or be content with the fire winds the minister says speak in English for his benefit if the minister is aware of the presence of sincerne those associated with death. Function to restore disturbed
[79] order since most people are Highland, but the crofter [80] seems to think Gaelic is his own tongue. Many crofters' children learn English only when they begin to attend school or pick it up from an older sibling who is going to school.
Family worship is almost always in Gaelic, unless there is a visitor. We have already seen that the family worship at the time of death is in Gaelic or in Gaelic and English.
Again we have a parallel with Wales, in that Welsh has been [79] [illegible] Gaelic.[1]

During Gaelic the numbers of the inner religious [79] [illegible] however, led to several problems. It has sustained township solidarity on occasions. There are many instances of township beyond the reach of a minister. In some of these remote [79] [illegible]

much is no longer concerned with the necessity of saving his [79] children baptised, the venerable old men, the family-head elders, prolong their social control by sitting in judgement on those who seek salvation. The strength of age contrasts is limited by the continued ability of the elders to resist
all attempts to introduce secular innovations to the crofting neighborhoods. Even in Portree the majority of the people are under the watchful eyes of the old men.

Many of the meaningful rites of intersection are [79] religious. Some rites of passage function to augment social control, restore disturbed equilibrium, and establish new [80] social relations. The rites of intensification, including those associated with death, function to restore disturbed [79] order and to reintegrate the family, neighbor and extended, and the larger social groups and to establish meaningful relationships when large congregations gather for the [79] celebration of communion. Religion for the majority is not merely ritualistic on attending church on the Sabbath and attending Wednesday night prayer meetings. Every day of the week begins with a prayer and ends with family worship.
All social activity outside the home is usually limited to [80] the church, and the church is never used for mundane activity.
Only in Portree are there a number of social activities taught the people. Illiteracy has no more than a Crofters' Club for men, and Glendale has no social activities, unless [79] [illegible]

[1] Blake, p. 199

783

IFICATION AND EXPIATION--practices reflecting a sense of contamination
uilt; concept of ritual uncleanness; things and persons considered unclean mpure; purification rites (e.g., ritual ablutions and bathing); concepts of salvation, and redemption; riddance of sin (e.g., confession, remission, ement, penance, scapegoat); etc. See also:

mination 514
rsonal hygiene 515
as about unclean castes 564
finitions of acts regarded as sinful 673
nishment of ritual offenses 688 oception of pollution, contagion, and oathsome diseases 753
Ideas about corpses 764
Ideas about sexual intercourse 833
Ideas about menstrual blood 841
Ideas about the exuviae of childbirth 844

The age structure of the Lewis population in 1951 and 1961. The trend shown over the forty years 1861-1901 has strengthened and consolidated, so that the 1961 population is middle-aged the 1914 war, but some 200 of those who survived the holocaust were lost in the wreck of the Iolaire on New Year's morning, 1919 —the first morning of the first new year of peace, literally within sight of home. Again, the effect of emigration was a loss, in many small communities, of a full generation. Where religion is strong and thrice-distilled, there tends also to prevail a state of mind which dwells on guilt and, where people are accustomed to express themselves in terms of religious values and ideas, the fear of having committed unforgivable sin. The normal adjustments, reflections and mental stocktaking of middle life are possibly more readily precipitated towards depression in an emotional people prone to serious thought. This brings of course a concomitant spectrum of problems in an area where in general a man is expected to take a dram and stand it; both nature and nurture are relevant factors. In the words of Cunningham Graham (1899), the medical adviser finds himself 'preaching teetotalism, that is for others, but himself taking his glass of whisky for the reasons which have been so cogently set forth by St Paul the Apostle to the Caledonians.' For those who comment in isolation on a community's indulgence in alcohol, one must quote a Gaelic proverb: 'Tha smuideag fhein an ceann gach foid'—Every peat-end has its own smoke.

From the earliest times the Western Isles have indeed been regarded as supporting a population with an uncanny predilection for spiritous liquors. To a certain extent the spirits were needed by ill-nourished crofters to keep out the damp and cold when on the moors or at sea; and people in a depressed economic or mental condition will anywhere seek refuge in alcohol or other available drugs—forgetting the old Gaelic proverb 'Better the little fire that will warm than the great fire that will burn.' The evil effects of drinking have certainly at times been serious: in 1869 Sir James Matheson addressed a circular letter of remonstrance to his tenants, indicating that those guilty of misconduct were liable to be deprived of their holdings. In 1920 a vote was taken in Stornoway under the Scottish Temperance Act, with the result that the town went 'dry'; three years later the poll was upheld. Then in 1926, with a majority of 84, Stornoway went 'wet' again.

But the 'drink question' has been given undue prominence and dragged out of its island context. For instance, Stornoway contains all but three of the licensed premises on the island (at Tarbert, Rodel and Carloway) and, as the chief centre for business and pleasure, must naturally attract anyone seeking refreshment.

away scot-free! Both persons secretly concerned felt that they had endangered their souls by successfully defeating justice through their misuse of the invocation. Can one doubt that they were partly right in both beliefs? The malefactor's confidence had lent success to perjury, and perjury by help of prayer was deadly sin.

Now, the perverted use of prayer, as in this case, was clearly understood to be evil-doing; but what of magic and superstitious practices? Much has been written of 'Highland folk-lore and superstitions'.[1] The religion of the past should be distinguished from these. In The Golden Bough, Frazer drew a useful distinction between religion and magic. Religion, he wrote, relies upon the propitiation of higher powers—or even, in more primitive forms than Christianity, the propitiation of the forces of nature—while magic is an attempt at direct control of natural forces. Superstition may be defined here as a body of beliefs and practices in which hopes and fears attach themselves to things seen or done, by a multitude of false analogies and by irrational links of effects to supposed causes. Such superstitions are marginal to the main body of belief, worship and conduct which forms religion.

At the same time, no hard-and-fast line can be drawn between folk-lore and religion, where religion is handed on as living word and ritual almost without the aid of writing. This is particularly true where the religion of which we think, that of the Gael, is founded upon self-supporting peasant life, in line with that of the humble, working founder of Christianity—historically native to an outlying district of his own country—and not with the

[1] D. J. Macleod, D.Litt.: (a) Highland Folklore (32 pp.), Inverness; (b) Introduction to Martin's Western Isles (edn. Stirling, 1934). N. Morrison, Hon. D.Sc., Superstitions of Lewis, Stornoway, c. 1930.

195 manner that he had in hand business of eternal moment 771 to his hearers. That business was to warn them of the 783 wrath to come, which impended over unpardoned Christless
sinners, and to proclaim the way of escape by the open [178] door of a crucified and risen Saviour. Not more than two months had elapsed since Mr. Macleod's admission
when the 'stupid attention' and vacant stare passed into the wistful anxious listening, the suffused eye, the tender
subdued manner, and in some cases the heart-wringing
enquiry, 'What must I do to be saved?'

[783] "For something like two years this minister 'refused to dispense the Lord's Supper'. . . . A very early effect of his work was the extinction of various worldly and pernicious customs and amusements to which the people
had been previously addicted, and the substitution of meetings for prayer, diets of catechising, day and evening
schools, family worship, and other spiritual exercises in their room. Many at the outset felt greatly aggrieved at the new order of things. Meanwhile the Lord stood by his servant, and the word mightily prevailed against all opposition. Incredible efforts were made by earnest souls in all parts of the island to be present at the preaching of the Word, even on ordinary Sabbaths." By 1828 "the whole island seemed to be moved by one powerful spiritual impulse" and 9000 people flocked from all parts to the Uig communion. "When the memorable 18th of May 1843 dawned"—that of the Disruption—"no part of the country was readier to rally round the banner then displayed, because of the truth, than the island of Lewis almost to a man." It was "an unspeakable relief to the ministers' spirits to escape by one decided step at once
from the bondage of State control and the chilling atmosphere of Moderatism. . . . Even where evangelical preach-eternity. If he was one of the "elect," he will enjoy eternal 763

life. If he was not one of these venerable old men and women, 554
he can expect to suffer eternal damnation. Although baptism 775
is a sacrament and removes original sin, it is only the initial [851]
step in the direction of salvation, which election alone con- [783] firms. Neither the minister nor any member of the bereaved 764
family offers a prayer. "What more can you do than bury him," 793
one woman asked. An old man said, "They are just as well [782] remembered without praying for them." In a community which is dominated by the old people, and in the crofting neighborhoods where so many of the crofters are very old, death can be expected to disturb the equilibrium of social interaction.
In Glendale during November and December of 1953 funeral
processions made their way through the glen no less than nine times. The function of the minister is to restore the dis- 793
turbed patterns, both in the family and in the neighborhood [182]
(or village). All work stops in the township for three days from the time of death. Some of the cosmopolitans of the [369]
village, seeking to justify their deviating behavior, assert [824]
that the lazy crofter looks forward to a funeral because it means three days of idleness. In the village, of course, it [369] is no longer possible to bring daily life to a standstill because the villagers serve a wide area. The "people" of the deceased do stop work and close their shops. On the day of the funeral all blinds are drawn until after the procession has passed.

As he would if there were illness in the family, the 793
minister calls on the bereaved family and leads them in family 764

custom is well established. Even war-time restrictions and 794 rationing had little effect on Communion attendance. Skye 716 exiles in the United States and Canada sent food parcels 793
to the ministers and their kinsmen to provide for their 574 visitors. The minister takes in as many as he can. One [167] minister, for example, not very far from Portree has a large manse with seventeen rooms. It is customary for him to have [264] twenty-five or thirty people for lunch and again for high tea (the Skyeman's evening meal) on Friday and the Sabbath.
Many of his guests spend five days with him.

Some idea of the size of the gatherings may be gained 794
from the need for the Free Presbyterian Church in Portree 716
to hold duplicate services. The church, I should think,
holds around 300. During the Communion Season, the congregation takes over the drill hall, normally used by the Territorial Army for training and by the villagers for social affairs, in addition to the kirk. In the drill hall services are held in English; in the kirk, they are in Gaelic.

Such large gatherings of people require a means to establish meaningful contacts and create a feeling of belonging.
Thursday is a fast day. All work stops. The people attend services in the morning, at noon, and again in the evening.
Their minister, assisted by two visiting clergymen conducts them in a dynamic, highly emotional appraisal of the coming event. All the ministers participate in the sermons, stressing [783]
the confession of sin and the need for humiliation. Many ministers are known for their preaching ability, that is their

784

784 AVOIDANCE AND TABOO--practices reflecting impulses to escape from fear or anxiety; techniques for avoiding malevolent spirits (e.g., flight, disguise, deception, disparagement); concept of taboo; imposition and removal of taboos; prevalent types of taboos (e.g., food taboos, property taboos, status taboos, word and name taboos, totemic taboos, sex taboos, reproductive taboos, therapeutic taboos, mortuary taboos); systematization of taboos; general discussion of taboos; list of taboos; specific taboos not classifiable elsewhere; supernatural punishments for violations of taboos and other offenses; etc. Since taboos commonly represent the negative aspects of cultural norms, information on taboos may be found under many categories, only a few of which are indicated in the cross-references below.

Totemic taboos	81, 82	Rest days	527
Mortuary taboos	78	Name taboos	681
Sex taboos	83	Avoidance relationships	602
Reproductive taboos	84	Taboos surrounding a chief or king	63, 622, 643
Cultural norms	183	Legal norms	671
Euphemisms	195	Definition of acts regarded as sins	673
Food taboos	262	Social Sanctions for violations of taboos	688

175 which Mr. Macleod attempted to hold at Uig, one of the 771 former elders actually offered a request that a wreck should 793 be cast ashore in the neighbourhood;[1] while another elder, referring to the death of our Lord as a misfortune, used strong expressions of deprecation of its having at all occurred.[2] . . . The reason is easily furnished; the Lewis ministry was not evangelical. Moderatism held the land in sole possession. . . . Nor did it act merely in a negative indifferentist manner. Moderatism contained in itself elements of positive distaste to Gospel truth, and enmity towards gracious influences and experience. As a matter of course, it was perfectly compatible with this system to grant toleration to superstitions and superstitious observances, which had been handed down through the Dark Ages of Popery from the still darker ages of Druidical idolatry. Acts of adoration, having for their object the heavenly bodies, were common. It is scarcely necessary to state that family worship was unknown among the people, and even at the manse. For although the public ordinances were dispensed as a matter of form, they exerted no practical influence upon the conduct. They rather tended to lull more profoundly asleep by imparting and maintaining a feeling of security to the poor dark benighted souls who participated in them."

People did come to church "in tolerable numbers" from the very outset of Mr. Macleod's ministry, but "Here for the first time was a preacher who showed by his whole

[829] [1] Shipwreck was still thought of as an 'act of God', and a dire 'misfortune'. Not only is there no hint of deliberate wrecking ever taking place, as on some other British coasts, but abundant record of aid to the shipwrecked and respect for their property in the absence of the skipper and crew. (Martin, 1695; and later.)

[784] [2] According to Evangelical theory the punishment of guilty and innocent alike was part of the Divine plan. How different this, from the faith of the Islanders till then!

785

785 ASCETICISM--practices reflecting tendencies of self-abasement or self-torture; mortification of the flesh (e.g., flagellation, bookswinging, bed of spikes); fasting; sexual renunciation (e.g., continence); renunciation of comforts (e.g., vows of poverty, wearing sackcloth); abandonment of worldly affairs (e.g., becoming a beggar or hermit); etc. See also:

Personality . . . . . 15 Suicide 162
Control of hunger . . . . . 281 Ascetics 792 Mutilation . . . . . 304 Idealization of continence and chastity . . . 831

THE OTHER ISLANDS

*175 Account, there was one family there, that of the person employed 162 by the owner to look after the livestock. The owner was a Ness [920] tacksman who paid £4 sterling rent per annum. The island produce was corn, butter, cheese, a few sheep and sometimes a cow, and some wild fowl and feathers.

*175 In 1844 Rona was evacuated, its last inhabitant being, in the 162 seventh year of Queen Victoria's reign, the 'King of Rona', Donald MacLeod, who lived in almost prehistoric conditions. Rona was without inhabitants until 1884, when a last attempt • [785] at resettlement was made by two men from Ness. This was a self-imposed exile, after a difference of opinion with the minister of their parish; in penance, they hied themselves off to Rona. In 1885 a relief boat called and found both men dead, one from natural causes, the other from starvation and exhaustion after nursing his friend. By the fireside of their hut was a pot ready for the preparation of a meal they never ate.

Today, man's connection with the island is maintained by the 236 small party of Lewis shepherds who each year make the journey
221 to shear the sheep which still graze on the green slopes around the now-ruined village. Otherwise, only the occasional traveller now 659 lands there. In June 1956, North Rona with its associated rock, 185 Sulasgeir, was declared a National Nature Reserve on account of its importance as a breeding ground for colonies of oceanic birds—guillemots, puffins, kittiwakes, and fulmars—and for its seal colony.

Sulasgeir

133 Sulasgeir is twelve miles west of North Rona, a lonely rock in [131] the Atlantic, bleak and grassless, and tunnelled by caves and gullies. The only life it has ever supported is seabirds—officially.
[346] Yet one of the old buildings is said to be a chapel and is called 173 'Tigh Beannaicht' (House of Blessing). According to Ness tradition, Sulasgeir was once used as a prison for sheep-stealers, and it is also said that Brenhilda, sister to St Ronan, was left on the island to perish. Yet another tradition claims that it was at this rock that Prince Charles Edward made his first contact with his Scots clansmen, when the ship that carried him to Scotland was spoken to by a Ness boat making for North Rona.

mainly because there are enough young people to form a strong 571
age grade of their own. The more liberal outlook of the 184 554 888 villagers is, however, tempered by the old men.

Religion

The attachment to the past embodied in the social and 771
economic aspects of the culture carries over into the religious life of the Sgristhanach. He is a Presbyterian who continues 795 to worship and view the world within a pattern which characterized the Scots of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The doctrine and theology are derived from the teachings of Calvin as interpreted by John Knox and refined by the Covenanters of the seventeenth century. To the original ethical code a strong measure of influence from the English Puritan movement has been added. The guiding principles are still fore-ordination and election. The dominant motivating factor is [785] •
asceticism.

One of the outstanding features of the island today is 348
the large number of churches for such a limited population. 795
To serve the 8,600 people there are 21 churches with ministers and 13 mission stations. A hundred years ago, when the [178] population was almost triple the present number, there were only seven ministers on Skye. The present abundance is the out- 795 come of a series of religious schisms of the past century.
There are now four Presbyterian sects. Of all the neighbor- [184]
hoods on Skye, only Glendale is religiously homogeneous.

The Presbyterian Ethic

Asceticism, of the sort discussed by Kroeber, is a 785 •
779
fundamental feature of the expression given to the Presbyterian ethic by the Sgristhanach.[20] The deliberate practice of austerity, first noted at the time of the Revival under the lay religious brotherhood of the "Men" of Skye, and the willful abstinence from sensory pleasures, which has become a religious sanction for the hardships and economic limitations which accompany crofting, have received social enforcement. This is a well known ideal of Puritanism.[21] It is not, of course, restricted to Western tradition. The Melanesians of Manus, until Margaret Mead's recent study, were described as "censorious, joyless, vindictive, burdened with a sense of the world's wickedness."[22] I have not seen her complete report, but they seem to have changed. A parallel closer to Skye is found in Wales. There, too, abstinence, restraint, and negation are typical traits.[23] On Skye, as in Wales, asceticism is a by-product of previous experience and a consequence of a dynamic revival movement.

The world is the enemy of Christ. As one minister said, "The world situation continues to deteriorate and the God of this world increases his many schemes for ensuring

[20] Kroeber, Anthropology, p. 598

[21] Ibid.

[22] Ibid., p. 599

[23] Rees, op. cit., pp. 126-127.

that young sinners will not escape from his kingdom." 785 779
Another of the same church expressed himself, "One is constrained to look upon this world as a great battlefield between Christ and the devil and between grace and sin. In our day the kingdom of darkness is carrying everything before it; the Prince of the kingdom of darkness is the god of this world." This attitude is not, however, carried to the extreme that characterizes the Old Order Amish in their determination to "Be not conformed to this world."[24] On Skye, the position is rather that the church, as Christ's witness, must resist the encroachment of worldly pursuits. In a world which is moving as fast as ours, the success 888 626 794 of the resistance of the church is indicative of the hold of the pillars of the faith, the venerable old man, over the group. [554] We have learned how the prestige status of the "elect" and the elders stems from their high position in the esoteric religious hierarchy, and how, through their power to withhold the sacraments, they enforce social control. When the elders sit in judgment of the father who has come to ask that his child be baptized, or the person who thinks he has experienced a "saving change," they base their estimation of him on his non-religious behavior as much as his knowledge of the tenets of the faith. He must [785] not only attend church regularly and conduct family worship; he must also deny himself all pleasures of a frivolous nature.

[24] Kollmorgen, Culture of a Contemporary Rural Community: The Older Order Amish of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, p. 1

The man who seeks sensory pleasures and finds enjoyment in 785 779
mundane recreation is believed to be spiritually unenlightened. It seems almost an anticlimax to add that social life is restricted.

Beyond the Highlands and, indeed, within the Highlands 771 883 571
in certain prosperous areas, where poverty has not been a factor of such importance that it requires religious sanction, the Church of Scotland has endeavored to find room within the church for recreational activities, especially for the youth. As in America, the church feels a responsibility to the youth which requires a combination of religion and recreation if the citizens of the community are to be well-rounded adults. Youth programs and youth clubs, young adult groups, and social circles for the older men and women are an essential part of church work. In 794 571 an organizational sense, the Church of Scotland on Skye has, at the most, a Woman's Guild which meets once a month to hear a lecture on a topic such as missionary work in India, and which holds an occasional sale of work to reduce the church debt or buy the minister an electric tea kettle to keep in his vestry; and a choir, which meets once a week for rehearsal. It is, as I have said before, not the overall policy of the church which determines the activities in which the people participate or which they reject. The 888 561 626 elders are the prime movers. Were the youth in Kilmuir anyone under thirty, instead of anyone under forty, the control of the aged might not be as strong as it is. In the Outer Isles, enough youth to they cannot have

on a plank bridge.
forward to "Effect
allow their child elders, would mea
For the maj
is objectionable,
the affiliates of
is the most lenie
and similar organ especially if the
is a "picture bus
Saturday night.
as wholesome outl
feel the lack of believe they might outside the pulpit Kilmuir occasional secular activity
Free Church opinio prohibited the pl Choir at the annua minister in Sleat Unorganized dance

[25] Darling a n area of recent depopulation, there are 888

sist the dictates of their elders.[25] If 561 626 dance in a hall, they hold their dance
In Kilmuir the crofters are looking uil Calling." To defy the elders, or en to run counter to the wishes of the a loss of all hope for salvation.
rity of crofters, any form of amusement 785 795
but there are slight differences among the several sects. The Church of Scotland
t. For adherents, concerts, film shows zed forms of entertainment may be admissible, are held outside the neighborhood. There [546]
from Kilmuir to Portree on Wednesday and [366]
Sports activities are often considered [526]
ts for the youth. Some of the ministers, social contact with their people and do some good by taking part in life
. The Church of Scotland minister in ly attends the Crofters' Club, the only admitted in the neighborhood. Significantly, on, although the voice of a minority, has aying of pipes and recitals of the Gaelic al agricultural show. The Church of Scotland has taken a hand in the village hall.
s are condemned. This is not because dancing [535]

nd Morley, op. cit., pp. 21-24.

is a sin but because of the excessive drinking and immorality 785 795
which might result from a promiscuous gathering. Organized [535] dances are, in general, not objectionable. Nevertheless, in spite of the attitudes of the people to these secular activities, the Church of Scotland crofter behaves in much the same way as his neighbor who adheres to another sect. The elders of the [888] [554] other sects have an influence over everyone in the neighborhood.
Every man must ask himself, "What will my neighbors say?"

The Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church people 785 795
condemn any and all social gatherings where songs, stories, 571
or other diversions are admitted. When people visit, they 574 are expected to remain circumspect in behavior. They may discuss their problems and gossip about their neighbors or the wicked newcomers. They may engage in cooperative or individual work. They may eat together in the home. They may not engage [264] in such activities outside the home. Religion on Skye for 785 795
the majority has centered attention on the home. Let us look 575 at some of the activities which are condemned. There is the Woman's Rural Institute, an organized woman's club dedicated to stimulating home industries in rural areas and providing educational programs, especially demonstrations and lectures on domestic arts. One meeting, for example, at Uig, not far from Kilmuir, was addressed by a school teacher on the subject of Highland Folklore. He was followed by a knitting contest and tea. Youth Clubs and Young Farmers Clubs do not exist, except in Kilmuir where the Young Farmers Club is under the Crofters' Club, and, of course, in Portree. Village halls are dens of iniquity. While we were on Skye one was built at Skeabost. A minister drove by one day and said to the 785 795 workmen, "Don't you know you're building a house for the Devil?" 575

One of the laborers, a Lowlander, replied, "It's a good thing we have a place to keep him." The Order of the Eastern Star and the Masons are condemned because, while they are religious, they are secret orders. Even if the person's religion did not stand in the way of his becoming a Mason, his distrust of mystery probably would. As one young fellow said one night in the bar when being chaffed about the Masons, "I'm not going to join any secret organization until I know what the secret is."

Included among the objectionable activities by these two 785 795
churches are the traditional Highland Games, held each year 541
at Portree in August, probably about the time of the old Saint's Fair. The day is a school holiday. Aside from New Years, it is the big occasion of the year. People come in from all over the Island. Few of the Skyemen actively take part in [526]
the contests of tossing the caber and throwing the stone, or in the piping and dancing competitions, but they look forward to the event. It gives them an opportunity to see their [571]
"friends" and join them in the pub for a dram. Although the [793] ministers disappprve, they lack the backing of the "elect," so the games go on each year. I hasten to add that they have lost much of their appeal in recent years, but I am told that this is due to the fact that the clique who runs the Skye Council of Social Service has, in an effort to attract tourists early in the season, set up Skye Week in May. Included in the Skye Week program are Highland Games. I might also add that the people of Skye, including many of the newcomers, have not been favorably impressed by Skye Week. The consensus is that it is not representative of Skye. For the Sgiathanach the Highland Games are alright, but the concerts, dances and similar festivities only cause ill feelings.

As might be expected social life is more vivid in Portree. Here the members and the adherents of the Church of Scotland partake of a number of recreational activities. In the winter there is badminton twice a week. In the spring and summer there is a little golf and tennis. The limitations are not religious; they are climatic. Then, too, there is shinty. We have already noted the existence of many clubs. There are regular dances. Moving pictures take place twice a week. All of these activities are run by newcomers; the Skyemen have a more or less passive role. The "elect" of the two smaller sects are, to say the least, very much disturbed by these frivolities. What is worse, the children attend the dances and the concerts and the boys play shinty. They can find enough solidarity among those of their own age grade to outweigh the threats of their elders. Apparently they find enough security to be unaffected by the stern denunciations of the minister from the pulpit. When they marry, however, they have to recast the pattern of their behavior, for now the elders are in a position to exercise control by withholding baptism from their children. Some may turn to the Church of Scotland.

Standing in marked contrast to Portree, in Glendale the control by the aged is complete. There is not a single activity contrast the friendly and

"pub" with the austerity o
ran who went into the "Coa darts and sing a few songs to the local hotel bar on S it with a pint of beer, and nothing else to do." Skye
the youngest of them, often opportunity for social inte mean is that "there is noth
not care about the reaction Moreover, they may want to then, they will have to fac
their neighborhood.

Another contrast of t
be found in their respectiv Traditionally, both enjoyed competition plays a major p little gambling, implicitly
The Sgiathanach, too, is no pools find many interested There was, for example, the had a meeting to attend. B member of the kirk stopped busy filling out his footbal course, are not particularl

[27] Ibid.

omely atmosphere of the English 275
the public bar on Skye. The same 185
h and Four" to play a game of over his pint of beer goes down
kye to toss off his dram, follow chaff his neighbors. "There is exiles in Glasgow, and not only 275 complain about the lack of 167 571 rcourse at home. What they really ing else to do" unless they do of their "people and friends."
return some day to stay, and,
e the judgment of the old men in he Welsh and the Sgiathanach can 525

e attitudes towards gambling.
forms of recreation in which art, but the Welshman today does because of his religious outlook.[27]
t an open gambler, but the football individuals on the Misty Isle.
deacon in one church who forgot he 525
uch to his dismay, when another 794
by to see why he was late, he was ll coupon. Dissimilarities, of 785
y significant. In both regions

asceticism is fundamental to the peoples' lives. A brief 785
discussion of the Sabbath will serve to conclude my discussion [796]
of religion and to indicate some additional difficulties which [128]
the Sgiathanach faces in his attempt to preserve his culture.

Sunday does not exist on Skye. There is the "Continental 796 Sunday" and the Sabbath. On any other day of the week, the [576] greeting is, "It's a fine day," or, more often, "It's a wet day." The Sabbath, however, is "no day to be speaking of [576] days." Keeping the Sabbath is almost a fetish among the people. It is a readily observable test of an individual's religious capacity. All unnecessary work, all unnecessary words, and all unnecessary thought is taboo. Only the barest minimum of worldly activities are permissible. This does not mean a day spent in idleness; the time should be spent in public worship at the kirk, private spiritual contemplation and family worship. The Skyeman's estimation of [183] a newcomer may depend on his keeping the Sabbath. One man was very surprised to learn how long a memory the people have when a man deviates from the expected. A visitor asked a crofter what kind of a man a certain newcomer to Kilmuir was, to which the crofter replied, "He's all right, except six years ago he played the pipes on the Sabbath." Most newcomers, including the few Catholics, respect the Sabbath.

No crofter would ever think of doing any work on this [461] day beyond feeding his cattle as an act of mercy. After [231] weeks of rain, the crop of oats or hay may be ready for 796 harvesting on the Sabbath, but he will not touch it. A man 241

h asceticism, epitomized in Sabbatarianism, 771 haracteristic of the expr ession of the 785 ethic, it is not completely negative. It is 182 ans for sustaining cultural continuity.
centered on the home and family. It has Gaelic. There have been significant changes [178]
t of the culture, but by using asceticism as test of spiritual enlightenment the limitations economic life have been sanctioned. The form, figuration, of the culture is still recognizable.

786

786 ORGIES--practices reflecting hysterical tendencies or release from normal inhibitions; frenzied singing and dancing; ceremonial license (e.g., phallic rites, temporary lifting of sex restraints, ceremonial intoxication); bacchanalian revels; religious prostitution; induced hysteria, hallucination, and swoon; religious revivalism; etc. See also:

Sex taboos	83	Temple prostitutes	793
Drunkenness	273	Conception of abnormal mental states	828

781 conversions that take place in other villages. "Five 571 persons converted recently in Lochs. Two used to drink
a lot, they're saying." Sometimes mass conversions occur, [786] called "revivals," during which people shout, chant,
speak in tongues, and sometimes collapse.

794 Although strict observance of religious practices
829 must be maintained by the converted while they are on the island, it is possible for them to relax this observance when they visit mainland cities. The converted see nothing wrong with attending plays or movies in Glasgow, as long as no one observes them. A non-believer once commented wrly, "They believe in the 11th commandment: thou shallt not be seen." Women who have spent many years in domestic service on the mainland, where they generally live very different sorts of lives from those of island people, often return to the island to retire. They then take up the [292] color of their surroundings. The long black dress then becomes the appropriate garb for them on Sundays. As one person observed, "Women deposit their curam in the Left Luggage Department at Stornoway, and pick it up fifty years later."

779 The beliefs of the Free Church include explanations for all events. "Everything of importance that happened in history is recorded in the Bible." Predestination lies behind all unexpected events; a sense of fatalism dulls

#175 They were frequently accused of failure to conform to orthodoxy
#178 and of a disinterest in their calling.[19]
773

#175 In time a second trend appeared which was marked by #178 conservatism and an emphasis on doctrinal dogma. Toward the 182 close of the eighteenth century, it became apparent that the 161 population had pressed too hard on the means of subsistence.[20]
Commercialization was continuing and sheep flocks were be-[167] ginning to replace men in one parish.[21] The people, many of them destitute, were finding a solution for their plight in migration to the New World, or in seasonal migrations to the Lowlands for work.[22] Those who remained were land hungry.

#175 Gradually, they were losing respect for their ministers and #178 turning to evangelical missionaries who had begun to appear in
182 the Isles.[23] The crucial fact would seem to be that the ministers 773 were upholding values and symbols which no longer contributed to group solidarity. The Island was on the verge of a period [784] of social disintegration and cultural instability. Under the changes that were to follow, the evangelical movement grew into a large scale revival.

---

[19] MacInnes, The Evangelical Movement in the Highlands of Scotland, 1688-1800, pp. 108-115; Roderick MacCowan, The Men of Skye (Glasgow: John MacNeilage, 1902), pp. 30-32; and Buchanan, loc. cit.

[20] OSA, II, 552; III, 247, 248; IV, 132; XVI, 151, 224, 539; XVIII, 184.

[21] James MacDonald, op. cit., pp. 754-755.

[22] OSA, II, 551; and Robert Heron, General View of the Natural Circumstances of the Hebrides (Edinburgh: John Paterson, 1794), p. 32.

[23] MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 15-16, 24-25; and MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 90-91, 98, 99, 151-165.

in Scotland, it lacked the same effects elsewhere. There is a significant correlation in the Highlands and Islands, as in Ireland, of the disproportion of the population to the means of subsistence, due to a change from subsistence farming to a partially commercial system of land use, and the intensity of the crop failure. In both countries the persistence of innumerable traits from the traditional economy, including conservative techniques, attachment to the land, and a tendency to share the land among the kin, hampered commercialization or, at least, specialization and led to devestation.

Five years of famine ended the growth of population. The emigration of large numbers and the death of untold numbers must have seriously disturbed the patterns of interaction within the extended family and the township. Although the proprietors made a final effort to help their tenants, ruining themselves financially, they had foresaken their people. The ministers were no longer able to contribute to group solidarity,[41] because the symbols and values they upheld reflected the attitudes of the landlords and lacked significance for the people.

A religious revival reached effective proportions by 1812.[42] The appearance of the Revival suggests that the culture was far more disorganized than the scant social and economic record indicates. Normally, the attempt to seek supernatural assistance as a source of comfort and hope appears only after the culture has become thoroughly disorganized.[43]

[41] NSA, pp. 269-272.

[42] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 15, 165; and MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 24-25.

[43] Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 437-440.

The process to be observed in the religious facet of the culture during the second period is conservatism. Itinerant missionaries, catechists, and a religious brotherhood known as the "Men" supplemented the regular clergy. As the Revival grew strong, the "Men," as tenacious defenders of the evangelical cause, began to wage an anti-clerical campaign.[44] They usually remained within the Church, opposing any separatist movement, but they drew a sharp distinction between the Church and her ministers. To be a convert of the "Men" meant to dissociate oneself from the death dealing moderate ministers," who were said to have had more interest in their farms than in their congregations.[45] The "Men" conceived their function to be one of delivering powerful testimonies of evangelical truth.[46] They rebuked and constantly reminded the people of their religious duties. They made Sabbatarianism an observable test of religious obedience, separating the respectable Christians from the godless. Prayer meetings were held at which the "Men" engaged in short, earnest prayers, and exhorted the people to read their Bibles and partake in family worship.

The growing influence of the Revival did not leave the clergy unmoved. At least two arose to recreate the spirit of vital religion and revive emotional enthusiasm in their congregations.[47] It was no accident that these ministers should

[44] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 151, 165; MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 53-59.

[45] MacCowan, op. cit., p. 53.

[46] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 217-215.

[47] Thomas Brown, Annals of the Disruption in 1843 (Edinburgh: Macniven and Wallace, 1884), pp. 7-8.

appear in the parishes of Bracadale and Snizort. Bracadale had already seen the beginnings of the final stage in commercialization; Snizort had been sold piecemeal to new landlords.

Evangelical Presbyterianism created a new pattern of social and religious life on Skye. It gave the culture a new focus to replace the dead clan system. Much of the form of religious worship and behavior characteristic of the Island today was established during this Revival Movement. The "Men" became the foremost members of the community. An esoteric religous hierarchy evolved. There were the unfortunate few who were in a state of saving grace and acceptable at Communion, and the eminent "Men," the aged, venerable spiritual laity.[48]

The Revival, unlike many nativistic movements, neither held out the promise of cultural regeneration nor offered the dream of prosperity. To the contrary, the attack against the folk culture characteristic of the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries was renewed with vigor. While religious enthusiasm grew, social life beyond a family level was restricted. Perhaps, the years of destitution and the ever present threat of famine had made hospitality a luxury which few could afford. Perhaps, it was no longer possible for the people to provide whiskey and food for large numbers at a funeral or a wedding. The local ministers assert that the changes were due to the activities of the "Men." It would seem that the "Men" were

[48] MacInnes, op. cit., p. 211.

agents for what have been called "rites of intensification."[49] They restored the equilibrium of interaction by creating new behavior patterns. This was probably particularly true during the famine, when the people's relatives and friends were dying and emigrating in large numbers. While the ceilidh, an evening of spinning folk tales, singing, and dancing, was condemned, and the children of parents who would not conform to the dictates of one minister and the "Men" were refused baptism, prayer meetings and other church services were providing emotional outlets.[50]

Like the Welsh,[51] the Skye crofters found the Bible retold much of their own past history and their present difficulties. As the "Men" preached from Scripture and interpreted the meaning, often using allegorical interpretations, of the Word, the people became familiar with a story which was strikingly similar to their own. The present social and economic conditions were but a presage of the coming dissolution. It was all there in the Old Testament, in the books of Judges, Kings, Chronicles, Psalms, and Prophets. The omen was all the more vivid because the transgressors in the Bible lived a life much like the crofters. Both the ancient peoples and the Skyemen had a pastoral economy, a patrilineal family structure,

---

[49]Eliot D. Chapple and Carleton S. Coon, Principles of Anthropology (New York: Henry Holt and Co., 1942), pp. 399-400.

[50]Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticane, Vol. VII, p. 166; and Norman MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 14-15.

[51]Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

ruled by elders, and a heritage which had never admitted compact, non-rural population centers. These basic cultural values and patterns were given religious sanction.

Year by year throughout this period the following and the influence of the "Men" increased. As the ministers were moved, especially as the old hereditary families of ministers closely related to the old gentry were replaced by ministers from the people,[52] the "Men" became influential in the Church as elders. Now they could not only exhort the people but also judge them, by determining who was worthy of communion and whose children might be baptized. The strength of their control, however, did not require holding office. In Duirinish where an old moderate minister remained, Communion had not been celebrated for eleven years in 1840, and there were 200 unbaptized children.[53] Many preferred to walk miles to worship under an evangelical minister rather than put themselves in peril by hearing the local moderate minister. Dissension was becoming a significant factor and was paving the way for personal secession from the Church. As the official Church was weakened, the stage was set for the Disruption, but we shall leave that for the following period.

Summary. The second period of the modern epoch saw the continuation of the trends established in the initial period. The process of commercialization was carried one step further. The old runrig system was replaced by the crofting system.

---

[52] Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

[53] NSA, pp. 354-355.

alien to their heritage. There was little local need for roads and steamships, but they were paving the way for the final stage in commercialization, the conversion of the island into sheep farms. 175 178 621

The record suggests that the culture was suffering from disorganization and the society had been threatened by disintegration. The Revival, which began at the close of the initial period, became full blown. This movement confirms what the record suggests. A new pattern of social behavior and religious life came into being. The traditional secular patterns of interaction were being replaced by patterns of sacred interaction. New values, new statuses, and new roles were evolving to give religious sanction to the old patterns. The result was an esoteric religious hierarchy. The religious leaders, both the "Men" and the ministers, were coming from the people rather than the old hereditary families who had been closely related to the gentry. Religion replaced the clan as the focus for the culture. The similarity of the story unfolded in the Bible and the past and present conditions of the crofters made the presage of the coming dissolution vivid. By the end of the period, dissension within the Church had become a significant factor and was paving the way for individual secession. The third period of the modern era was to witness more than a social and economic transformation; there was to be religious schism. 175 178 182 771 786 [793] [793] [793] ability to move their listeners. Friday is a day of self-examination and prayer. A fellowship meeting is held. The senior minister gives the sermon. The local minister follows the sermon with a few lines of psalm, which the precentor will chant for the congregation to sing, and calls upon one of the "elect" to prepare a question. After the singing has finished, an elder of the host church presents his "question." The "question" is a line from Scripture which relates to human experience, which relates to their experience as pastoral-agriculturalists. The remaining "Men," customarily visitors from other kirks, speak to the question, giving "marks" (examples) which distinguish between those who possess Christian virtues and those who profess the virtues essential for salvation. The speakers interpret the meaning of the line, it is only a single verse, often using allegorical interpretations. They are not supposed to tell about their own spiritual experience of conversion. To the contrary, their discussion is intended to have significance for all present. At the end of three or four hours of "speaking to the question," the junior minister sums up what has been said and, infrequently, makes any necessary corrections. 794 796

In addition to establishing an emotional atmosphere of revivalism and the tempo of interaction between the visitors and the local congregation, the fellowship meeting introduces the venerable old men of neighboring churches to the local people. Their prestige extends beyond their own neighborhood and congregation. Their ability becomes a topic of conversation [786] [808]

else the spouse is likely to lose status. 426 884

The most powerful of all agents for social control are the old men of the neighborhood. Through their position in the church, a religious sanction for their prestige status, they enforce conformity to the norms of behavior which religion has sanctioned either positively or negatively. No one, nor any group, has been successful in questioning the right of these venerable men to maintain their habits and statuses which have been preserved over the generations. The baptism of a man's children and his own salvation depends on acceptance of the authority of the elders, for they will be his judges. 426 892 [894]

As far as the contemporary scene is concerned, there is no anomie. The content of the culture has been greatly modified, but the form, the underlying distinctive pattern, has been preserved. We are dealing with a single tradition in which the norms of behavior and the sanctions for them have remained common and clear. This is all the more striking because there have been periods in which cultural and social disintegration threatened to overwhelm the Sgriathanach. This brings us back to the role of religion in preserving cultural continuity. 182 178

Locmis and Beegle have employed Durkheim's theory to analyze the growth and spread of fundamentalist religious sects in contemporary United States.[16] They conclude: "It is no mere coincidence that various types of emotional religious sects are now among the most rapidly expanding 171 182 771 786 781

[16] Loomis and Beegle, Rural Social Systems, pp. 401-407.

religious groups." As a result of urbanization almost all rural areas have experienced the pangs of social mobility and few have escaped unscathed from a clash with the economic forces which impinge from the outside. This predisposes the people to the appeal of an emotional religion, revivalism. Frequently, the sect becomes uncompromising and rejects the outside world in an attempt to bolster group security. The sequence of events on Skye enables me to add that the sect can also reject a great deal of the former content of the culture. Be that as it may, the authors show how emotional religious movements restore or replace meaningful patterns of interaction among groups whose social systems have deteriorated. Revivalism is a counter agent for anomie. 171 182 771 786 781 [571]

The first period of social and cultural disequilibrium which the Sgriathanach experienced may be placed in the first half of the nineteenth century, with a climax around 1840. To paraphrase Loomis and Beegle, it was no mere coincidence that an emotional religious movement should have appeared and found so many converts. The closing years of the eighteenth century had witnessed numerous changes in the content of the culture and the collapse of the old social heirarchy. While these events doubtlessly had an influence on all levels of the society, it was not until the turn of the century that they broke forth upon the masses. Within a decade a revival had reached effective proportions. This was a time of estate reorganization. The tacksmen, the traditional leaders, were quickly disappearing. The runrig farm was being abolished. Sheep were beginning to replace men in one parish (Bracadale). 175 178 771 786 781 182

We know these and the other changes of this period. Significantly, however, there was no simple correlation of revivalism and population change. The Revival began during a time of population growth and emigration; it reached effective proportions during a period when emigration seems to have almost stopped; and it found its culmination during years marked by destitution and the beginning of depopulation. No purpose will be served by repeating what I have already said about the nature of the changes which accompanied the coming of the dynamic, evangelical message. It is sufficient to emphasize that the ministers and the Men reinforced the desirable fabric of the culture and gave the culture a new focus. 175 178 182 771 786

The second period of anomie on Skye is less well marked. It appeared at the end of the "Clearances." Again destitution gripped the island. Although the vital, emotional religion had enabled the people to bear the hardships of the "Clearances" without overt resistance, they now openly defied the landlords and the state. More than a series of government commissions and committees came to Skye. A still more intense religion loomed on the horizon to reaffirm the focus of the culture. Once again it was no mere coincidence that the new church should have found ready acceptance by the people in the areas of greatest unrest, the areas which required the presence of police and Royal Marines. It was a fact of no little significance that the new denomination should have been founded on the Isle of Skye, the area of greatest unrest in all the Highlands. 175 178 182 771 786

Whatever signs there were of social or cultural disorganization, or threatened disintegration, in the nineteenth century they have disappeared. Steward's theory that folk societies do not entirely disappear but are rather modified by way of a readaptation to the higher level of socio-cultural organization of which they become a part is borne out by the evidence from the Isle of Skye.[17] At the same time, on the basis of events in the culture history of the Sgriathanach, I would qualify his theory by introducing a new condition. Isolated, relatively simple, kinship oriented societies and cultures which must achieve a reintegration if they are to preserve their continuity readapt, not only to the higher socio-cultural level, but also to the older way of life. 175 178 182 771 786 [121]

In conclusion, I regard Skye as a community which has maintained a continuity of culture despite marked population change. The continued distinctiveness has been made possible by a reintegration of the culture and a restoration of the network of relationships which make for harmonious living together. As in any socio-cultural group which has passed through periods of threatened disintegration, the joints of repair may be weak. Conflicts are tending to appear. The crofter, who has refused to fully adapt to commercialism, is seasonally faced with a variety and succession of tasks which no agriculturalist in the wider society would tolerate. There is the desire of the youth, who are too few in numbers to form a sodality, for a share in the mundane pleasures of 178 182 [161] [571]

[17] Steward, Area Research, p. 111; see also Wagley and Harris, op. cit., p. 441.

787

787 REVELATION AND DIVINATION--practices reflecting anxiety about the future and often also a sense of inspiration; quest for visions and guardian spirits; hallucinatory revelations; communication with spirits (e.g., through spirit possession, through inspired oracles, through mediums); prophecy; clairvoyance; acquiring mystic insight through concentration and contemplation; interpretation of dreams; omens and their interpretation; divinatory practices and techniques (e.g., haruspicy, hepatoscopy, necromancy, scapulimancy, scrying, sortilege, astrology); etc. See also:

Personality disorders	168	Cult of the dead	769
Judicial oaths and ordeals	606	Guardian spirits	776
Revelation and divination in the treatment of diseases	755	Diviners, seers, and mediums	791
Omens of death	763	Ideas about dreams	850

*159 is watching. My boyfriend tells me that I shouldn't go 781 to church regularly and then all of a sudden show up in 829 a pub on Saturday night. It confuses people. The Bible says you can't have two masters.

"There are only two kinds of people in this village. You're either curamach or you're not. If you get the curam, all of a sudden you've got a lot of friends. If you had a friend who got the curam, all of a sudden she's no longer your friend. She just asks you if you've prayed today, and acts like she's feeling sorry for you. If your parents are curamach and your father is an elder, you've got it made in this place. Domhnuill Iain Dasher's daughter was as slim and beautiful as a model but she was never chosen as Miss West Side at the dances. Her father wasn't a member of the church. He always spoke his mind, and people called him an idiot.

*159 "There are definite symptoms of conversion. A person
781 who's been looking bored in church suddenly begins to pay attention. The women go all weepy. The men sigh. They wait around outside the church and don't leave so quickly. You can see them shaking hands with the converted. You can predict their conversion months in advance.

*159 "I had a dream last year, of a line of people going 791 down the aisle of the church, all dressed in white like to 787 a wedding. Only they weren't wearing veils. I realized

*159 later that these were all people who eventually got the 781 curam. The only conversion I didn't expect was Morrie 787 Bheag. I saw her one night crying outside the church, and knew her time had come.

"In the dream I was at the very end of the line, only I wasn't wearing a white dress. I was naked, and kept trying to cover myself.

*159 "Not a day passes that I don't think of death. I 781 want to pray, but I don't know who to pray to. I've been [761] going to church regularly now, sort of hoping and sort of being afraid that I'll find the answer. I've read too much, and I met too many kinds of people while I was working in Glasgow. I didn't live near other people from Shawbost when I was in Glasgow. I got to know Jews, tinkers, Catholics, and Jehovah's Witnesses. The world is full of different religions. I believe that you can convert to a religion, from to Buddhism or to Christianity, but not to a church like the Free Church or the Church of Scotland. This place is called Tir an t-soisgeul where the true gospel is preached, but the whole world should be called that."

Ruaridh Dan

*159 Ruaridh Dan was married in January and began to work
288 as a warper in the Shawbost mill the following October, just after the end of World War II. He had been weaving

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

171 trouble. "Everything seems to go wrong"; and the 796 peasant falls asleep at night in fear of ills to come. First in his dreams and next in his day-dreams, these take shape
191 as an offended, hostile 'spirit'. The spirit of the place
796 —of the place-work—has become angry. So also, if the peasant's wife pursues her household work 'in the right 787 spirit', then in her dreams and reveries she is helped by kindly presences; but if not, things go wrong, objects mislaid have been taken by 'someone' and a tormenting house-imp plays havoc with her home. These figures of day-dreams were involuntary and 'shady', without the clarity either of earthly things or of heavenly visions. Yet they personified moods of real significance.

796 The Uruisg of the Gael helped about the farm and household—like the Tonte of Sweden and the Lubber-fiend of Merrie England in Milton's L'Allegro. Each task may have its own symbol. Of one of these, the cattle-tending Glaistic of the Highlands and Isles, Brock quotes from Mrs. E. Carmichael Watson: "Harmless and lovable as a rule,—especially in the older stories—in a few of the later stories she is represented as irritable . . . .
796 The more recent stories about the Glaistic are rather
198 unpleasant. She no longer plays with the children or sings rhymes—she has degenerated into a kind of female ruffian. Probably it would be nearer the truth to say that the change has been in the Highlands rather than in the Glaistic." Brock comments, "This last remark is signif-
[155] icant. The increasing irritability of tutelary nature-deities means that the spirit of the old economic life—the equilibrium between Highlanders and Highlands—is being upset"; and so too is that between Highlander and Highlander! In Lewis Ni Chlach Urlar (She (or It) of the Hearth Stone), who personified domestic strife, makes trouble; and neighbours come to suffer too!

794 Prerequisite to an understanding of the role of religion
779 in ordering human relationships for the Sgiathanach is an awareness of a distinctive and all-pervading feature of church membership. When we briefly discussed theology, we noted the prominence of the principles of "Foreordination" and "Effectual Calling." While many Scots may pay them lip service, the Skyemen firmly believe in them. Because of their unfaltering belief and the strict interpretation of "Effectual Calling,"
[761] the membership of all churches is very limited. Admission [828] to the numbers of the "elect," those who have received a visitation from the Holy Spirit and experienced a soul-saving change, can only be gained by attaining the status of old age. Since "election" depends on manifesting a steadfast conformity to the behavior patterns approved by 794 religion, "elect" are all well past sixty. Adherents, who support the church in every way but have no voice in kirk affairs and do not take Communion, far outnumber these "elect" members. For example, among the religiously homogeneous Free Presbyterians of Glendale, there are 14 members in a congregation of over 300. In Kilmuir, a neighborhood with a rapidly aging population, there are 58 members of the Church of Scotland in a congregation of 211. Portree, as we know, contains a large number of newcomers who are affiliated with the Church of Scotland. Having been brought up in a different religious atmosphere and being relatively free from gossip to which the convert is exposed, they have come forward as members. Thus, the Church of Scotland has

788

788 RITUAL--practices reflecting relief of anxiety through performance of repetitive or obsessionally precise symbolic acts; compulsive gestures (e.g., sign of the cross); repetitive behavior (e.g., tolling of bells, burning of candles, sprinkling with holy water); recital of stereotyped formulas (e.g., blessings); mechanical praying (e.g., with rosary, with prayer wheel); recitation of litanies and liturgies (e.g., credos, masses); processions; making of pilgrimages; etc. See also:

Propitiation	785	Ritual numbers	803
Elaboration of rituals into extended ceremonies	796

NORTH RONA

Though the island is but a great lump of rock, Dean Monro says 195#
that in his time an abundance of corn was grown, by delving 191 only, and an abundance of cheese-grass for sheep. The island also 251 produced a fine bere-meal which the islanders stuffed into the 187 skins of sheep and sent, as their rent or tribute, to MacLeod of Lewis, along with mutton and fowls.

Of St Ronan's Chapel, still to be seen and reckoned the oldest 181
Christian building in Britain remaining in its original state, 195#
Monro says: 'As the ancients of the country allege, they leave a 196 spade and a shull [shovel] when any man dies, and upon the 204 morrow find the place of the grave marked with a spade, as they 194 allege.' In 1695 Martin wrote of Rona in 1680:

The people repeat the Lord's Prayer, Creed, and the Ten Com- 198
mandments in the Chapel every Sunday morning. They have 194 cows, sheep, barley, oats, and live a harmless life, being perfectly 194 ignorant of most of those vices that abound in the world. They know nothing of money or gold, having no occasion for either;
they neither sell nor buy, but only barter for such little things as they want; they covet no wealth, being fully content and satisfied with food and raiment; though at the same time they are very precise in the matter of property among themselves; for none of them will by any means allow his neighbour to fish within his property . . . They concern not themselves about the rest of mankind Lind except the inhabitants in the north part of Lewis. They take 152 their surname from the colour of the sky, rainbow, and clouds. 162
There are only five families in this small island, and every tenant 162 has his dwelling-house, a barn, a house where their bere effects 194 are preserved, a house for their cattle, and a porch on each side to keep off the rain or snow. Their houses are built with stone and thatched with straw . . . When any one of them comes to Lewis, which is seldom, they are astonished to see so many people.

Then came tragedy. Somehow, probably off a wreck, a swarm 195# of rats landed on the island and consumed virtually all the crop. 231
A few months later, some seamen landed and robbed the islanders 145 of their only bull. These misfortunes and the want of supplies 164 from Lewis for the space of a year occasioned the death of all 195# that ancient race of people.' Some years afterwards a new colony 162 was sent to the island. In 1796, at the time of the Old Statistical

585
• T69
852
88

[For additional general information on runes and rites at various phases of the life-cycle, see category 796, pp. 158-159, passim.]

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

(a) SACRAMENTS AND RUNES OF LABOUR, IN FAMILY, TEAM AND TOWNSHIP

• 188 Labour given to the winning of food, shelter and 221 clothing was begun and blessed by poetic, rhythmic prayers or 'runes'. The words were usually reinforced by a symbolic gesture or simple rite. By help of the runes the people sought spiritual preparation for work, invoked aid and finally consecrated the thing made for use.

271 Wherever work was rhythmic it was carried on by 461 working songs. Songs of hunting or herding resulted the hill and pasture, or praised the landscape with an exuberant [171] love unequalled in any tongue we know but old Irish, with which Scots Gaelic is so closely linked, or Welsh, of which the nature classics are linked to the epics of the Welsh and seventh century thought to be composed in Strathclyde.[1]

288 Yet it was not those but the rhythmic prayers or runes
461 that obtained labour blessing. They are so parallel [171] among many peoples, but those of the Gael possess rare fullness of meaning and beauty of imagery, words and form.
When labour was ended, the food won or the clothing made was consecrated for the use of family and friends, of the poor and the stranger-guest.

288 In the struggle for food, the sowing and reaping of corn
211 ranked highest, followed by its parching and grinding (Carmina, Nos. 88-92). The preparation of seed for its sowing was accompanied by its consecration, an cuireagnadh siol. Similarly for reaping: "Laying his bonnet on the [113] ground, the father of the family took up his sickle and,

[1] Kenneth H. Jackson prints an given in which a prose translation Ireland in Britain (1950, pp. 1-53). Other Welsh poetic materials will be found in Hector Gwitian (Ed.), The Book of Crisp and Ben, vol. 1, 1951.

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

[175] at midsummer came joyous departure to the shielings.
784/ Michaelmas at the end of September was a festival of 226 horsemanship, when the ponies, rested and well fed, could race madly along the machar. As long nights brought in the winter, Hallowe'en came on 31st October, and on the morrow the solemnity of All Hallows (Samhain). On 11th November came St. Martin's Day, and in December
Christmas once again.

[175] As the men put out to sea, prayers were chanted [182] to Father, Son and Holy Spirit and to the Disciples, "the Fishers of Men". While some of these might be individual (Carmina, Nos. 117-120), others were chanted by the skipper at the helm, as celebrant, the crew giving the [118] responses (No. 121). As self-sustained community life [179] encouraged by a few clergy, Catholic and Protestant. At [179] the start of the season's fishing in Eriskay, Fr. Allan [179] Macdonald went out in the boats and chanted a rune brought 226 to him by elders, the men responding.[1] One of the 'Ocean
[188] Blessings' or prayers recorded by Carmichael (No. 119) [179] is found in Fr. Carswell's Liturgy in Gaelic, of 1567, and is quoted by Martin as "a form of prayer used by many of the islanders at sea after the sails are set".[2] Most of Carswell's Liturgy was translated from that of John Knox, but not this prayer, of which the earlier and later-recorded version are the same, except for one revealing difference.

[118] 1 'In so doing,' Father Allan[1] may have been restoring a pious service [179] of a older culture. Of Gaelic James was the language of the Celtic Church [179] and school in Irish Lindisfarne, and of the liturgy of Carmichael.
In the house of his Protestant parents the young priests were hospitably received.

[2] Pages are Unregistrie (ed. M'Lauchlan, 1862, and Morch, 1905 (edition of 1934, pp. 186-189). A new text of Carswell is in preparation by the Scottish Gaelic Texts Society.

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

175 As recorded by Carswell (and Martin), this prayer, 226 after calling upon the Trinity, tells that the Three-in-One, over living, guided Clan Israel through the Red Sea,
• 188 brought Jonah to land from the belly of the great ocean
175 beast, and led Paul and his companions through storm
of the sea; after these three stanzas it closes with a general supplication. As heard by Carmichael three centuries after Carswell, the first three stanzas are identical, but they are [539] followed by the culmination. Recalling the hour "when
the storm poured on the Sea of Galilee . . .", the poem goes on, "Be Thou, King of the elements, extend at our behn, And lead us in peace to our voyage's end. . . ."
It is significant that the Reformation Liturgy includes the story of Clan Israel's flight from their enemies whose drowning forms the climax of the tale, and the absurd
miracle of the whale—a late interpolation in the convincing original Hebrew poem on Jonah's voyage—but that it omits the Christian climax, of the storm allayed by Christ, the Helmsman of peace.

Another fishers' rune (No. 120) concludes, "To whom trembles the voice of the wind? To whom become tranquil strait and ocean? To Jesus Christ, Chief of each saint, Son of Mary, Root of Victory." These lines remind they refer to the Old Testament, dwell lovingly on the New.
Their thought is of the fishermen friends, Peter, Andrew
and John, of the Baptist and of Christ's mother, of Saint Martin and later apostles to the Gael, and the Archangels, and of Christ, Rock of rocks (Carmaig Ail), and the Trinity.
These bring strength in danger, peace after strife with the elements, remembrance of the poor, and fellowship to the crews. Peace and strength pervade the "Dawn Prayer of

[1] R. C. Moulton, Modern Reader's Bible (revised, 1935, pp. 1431-1434; cf. Note to Mark xii. 26, p. 1898).

(a) SACRAMENTS OF THE HEARTH AND THE PLAIDING

• 188 For shelter and life by the hearth there are noble runes.
547 The house with its household was blessed, when newly built by a bridegroom's friends, yearly after its thatching, 364/ or regularly at nightfall. The blessing was said by the 226 goodman in the presence of his family and helper-neighbours, or intimately by either of the parents as they went to rest (Carmina, Nos. 44, 45).

In the darkness of the 'black house' the fire was a [364] focus of warmth and light, of life and union. "The Blessing of the Living" (the Fire) was said by the house-288 wife as she rekindled or, rather, uncovered the sleeping 547 embers when she rose. Those who, tired or in want, 364/ have ever lit a fire in darkness may best feel, in her words, 364 how the glow without kindles the light within.
533[1]

"I will kindle my fire today in presence of the angels . . .
Without malice . . . or fear . . . of any one under the sun,
But the Holy Son of God to shield me."

And then (as the dim glow lightens and warms): "God, kindle Thou in my heart within, A flame of love to my neighbour, To my foe, to my friend, to my kindred all,
To the brave, to the knave, to the thrall. . . . From the lowliest thing that liveth To the name that is highest of all (On rug an t-olam is airde)." In spirit this reaches universality; its verse-form is purest poetry (Carmina, No. 82).

In the covering, smothering or smoo'ring of the embers at night, the following was said to me not long ago

[1] Songs of the Hebrides, vol. i, pp. ix-x.
" Ar ainm, a-mach, a-mach . . ." " Dean na h-uaighneach". (An Gaidheal, Dec. 1941.)

(in Gaelic) by a housewife in a Catholic isle, as our friend ship matured. It had been said nightly at her fire by her father-in-law until his death (not long before), which had come after that of his wife. "I amou's the fire tonight, As Mary's Son amongst Her Angels watches and sleeps. Be it well with all our household. Who are on this floor? Peter and Paul. Who are on this floor? Light-giver Mary and her Son. This God's lamb have borne, And the Angel spoke: 'The Angel at my house door, Until the close day come tomorrow. Amen." In this simple, valiant shrove, memory still lives in the folks!

In these runes, the key to the words "as Mary's Son and as Mary did, in their day" is the example of filial duty, of wifely and motherly care. In popular tradition "Mary's Mary" during periods of decadence in the Roman Church, the virtual banishment of Christ's mother from Protestantism has led to a loss deeper than Presbyterian Scotland has yet realized. Her name is a fitting reminder, both of a woman's part in the spiritual life of the home, and of a cosmic self-discipline and affection: in a word, of mutual love.

For, Word, the sheep were blessed in the Lamb's Clipping Blessing". There were blessings of the loom and of weaving and weaving; and after neighbourly falling on "washing" of the finished web, came its consecration. The wash was solemn and sanctified in its turn, as the prayer: Carmichael's own fine poem translations should be studied (Carmina, vol. i, xxxiii-xxxiv; vol. ii, pp. 88-99). Yet, those being available, we quote rhythmic

I. O. Ber: Allan Macdonald, Cuairt-shoisneachd, p. 107; Carmina Gadelica, Vol. I, pp.[illegible]; and Mr. Kenneth Macleod's Songs of the Hebrides, vol. ii, p. 50. Sacred lore is not to be polluted up lightly by a stranger. It was only upon the second of my professional visits to Lewis that I was given this good omen; would advert and import her knowledge, treasured in the secret places of her heart.

venues to suggest the significant poetic form of the original.

"The Clipping Blessing", being addressed to the creatures, is simple in thought and form; and its opening may be rendered

O come back woolly, though now you're shorn,
By May, my sack a lamb have borne,
May lovely Brigit with you make,
And Mary her sustain you now!

It goes on to beg protection against wolf and bear, as well as fox, hoodie crow and eagle, and closes with the opening couplet.

From start to finish the work must be true. The wool is from the sheep they reared—it is not got by "thigging"; as a feudal vassal, by "cuddling" it from tenants; the yarn is sound with no odds of thread from worn-out cloth; the web is their very own, the Christ-given gift of God (Carmina, i, 106, 113, 119). Only so can the goodwife's web be beautiful, full, and blest. "Thread upon of thread, my love never kept nor shall keep. Every hue in the bow-of-the-shower has gone through my fingers beneath the cross." The weaver, with her household, and her hairns about her, to be clear in mind must be calm in heart as, thread by thread, she prepares the warp. To start, she chooses Saint Columba's Day.

Thursday of blessings
For warping and washing.
The Cross to Columba
To number . . .

Ward away the evil eye!
Or evil will, or ugly thought Consecrate, O Lord in Thy Lodge,
My Loom . . .

Make smooth and even the warp of my loom
And great the blessing of Thy Son, Amen.
On all who here find shelter and room
And dwelling . . .

Thine arm be round each woman here
Who watches this web of mine . . .
O aid her in her hour of need . . .

Keep the flesh she was with Sweet and unscathed in the cloth
And weed in grief, to weave and kin.
For weal . . .

Even now in Harris or the Lewis, a brief good wish may be uttered—"a Health and strength to the weaver!" as the prepaying woman and the maiden, for the pay in the web was finally consecrated. Each of the family who was to wear a portion of it in turn, and the weaver herself, who had the consecration (Carmina, No. 113).

Then the Sabbath Lord weaver of my web
Nowe is wounded and bound
May the saintly shield of the Lord be to me.

The significance of this gift of hard-won cloth can now be seen, first for the family but next for the neighbourly town. We can understand how each "set" or pattern of tartan stood for the spirit of the family and the group of kin and household, and, in the Highlands, Harris and north to the Gael when the tartan, with "the Highland dress . . . or any other tartan before the Union, forbidden" by any man or boy" in the Highlands. Women were still allowed to wear it, it was true, but the dress ceased to be a symbol of community. Yet, the tartan was confined to one sex. As a single exception, the Highland dress was retained for soldiers, but the uniformity of the regiment ceased to signal upon one strand of clothing, that

Roman Catholicism was far less complete than that ultimately brought about by Protestantism—Episcopalian or Calvinistic.

At least twenty-five churches, chapels and tiny oratories are standing in Harris or Lewis and his list is incomplete (1934, p. 106). Harris and its islets also had their complete share of "temples" in addition to the priory church of Rodel. We may perhaps assume the Bishop of the Reformation Lewis had a population of some 4000 persons, or less, and that Protestant worship was confined to oratories in inhabited areas. If so, then one church or temple; or an oratory to every 1000 of people, for Christian, Invasions, repeated destruction and prolonged intrigue by the Norsemen or the English kings, led to, and intensified, the Celtic Church's lack of a parish system; and, therefore, regrown had followed the' Reformation.

When the people were too distant from priests (and later ministers) to hear the Lessons, they had their own Word orally. Their power of retaining memorable phrasing, and of using it, grew, in proportion, to their strengthened memory. For example, "the Ten Commandments, and a Hymn are recorded in Fr. Allan Macdonald's little collection, "as given by the Old Women of Barra" (Cuairt-shoisneachd, Dublin, 1934, p. 65). Moses, had he understanded Gaelic, would have protested at the omission of the Second Commandment, but no religious Gael or Eye would. Yet, Moses, had he used for it, being unafraid that a Christian could bow down to a golden calf. Believing with Solomon, that a craftsman's work is his prayer, the artist-monks held that the "image" should stimulate, though never replace, God's grace and, may even quicken their communal life with His in whose "image" mankind was made. As for the number 'ten, it was adopted by Christ, in embodying the Tenth Commandment into two parts! Thus the letter of the Mosaic Law, he is frankly admitted, is modified! There are also extensions of certain Commandments. Yet, recalling Jesus's insistence upon the unspoken thought which prompts man's conduct, one may feel that Christ's Second Commandment, "Thou Shalt not commit idolatry", is strengthened by the Gaelic paraphrase: "Avoid all thought, or sale, or deed immoral (mi-dheacach, immodest, or vicious)". Yet, Christ, "Blessed are the hearts of the pure see sin of truth". And the paraphrase of the Fourth, rendered in Gaelic, "Keep the Sabbath Day Holy", completes the Commandment as it was obeyed by Jesus His friends at the Passover, and by Celts and Roman at Easter: "Keep the Sabbath Day Holy and Festivals of Christ, and Saints of Christ, and Saints of Virgin Mary, and Saints of Lig and Holy Cross of Christ." With prayer and fuel and barging free.

Life on the Isles, in the Highlands, in the glens,
light o'er grey-green sea and hill-side
Life on the Isles, in the Highlands, in the glens,
the hour God's Son came down to earth.

OO THE CYCLE OF LIFE

The stages in life's sequence are marked by noble rites of baptism, initiation in adolescence, betrothal and marriage, celebrated in the community's assembly, and rituals throughout life and, at its close, of farewell. As might be fitting, the beginning of life is marked by another man or woman: to a child by a parent or elder; to the young and strong by the wise; and, to the weak and sick, by the healer. And in the past, especially in trial, the "soul-friend" ministered to the dying, the sick, the child-crazed.

Lewis, and Harris, and Holy Spirit the name placed three drops as the days lengthened, and, in the Gaelic idiom, as the old style, it may be called "The Rune of the World's Light".

The world, eve come the Sun of God,
Jesus Christ, a big fellow;
Void of sun, moon or star,
void of body, heart or form.

"Thou Mary Mother lovely kneeled, and gave Her breast Being holy;
Darkness and mass were driven after,
the world's work and its gain.

Light on the land, the deep stream
from sullen pool to ocean stream;
Light on the land, the deep stream
with praise and fuel and barging free.

Life on the Isles, in the Highlands, in the glens,
light o'er grey-green sea and hill-side
Life on the Isles, in the Highlands, in the glens,
the hour God's Son came down to earth.

The Gael had found the grandeur of the Old Testament and the tenderness of the Gospels of the New; for then the light of dawn on sea and snow awoke the light within. A single theme, perhaps of the Gaelic temperament, runs through the Gaelic poetic, perhaps of one original poem.[1] Charted

[1] It is interesting to compare this quiet legend with the less Roman Catholic version of Mr. Kenneth Macleod, "Mary Mother lovely kneeled" (Songs of the Hebrides, vol. ii, p. 50). Mr. Macleod's version is "Mary the domestic lady Saint" (Bedeth). Mannaigh B. James (translated), Ceithir Ceisteanna, Dublin, 1933.

[2] Gaelic: Ceartas, "Justice", "Rightness", "Rightness of Law and Constituted Authority, Law &c." Ceartas dhi, Being of life," or "of Constituted Authority." I. 13, "Ceartas dhi" (Being of Life) is "of Constituted Authority." I. 13, "Ceartas dhi" (Being of Life) is "Being of Life." Ceartas is an adjective and noun "The hour (or era) God's Son came in (among us)," a noun, or not a doubtful.

in the kirtch!" and counsels her to be hospitable yet wise, and courageous though calm: to be frank yet tactful, dignified though kind. The themes of this ode's meditation were recall the virtues of a wife enumerated immemorially in the Wisdom literature of the Book of Proverbs. For in that, too, there is mention of "strength and dignity, wisdom and kindness" (Ceartas, 1. 7), and the poet are not forgotten as the wife goes tirelessly about her work, sets her servants to their tasks and sets her merchandise at a profit. Yet she attends to spiritual, as well as to the wife's work and its gain: reveal the writer as a shrewd citizen seeking to train a wife to contain, and contain, herself, and, within her husband's private profit and public honour as a most important factor in the life of the Gael. The Kirtch"—sign or woman, one cannot tell—almighty of conduct not for its help, or for what it can do, but for its virtue, and dwelt upon motive, mind and heart.[2]

To tide over the supreme crisis of childbirth the mother and child were surrounded with tender courage and calm. The need was the greater before modern midwifery. In Barbarism and in age as in infancy, childbirth became tending a difficult case of childbirth, anxious and powerless without the skilled assistance of a midwife or older relative. The patient's mother first filled a small basin with water into which the midwife placed a small gift of sterling, sewn in childhood and growing through life, ripen as grandchildren grown in from which, in turn, a ring or play to listen and learn. When manuscripts or books were unknown, oral readings rarely heard, and the people literate, teaching could only

[1] Gaelic: Ceartas.

[2] Ceartas, vol. ii, Home; cf. Hist. 148-150, etc. Encircling or encasing the mother and child with tender care and without the fuel needed in winter, cf. Hebrides.

[3] For contemporary record, descriptions of extracts have appeared in the Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Inverness, and available in seminary, St. Hardness.

[4] Ceartas, vol. ii, Home, Good Fire.

given at Christmas; in Lewis, Christmas is identified with Catholicism, and is an insignificant event in comparison with New Year. To give two examples, a New Year's dance is given, but not a Christmas dance; and the mills continue working on Christmas if it occurs on a week day, but close for at least two days at New Year's. In Shawbost, bannag is defined as a party associated with Hogmanay (New Year's eve).

7 In the recent past, until about ten years ago, the boys dressed in women's clothes or wore masks. They took turns wearing a cow's skin as they went from house to house. In each house, the boy wearing the skin was hit by the others as he chanted the rann na bannag (rhyme of the bannag):

> Here I come again renewing Christmas.
> (Or, in another version: This is the New Year's night
> I'll take the bread without the butter,
> And the butter without the bread,
> And the cheese by itself.
> Then we won't be empty-handed.
> One thing I refuse is a mangy potato.
> It gives a heavy feeling.
> It's not healthy.
> If you don't give me my bit of butter and my lump of cheese,
> Everything you possess will be gotten by the crows on St. Patrick's Day.

As the balaich na bannagan left the house in which hey had received gifts, they blessed it. All food and oney was given to the woman who prepared the bannag.

Today children tend to receive money more often than ood, and use some of the money to buy sweets at the post

789

789 MAGIC--practices reflecting confidence in the ability to manipulate supernatural forces; magical techniques of weather control (e.g., rain making); magical rites for increasing the food supply; exorcistic practices (e.g., driving off evil spirits with noise); potent formulas, incantations, and spells; curses; miracles; prevalent types of magic (e.g., imitative, contagious); concept of magical force; functions and social significance of magic; nonsupernatural magic (e.g., wonder-working, jugglery, legerdemain, fire-walking); etc. See also:

Magical rites in the food quest 22
Magic rites in agriculture 24
Magic rites in the reproductive cycle 84
Magic as entertainment 545
Magic rites in warfare 726
Sorcery, witchcraft, and evil eye 754
Therapeutic magic 751, 755
Magic rites at funerals 764
Luck magic 777
Concept of mana 778
Prevalence of nonlogical reasoning 811
Relation of magic to science 813
Love magic 832

581 "The most
584 important thing about courting was the land. If a girl
423 was going to get a croft, she could have the pick of anyone." Stories are told of broken alliances and the interference of parents, all related to the inheritance of the croft. For example, the father of a 70-year-old woman living today deserted the beautiful girl to whom he was engaged to marry a girl with a croft. "Never mind beauty, just a bit of land." A man would hike fourteen miles across the moor into town to bring back the jug of beer required for the reiteach (the dinner party announcing an intended marriage), only to find that the girl was having a reiteach with someone else.

233 Cattle were much more important than sheep in the early economic history of the Highlands. Scottish history is full of stories of cattle thieves, and of "the drove," in which large herds were driven to Lowland markets. The [789] most common examples of witchcraft concerned spells cast on cows. Many Lewismen still remember market days on Lewis, the day of the drove when cattle were herded into Stornoway from all parts of the island; when children were taken from school to help with the drive, and shopkeepers put up extra stalls for the occasion.

Until as recently as ten years ago, a form of transhumance was practiced on Lewis whereby the cattle

79

ESIASTICAL ORGANIZATION—general statements dealing with several ts of the organization of religion, i.e.; specialists, cult groups, and nstituted ceremonial.

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

175 Roman Catholicism was far less complete than that ulti-
791 mately brought about by Protestantism—Episcopalian or 798 Calvinist.
795 At least twenty-five churches, chapels and tiny oratories
175 are named by Martin in Lewis and his list is incomplete
(1934, p. 106). Harris and its islets also had their comple-
346 ment of 'temples', in addition to the priory church of [162] Rodel. We may perhaps assume that before the Reformation Lewis had a population of some 4000 persons,
or 1000 families, and contained some thirty chapels or [194] oratories in inhabited areas. If so, then one church or
'temple', on an average served thirty to thirty-five families, or six or seven farm-groups. Yet only the larger congregations at Eye, Stornoway, Ness or Uig and Rodel would normally be served by clergy; the people of smaller congregations would be without, for weeks and months or even years.

175 When the people were too distant from priests (and
• 79 later ministers) to hear the Lessons, they handed down
the Word orally. Their power of retaining memorable
[153] thought, even in prose, is still remarkable; and verse
175 strengthened memory. For example, 'the Ten Com-
788 mandments' paraphrased in rhyme are recorded in Fr.
779 Allan Macdonald's little collection, "as given by the God
of graces to Moses in the wilderness" (Na Faintean,
p. 62). Moses, had he understood Gaelic, would have protested at the omission of the Second Commandment,
but no sculptor of Iona, Rodel or Eye would have felt a need for it, being unafraid that a Christian could bow down to a golden calf. Believing, with Solomon, that a craftsman's work is his prayer, the artist-monks held that an 'image' should represent, though never replace, God's creation, and may even quicken our concept of the Creator

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

175 saint, a character so eminently Christ-like"[1] and to his 793 intimate beliefs, doctrine and wide influence. The same 159 Highland roots and deep charity characterised Dr. Norman Macleod, author of the popular classic, The Friend of the Gael (Caraid nan Gaidheal).

121 If a student of community ventures upon an interpretation of theology, it is because, to him, any attempt to understand "the relations of God to mankind" must take account of men's relations to one another. Ideas are transformed by human experience during economic and social revolutions, and in their turn they transform society. To make contact with reality, theology must regard mankind: it 175 must be integrated with sociology. Because of its close 178 bond with communal life, the religious spirit, recorded in 182 Gaelic lore, was jarred, almost overwhelmed, when community was shaken to its foundations by the commercial,
198 agricultural and industrial revolution. Happily, the value
• 79 of communal Christianity has been acknowledged both by Roman Catholics—notably (among Gaels) by the Rev.
Allan Macdonald of Eriskay—and by Protestants.[2] In the Scottish Presbyterian Church today, the movement which seems most deeply aware of the need for a new society has acknowledged its debt to communal tradition
where this has been best maintained, in the Isles.
Seeking to aid Christian endeavour, international and national, this movement has turned for inspiration to Iona.
[191] In Iona, of which the noble cathedral belongs to the Church of Scotland but is open for service to all denominations, Presbyterians have found a new symbol.

[113]

[1] Canon Vaughan, cited by the Rev. Norman Maclean (Scotsman, 21st Aug. 1943).

[2] "The Church should interpret the Love of God by a flaming zeal for the redress of the social order." (The Very Rev. Prof. John Baillie, Moderator of the Church of Scotland, at St. Andrews, 1943.)

791

791 MAGICIANS AND DIVINERS—specialists in magic (e.g., wonder workers, exorcists, magicians, fakirs); specialists in divination (e.g., astrologers, oracles, diviners, fortune tellers, seers, mediums); characteristics of each (e.g., personality, sex, training, garb); sources of power; prerogatives and disabilities; organisation; fees; etc. See also:

Magicians as entertainers	649	Divination	797
Witches, wizards, and sorcerers	794	Magic	799
Shamans and faith healers	795

ISLAND, WORK AND PEOPLE PT. I

184 Comparisons at the present day are most illuminating.
• [191] In the Hebrides one may pass from Calvinist Lewis-and-Harris to Catholic Barra, through South Uist, where Presbyterian and Roman Catholic dwell, side by side, in mutual respect. Although their home life, economy and language are the same, the influence of a comparatively [121] recent divergence in religion is marked. Such Island evidence, present and past, forces one to re-examine conclusions upon life in the Lowlands accepted until recently, and to seek for the truth upon earlier forms of life in common and for their meaning today throughout 'the North and West'.

195 Ancient elements of unity, and later ways in which 473 these were broken, adapted or remade, region by region, 427 are being unravelled. The Old Estate Plans, made at the outset of the agricultural revolution, show these immedi-621 ately before the re-planning of fields and farms (circa 1750–90). These plans also reveal the existence of still 198 earlier types, not otherwise recognisable even on the spot.
[184] With their rentals (when available) they reveal the ways in which old joint farms were placed under a single tenant, as in Lothian, or were split up among several tenants, as in Ayrshire.[1] From such geographical data, both the economic and the deeper social aspects of rural life emerge with new clarity. Such data may be linked to Planning Surveys of land and rural life for tomorrow.

621 Now, although so fundamentally equalitarian within 427 themselves, these hamlet communities of the Gael were subjected to the overlordship of a chief or laird, either [194] directly or through an intermediate gentleman-tenant, a [192] tacksman'. History, with archaeology read in history's [113] [1] For Lothian, see Arthur Geddes (1938 and 1951); for Ayrshire, see
J. H. G. Lebon, Scot. Geog. Mag., Vols. 62, 1945 (pp. 7-13); 63, 1946
(pp. 100-110). Further references in Bibliography.

792

792 HOLY MEN—prophets and messiahs; ascetics and anchorites; monks, friars, and nuns; monastic orders (e.g., mendicant, hermit, cenobite); monasteries and convents (e.g., organisation, activities); monastic rules (e.g., poverty, celibacy); characteristics, status, and means of support of holy men; etc. See also:

Celibacy	680	Colleges of austerity	778
Divine priests	645	Anchorites	786
Monastic movements	646	Oracles	797
Poverty and almsgiving	786

10 THE OTHER ISLANDS

361 THE continued evacuation of islands is a problem peculiar 162 to Scotland. In the eighteenth century some 8 per cent of *195 Scots lived on islands; today the figure is less than 2 per 178 cent. Island populations today account for about 30 per cent of 182 the total Highland (crofting counties) population. The difficulty for most islands is the relationship between population density and potential for economic development.

As though reflecting the relationship of man to man on Lewis-with-Harris—keeping together in community for survival—the other islands round the larger island mass have played some role at one time or another in recorded history. Most of the socially-significant islands of Harris have been described in Chapter 9. Lewis has very few, and these are mostly far-flung oceanic outliers.

North Rona

133 To begin at the northern point of the Lewis parish, about 45
131 miles NNE of the Butt of Lewis is North Rona, a block of horneblende schist with pegmatite intrusions. Though the island has [361] never figured in any Census reports, since the Census began, it has been inhabited from time to time. Of about 300 acres in extent, it is cliff-bound and reaches 355 ft at its highest point. It lies in a part of the Atlantic where a deep swell seems perpetual, and landings can be difficult.

361 Dean Monro comments: 'Towards the north northeist from *195 Lewis, three score myles of sea, lyes and little ile callit Roney, laiche maine land, inhabit and manurit be simple people, scant of ony religione.' The Dean's 'simple people' were no recent settlers.
They were in fact the continuation of a community which had inhabited North Rona for at least 700 years previously. Tradi-• [192] tion has it that the first inhabitant was St Ronan, who built a small monastic cell or hermitage there some time during the eighth century, but there may have been earlier inhabitants.

CH. VIII RELIGION AND SOCIAL CUSTOMS

[97] "The Iona Community is a Brotherhood of men within [94] the Church of Scotland seeking to find the implications of the Kingdom of God for modern society. During the summer months they worship, work and live together on [62] Iona, rebuilding the ruined Abbey on a co-operative basis.
Half the Brotherhood are young clergy pledged to work for two years in the difficult places of the cities (after three months in Iona), emphasising the place of the Church in the New Community that is emerging in the world. The other half are skilled artisans who desire to express their labour as a ministry within the Priesthood of all Believers and create—in the building—a microcosmic witness of how labouring is transformed when seen as a Sacrament.
The Brotherhood is based on Reformation principles.
[221] Several members of the Community are married. At present the artisans return to the ordinary labour market
in the winter time."[1]

[96] In the Iona Community, theology is linked to communal labour and the re-shaping of society; and its symbolic centre, Iona, is more than a literary name, or a historic ruin, to those who have set about rebuilding its cathedral tower, cloister and surrounding dwellings. Continuity is exemplified in its leader, the Rev. George F. Macleod, a descendant of Dr. Norman Macleod, the friend of McLeod Campbell. The significance of this Community to the theme of this chapter lies in the endeavour of its members to learn, by help of ancient native ways, new ways of Christian life in their own land. The attempt to link industrial Scotland, and lands beyond, to the Gaelic West, is a notable recognition of what Celtic Christianity, maintained and renewed by communal tradition, has yet to give the world.

[1] From the magazine of the Iona Community, The Circuit.

793

793 PRIESTHOOD—specialists in organized religious activities (e.g., priests, priestesses, clergyman, rabbis, mullahs); status and means of support; selection, training, and consecration; hierarchical organization (e.g., chief priests, bishops, cardinals, popes); prerogatives and disabilities of priests; characteristics (e.g., sex, garb, paraphernalia), distinctive behavior (e.g., celibacy); activities (e.g., conducting ceremonies, preaching, teaching, comforting); special priestly personnel (e.g., acolytes, temple prostitutes), etc. See also:

Celibacy	888	Shaman	59
Theocratic forms of government	898	Theosophy	818
Military chaplains	722	Divinity schools	378

11

238 finished lengths of tweed. For a tweed to be classified
443 as "Harris Tweed," it must be hand-woven by Outer [481] Hebridians in their own homes, but the weavers are essentially employees of the mill. All the large Harris 238 Tweed mills in Lewis, except the one in Shawbost, are located in Stornoway. A few smaller businesses, which design and market tweeds but have no elaborate machinery to process the tweed further, are scattered throughout the island.

The village of Shawbost is composed of 169 households,
421 of which 110 are headed by "crofters," persons recognized
442 as legal tenants of a croft. Of the remaining 59
[429]
[341] households, 16 rent houses which were built and are maintained by the County (called "council houses"), 11 have erected houses on the crofts of relatives, and 443 32 have built homes on the common grazing lands. Non-291 crofters participate in the agricultural activities of the township. It would not be unusual, for example, for a non-crofter to serve as the clerk of a grazings committee.

In North Shawbost, one croft house and two non-342 croft houses are used only when the owner returns to 429 Shawbost from the mainland for a holiday. The schoolmaster lives in a house adjoining the school, and the [315] minister in a manse located between Shawbost and the [193] neighboring village of Bragar.

117

764 the deceased or the remaining family assist in preparing 594 endless cups of tea, using the provisions that are brought by the visitors. The newcomers enter, exchange greetings, memories, sighs and moral judgements in rapid whispers. "Och, och... that should teach us, we're all going to go. That's how it was meant to be.
It makes you wonder why we live at all, well, well."
They recall other deaths. "That was a bad death. His liver was bad, and he turned yellow, then all black...." [152] They weep, circumspectly observe the appearance of the [197] room and its occupants, and speak only in Gaelic, the language of hearth and heart.

764 The minister usually attends a prayer meeting which 443 is held in the tigh fhaire around midnight of the night before the funeral, but his presence is not necessary.
The prayer meeting may be conducted by the elders. The elders may also hold the service which precedes the burial. The minister may walk for a short distance in the funeral procession or speak a brief few words at the graveside, but his role in the community drama is minimal.

764 At least one person from all households within the 621 village is expected to go to the tigh fhaire of someone 592 who has died within the village, "to show respect." The male head of the household is expected to attend the

130

[172] "I was in the Navy during the last war. We were [152] in Norway, and got an invitation to visit the palace.
I didn't go. I was afraid I'd make a mess of things."

"This place has an inferiority complex. It's mainland-oriented; so you feel outlandish."

The new director of an association which promotes 575 the speaking of Gaelic is a Lowland Scot who learned 197 Gaelic when he was in England. He was working in England 186 [181] and, as a Scotsman, felt so much like a foreigner that he decided "to be a real foreigner"—so he studied Gaelic.
Motives which prompted legislation protecting crofting also lie behind the development of organizations which attempt to protect and preserve the Gaelic language.

An Comunn Gaidhealach, the Highland Association [175] which promotes the speaking of Gaelic, was founded in 1891 in a town on the mainland, and has always been urban-based. Eighty years passed before the association established its headquarters in Stornoway; but the headquarters were relegated to hindquarters when the director found that he needed to be on the mainland to exert pressure on influential organizations for aid and support.
[193] The organization is condemned by ministers on the island,
who view it as an organization that sponsors light-hearted [218] singing. The magazines and books which it publishes or sponsors are seldom read by the rural islanders. The

133

197 One of the 793 richest sources of Gaelic vocabulary now available is 779 the Gaelic Bible, but many villagers, especially the younger ones, complain that they are unable to understand
many of the Gaelic words used by the minister in his sermons.

Although provision for teaching Gaelic in the schools
197 was made in the Education Act of 1918, only within the 871 last ten years have schools incorporated classes in which Gaelic is taught at both primary and secondary levels.
Gaelic is taught as a foreign language like French or Latin,
rather than used as a medium of instruction, which would require a much larger vocabulary than most teachers possess.
[315] The present schoolmaster in Shawbost differs from past
[651] schoolmasters in that he addresses the children by their Gaelic names,[2] and devises projects intended to encourage
a sense of pride in "Celtic culture."

793 The Department of Celtic Studies at the University of 197 Glasgow, which includes in its staff a Lewis poet and 185 several Scottish Nationalists, is described as "progressive."
According to an islander who is a student in the Department,
"They believe that if Gaelic is to survive as a language,
it must be written as it is spoken. At school we were taught to write 'proper' Gaelic, Gaelic that's considered

[2] Persons who come from Gaelic-speaking areas are addressed and referred to by Gaelicized names, such as "Murchadh" rather than "Murdo," and usually these names take the form of patronymics, which may or may not include nicknames (for example, Iain Dhomhnuill Shain, i.e., John the son of Fair Donald).

162

B. The Bible

1. The Free Church: "A man in my great-grandfather's 771 time," said a 65-year-old man, "talked about the great
195 change within his generation, from the days when fanks
178 were held on Sundays to such strict observance on the Sabbath that not even a cow could be tethered."

The first evangelical minister on Lewis came to the 195 parish of Uig in 1824. The Rev. Alexander Macleod belonged 793 to the Church of Scotland, but joined the Free Church when it broke away from the Church of Scotland in the "Disruption"
of 1843. When he came in 1824, he found "superstition,"
"spiritual darkness," and "polluted remains of Popery, since it was the religion in this place...the only notion they had of Christianity (Beaton 1925: 7-8)." The southern 795 824 Isles of the Outer Hebrides are still Catholic, but in the 184 Protestant isles of the north, holidays associated with 184 Catholicism are avoided, and stories are still told of the burning of Protestant martyrs by Catholics. Catholics are disliked "because they believe that they can buy their way out of sin," or that the bread and wine of Communion is really the blood and body of Christ. "A Catholic is anointed with oil and left to die without food or water.
We are privileged that we are not like them."

195 In the Disruption of 1843, about one-third of the 793 people and 39% of the ministers left the established church

164

795 collected, and an annual report on morale, which usually condemns drinking and "the decline in moral standards."
Ministers are trained in a college in Edinburgh. Many [197] are Gaelic speakers, although the number is said to be declining.

794 When a congregation loses a minister because of de 793 or other reasons, it issues a "call" to some other mini
The congregation is familiar with the names and preachi styles of a number of ministers, who have in the past visited the community as guest speakers. The congregat votes for a minister from a list made by the key office of the church. The minister may or may not accept the 795 The Free Church and the Free Presbyterian Church, [178] fundamentalist Protestant sects which have survived the tendencies toward unification evident since the turn of the century, are strongest in the Highlands and Islands

Shawbost contains a few people who belong to the Church
Scotland, but most villagers belong to the Free Church.
795 The only church (in the sense of a building in which se 824 are preached) is a Free Church which was built in 1883, [193] supposedly after men from Shawbost helping to repair th fence at the minister's manse in Carloway, where they t attended church, were refused boiling water for their c "brose" by the minister's wife. A building in which members of the Church of Scotland worshipped was buil

magic is always efficacious—however desperate the need, however pure the motives of those who ask. These men were said to be the most successful fishers in the place; they were also Elders of the Kirk, who saw no wrong in what they did. They did not inform the minister; but the good man was not a fisherman and did not understand either the mysterious ways of fish or the incitement of a crew!

While this neid fire was kindled in all earnestness, a miming song-dance I have seen in Eriskay is pure fun: 'the Carline or Witch-wife of the Mill-dust' (Cailleach an Dudain), who falls down dead and is brought to life again! Once, perhaps, a half-remembered symbolic 'play' of the seasonal fall and resurrection of seed, it is certainly in form and spirit a thing of happy laughter now! Tales were retold by Martin and a seventeenth-century English skipper, of offerings made to a sea-god, Shony, at Eoropie, Ness, for the sake of seaweed, followed by feasting and drinking in the chapel there.[1] The story may be garbled or, if true, may record a pre-Christian survival turned to merriment and of no more significance to the people of the time than 'the Carline of the Mill-dust'. The prayers for the seaweed necessary for agriculture and daily bread are Christian in spirit.

When the people were at the mercy of periodic famines, diseases and sudden death, there were ample grounds for fears. Hence a word must be said of a belief widespread and ancient in the Old World, 'the evil eye' (droch shuil). In the absence of clinical diagnosis, a malady, or a misfortune to oneself or a valued possession, might cast suspicion on someone present when it occurred; and

[1] W. C. Mackenzie, 1919, pp. 143-208. Contrast Carmina, vol. iv, pp. 33-35.

In many homes breakfast is followed by family worship. 593
e father begins with a blessing, a prayer on behalf of his 264 mily, and then leads the family in the singing of a few 782 rses of psalm. Next he reads from Scripture, apologizing 788 [512]
the visitor because his Bible is not an English version, d comments on the meaning of the passage. He concludes with prayer. If the morning worship has been omitted, he holds [512] evening service. Some crofters have family worship both rning and night. When the father is away, his wife or his dest son conducts the worship. Religious devotion on Skye, [771] en, is more than Sabbath church attendance and attendance weekly prayer meetings.

The Role of Religion in Township, Neighborhood, and Village

I did not attempt to devise a socio-metric scale to 795
termine the affiliation of members and adherents of the veral churches in either Glendale, Kilmuir or Portree. The rmer disunity and conflicts which divided families, both clear and consanguineal, townships, neighborhoods, and the llage stemmed from abandonment of traditional religious filiation rather than from attachment to an established sect ich happened to differ from the denomination of one's kinsman neighbor. Today sectarian hostility is no longer prevalent ong the people. The Sgiathanach only chaffs his neighbor friendly sally and repartee, about his only slightly different ctarian views. They refer to each other's sect by nicknames.
e Church of Scotland is the "Established Church." The much of Protestantism was a denial of Christianity. Holders of all these forms of Trinitarian belief have united in condemning Unitarianism as heresy, its earlier Arian form having been stamped out in blood. The 'heterodox' are held by the orthodox of many Churches to be awaiting eternal torture. To a thoughtful humanist like Sir James Frazer, on the other hand, the belief that one alone by suffering can atone for the sins of others is of the deepest significance, as being an ancient, widespread and 'pathetic fallacy'. Happily, one finds the greatest tolerance and sympathy where Protestant and Catholic are mixed in the Isles. Elsewhere, too, sympathy and reverent enquiry are taking the place of dogmatic assertion.[1] It is in this spirit that we can best understand Gaelic beliefs at their highest, and so distinguish their lowered use—or misuse for selfish ends—from the highest use of sacrament and prayer by the pure of mind and heart.

(2) RELIGION, MAGIC AND SUPERSTITION IN DAILY LIFE

Evil ends might be sought by means of the ancient runes: the power of their poetry and associations could tempt to perverted use. Carmichael tells how in Uist a malefactor, in terror of the law, went to a needy woman, and by appealing to her pity—and in exchange for a small sum—learned from her an "Invocation for Justice". Strengthened by its rhythm and imagery, and by his own associated belief in its magical power as a charm, he stood up boldly in Court, firmly asserted his innocence and got away scot-free! Both persons secretly concerned felt that they had endangered their souls by successfully defeating justice through their misuse of the invocation. Can one doubt that they were partly right in both beliefs? The malefactor's confidence had lent success to perjury, and perjury by help of prayer was deadly sin.

[1] Cf. the friendly theological arguments between a Bernera Presbyterian and a Roman Catholic from Barra (Bodach Bharraidh—vii, viii), sketched in Gaelic by I. N. Macleoid, Litrichean Alasdair Mhoir, Stornoway, 1932.

Now, the perverted use of prayer, as in this case, was clearly understood to be evil-doing; but what of magic and superstitious practices? Much has been written of 'Highland folk-lore and superstitions'.[1] The religion of the past should be distinguished from these. In The Golden Bough, Frazer drew a useful distinction between religion and magic. Religion, he wrote, relies upon the propitiation of higher powers—or even, in more primitive forms than Christianity, the propitiation of the forces of nature—while magic is an attempt at direct control of natural forces. Superstition may be defined here as a body of beliefs and practices in which hopes and fears attach themselves to things seen or done, by a multitude of false analogies and by irrational links of effects to supposed causes. Such superstitions are marginal to the main body of belief, worship and conduct which forms religion.

At the same time, no hard-and-fast line can be drawn between folk-lore and religion, where religion is handed on as living word and ritual almost without the aid of writing. This is particularly true where the religion of which we think, that of the Gael, is founded upon self-supporting peasant life, in line with that of the humble, working founder of Christianity—historically native to an outlying district of his own country—and not with the

[1] D. J. Macleod, D.Litt.: (a) Highland Folklore (32 pp.), Inverness; (b) Introduction to Martin's Western Isles (edn. Stirling, 1934). N. Morrison, Hon. D.Sc., Superstitions of Lewis, Stornoway, c. 1930.

796 miscarriage occurring before marriage also requires
851 standing even when the child to be baptised was conceived 826 by the couple after marriage. A married man who has 848 impregnated a woman who is not his wife must undergo 737 this ordeal before he can have his own children baptised.

It is the responsibility of the entire community to ensure that this punishment is carried out. On one occasion, the minister forgot to lecture a couple, and afterwards sent them a note that they would not have to stand; but they insisted, afraid that people would say that they were getting special treatment.

203 According to one minister, the manse is a kind of 521 "research center" to which all gossip is reported. Some 793 ministers use this information in the pulpit, chiding
794 people and calling attention to wrong-doings in front of the congregation. In contrast, a different attitude exists
4) in parts of Stornoway, where villagers have approached
9) doctors in the maternity ward for information regarding miscarriages and premarital births only to be told that this information is confidential. The ordeal of standing
18) in church does not exist in Stornoway. In 1971 a person in Shawbost was accidentally exempted from this ordeal and his exemption was seen by some as providing an opportunity to stop what is considered by many to be an archaic custom.

871 Education in the local school has included a great
875 deal of religious instruction; in other words, religious
791 and educational spheres commingle. Because of the
(466) relative prestige which the teaching profession offers to persons from the island, and because the islands are considered "isolated" by most persons looking for jobs (teaching posts on the island include an added sum which is designated as "isolation payment"), most of the island's teachers are themselves islanders. Education (554) is one method by which one's position in the community is elevated. The high status derived from having advanced education also reflects favorably on the parents and position of the family. But teachers and others who return to the island are expected not to deviate from island norms in important matters, such as fundamentalist religious beliefs; hence teachers tend to perpetuate fundamentalist religious beliefs within the classroom.

871 Formerly the minister visited the school once each 771 year to examine the children on their catechism, thus
• 793 testing the state of religious instruction in the school.
178 Several years ago this practice was stopped by the education authorities of the County Council, and the minister now gives a sermon in the school about once a month but is not allowed to examine the children. Many ministers are dissatisfied with the arrangement, as they are afraid that

871 the children might not receive proper religious 791
• 793 instruction.
178

"Family worship" is considered an important part 771 of daily life. Prayers should be said before meals
792 and teas, and the head of the household should read 593 passages from the Bible to the assembled members of the household every morning and evening. The practice of
(178) "reading the books" prevails in households headed by
(593) older men, but is less common among families headed by younger men.

3. The Clique of the Converted: The second network
794 within the religious sphere is a special religious in-632 group, the clique of the converted (curamach). This 621 clique constitutes a relatively strongly bounded system which to some extent competes with the township boundary system. Owen (Rees 1960) has noted that as persons become more involved with religion in the Protestant Hebrides, they tend to remove themselves from community life.

Intense involvement with the church sometimes conflicts with township activities since people may attend Communions at times when a fank is planned, leaving the work to be done by others. When elders of the church are present at activities, such as fanks, which are otherwise usually boisterous and full of humor, behavior tends to be "properly" restrained.

THE PEOPLE

181 ing but black. The young have found the island a much more kindly place. They have never been forced by circumstances to choose between predestination and despair.'

To take account of matters beyond the material level is inherent in the Gaelic Celt. Celtic poetry and song, legend and (538) folklore, all so alive with fancy and so sympathetic towards the things of nature, reflect the inborn sensitivity and character of the present-day Highlander and Islander. Fiction's caricature of the island-dweller (not only in Harris and Lewis, but in the other islands) has been taken by another society with a different cultural background, with insufficient knowledge of historical facts, as being virtually authentic. The Western Isles have had more than their share of 'observers' who have failed to penetrate to the inner Gael. Only with a knowledge of the background, social, cultural, ethnic, historical and so on, can the 'larger than life' islander be seen in perspective—as a normal human being.

RELIGION

771 There are few communities in the British Isles which have, since the Christian dawning, so closely integrated religious belief with secular day-to-day living as the Harris and Lewis people. Though many times the religious element in island life foundered in a Sargasso Sea of outright superstition, it has managed to survive to its present-day form which might be described as cathartic in nature. When one attempts to investigate religion and superstition as two separate subjects, one is forced to consider either both as one, or one as complementary to the other. Even in those times during the island's history when materialism was prominent, somewhere in the background religion was acknowledged in one form or another.

* 175 As mentioned in Chapter 3, in 1610 Lord Kintail brought 795 Farquhar MacRae, the vicar of Gairloch, to Lewis. The first Earl of Seaforth, who built a church in Stornoway (St Lennan's) was nominally Episcopalian. During the temporary supremacy of Episcopacy in Scotland, there was little disturbance in the High-
• (793) lands of the Presbyterian organisation. The bishops controlled (794) their dioceses; but the ministers controlled their parishioners. In

RELIGION

Lewis, there were but two ministers in 1626, their parishes being 175*
Barvas (which included Uig) and Eye, which included Lochs; the 795 population of the island at the time was about 4,000. When Pres- 793 byterianism was re-established in Scotland in 1640, the Lewis 062 ministers found no trouble in conforming, as did their fellow parishioners. Sectarian feeling in the island during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries was not so much between Presbyterians and Episcopalians as between Romanists and Protestants.

In the year 1738, nine Episcopalian Lewismen signed a letter (793) to the Bishop of the Isles, asking for an annual visit from a pastor, being unable to support a full-time minister. Almost a century 175*
later in 1839, the foundation stone of St Peter's in Stornoway was 346 laid: this is the town's Episcopal Church. The other building on the island which belongs to the Episcopalians is the ancient church at Eoropie, dating back to the tenth century and perhaps the oldest still in use in the Hebrides; services are held there occasionally, though there is no local Episcopalian congregation. One of 175*
the most significant events which echoed right through to the 795 island was the Disruption which took place in Edinburgh in 1843. The result was a 'church spectrum' in Scotland which is still mirrored on a smaller scale in the island: the Church of Scotland, the Free Presbyterian Church, the United Free Church, and the Free Church. The Roman Catholic Church is also represented.

Lewis has one of the largest Free Church congregations in the 794 country. This denomination is particularly known for its out- 795 spoken pronouncements from time to time on questions of the day. It is Calvinistic in doctrine and has a reputation for holding the 'Calvinistic outlook' in the more general and pejorative sense; though its strictness may sometimes be over-painted, it is much less liberal in its moral standpoint than is the Church of Scotland, if less austere in some respects than the Free Presbyterians. Its doctrinal position is that of unrelaxed adherence to the West- 779 minster Confession, its ministers and other office-bearers affirming their belief 'in the whole doctrine of the Confession'. It is opposed to theological liberalism and accepts the inerrancy and infallibility of the Scriptures. Only the Psalter is used in public worship, and instrumental music is dispensed with; strong

174 to bleed or to set bones, while some elderly woman would 175 serve as physician and midwife. Spiritual consolation 462 and renewal too could be found, even in the absence of monk or nun, or of priest, minister or catechist. Enough [463] here, that with agriculture and fishing, most crafts, except [759] metal-work, were practised in every family. The 'range of skills' was therefore wider and richer in latent art than • 793 might be supposed from those needed on a little croft today.
[593] Hence the importance of understanding the roles of husbandman and housewife, of "the man and the woman of the house".

174 Their labours through the annual rhythm of the seasons 462 might be classed as efforts for the man and endurance for the women (Fig. 9). Man's muscular strength and free-221 dom of limb rouse him to efforts demanded by the thrust
[181] and lift of peat-cutting, digging in stony soil, or pushing the foot-plough, step by step obliquely down a rocky slope. In the past an archer's chase of stag, wolf or boar demanded all a man's effort, and courage too, as fishing still does in the stormy north-western seas. With this facing of danger there came a gaiety that sparkled like the crest of a breaking wave. Women's work demanded by its unceasing activity a cheerful endurance, whether at labour on the croft, at corn-grinding, butter-making and peat-carrying, or carding, spinning and weaving; and with every task of day or season came the constant tending of cattle, of menfolk and children.

[538] This allotment of seasonal tasks and skills is neatly put in the proverb, "A man's cow won't yield milk, nor a woman's horse ploughing" (Cha bhi bainn' aig bo fir, 's cha bhi treabhadh 'an each mnatha). Yet women have always taken a share of work on the croft—too heavy a share when the men were much away—and the habit of

CHAPTER VIII

CHANGE IN RELIGION AND SOCIAL CUSTOMS

(A) COMMUNAL CHRISTIANITY, THE ROMAN CHURCH AND THE REFORMATION

175 When the Reformation broke upon Scotland and 798 the Church of Rome was driven out, the new 829 Church was slow to replace the priests and conventual clergy by its ministers. More than two hundred
• [793] years later the minister of Harris wrote, with reason, that in contemplating "the decayed monuments of the piety of our Christian ancestors . . . the pious mind is affected with a mixture of awe and sorrow, while it can hardly admit that the overturning of the ancient church establishment ought to be considered as reformation here". These words were honestly spoken. The minister continued: "In Harris, where, till within a few years back (from 1790), there has not been since the aera of our reformation from popery, so much as . . . one decent house for public worship; there were of old no less than twelve churches and chapels of which . . . the walls are yet standing, besides others . . . while tradition has preserved their names and dedications".[1] These are those of monastic cella or cill, of parochial or collegiate ecclesia or eagleis,

[1] Old Statistical Account, x, 376. No doubt many churches had lacked a priest for a considerable time before the Reformation; but taking a long view, the minister's conclusion was sound.

175 Education Act of 1872, for the people "did not want to 178 give their children wings to leave them".[1]
871 The reading of Gaelic progressed fairly rapidly after [671] 1800, in order that the Bible might be read. By 1833 something like one in three or four of the population, or more than half of the younger people, could read Gaelic. The Hon. Mrs. Stewart-Mackenzie of Seaforth, it seems, had a 'warm sympathy' both with teaching to read the 175 Scriptures and with evangelical preaching. The coming
114 to Lewis in 1824 of the first evangelical minister, the Rev.
• 793 Alexander MacLeod, an Assynt man, is described in his memoir in a striking volume, Disruption Worthies of the Highlands, edited by J. Greig (1877).

175 "At the distance of more than half a century it is not 771 easy to form a conception of the religious and moral condition of Lewis previous to the year 1824. The present 793 writer has heard a still living minister of the Free Church, who is a native of Uig, declare publicly that only two or three copies of the Bible could be found within the wide extent of the parish, and that he himself travelled a journey in search of a copy of the blessed book, and all in vain. . . . The densest intellectual and spiritual darkness held universal sway. Notwithstanding the pleasing features that characterise Highlanders, even in their most primitive condition, this state of things could not fail to be attended with baleful fruits. Despite their constitutional warmth of heart and loyalty of nature, unbending fidelity to what they esteemed to be honour, and their unbounded kindness and hospitality, many gross vices were found commingling in the characters and lives of the Lewis people. For, however strange it may appear, at the first prayer-meeting

[1] Quotations to this effect, dating from the Old Statistical Account until 1883, are given in the Brand Report of 1902.

175 which Mr. Macleod attempted to hold at Uig, one of the
771 former elders actually offered a request that a wreck should
• 793 be cast ashore in the neighbourhood;[1] while another elder, referring to the death of our Lord as a misfortune, used strong expressions of deprecation of its having at all occurred.[2] . . . The reason is easily furnished; the Lewis ministry was not evangelical. Moderatism held the land in sole possession. . . . Nor did it act merely in a negative indifferentist manner. Moderatism contained in itself elements of positive distaste to Gospel truth, and enmity towards gracious influences and experience. As a matter of course, it was perfectly compatible with this system to grant toleration to superstitions and superstitious observances, which had been handed down through the Dark Ages of Popery from the still darker ages of Druidical idolatry. Acts of adoration, having for their object the heavenly bodies, were common. It is scarcely necessary to state that family worship was unknown among the people, and even at the manse. For although the public ordinances were dispensed as a matter of form, they exerted no practical influence upon the conduct. They rather tended to lull more profoundly asleep by imparting and maintaining a feeling of security to the poor dark benighted souls who participated in them."

People did come to church "in tolerable numbers" from the very outset of Mr. Macleod's ministry, but "Here for the first time was a preacher who showed by his whole

[829] [1] Shipwreck was still thought of as an 'act of God', and a dire 'misfortune'. Not only is there no hint of deliberate wrecking ever taking place, as on some other British coasts, but abundant record of aid to the shipwrecked and respect for their property in the absence of the skipper and crew. (Martin, 1695; and later.)

[784] [2] According to Evangelical theory the punishment of guilty and innocent alike was part of the Divine plan. How different this, from the faith of the Islanders till then!

3: Geddes K-4, 5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

195 manner that he had in hand business of eternal moment
791 to his hearers. That business was to warn them of the 793 wrath to come, which impended over unpardoned Christless
sinners, and to proclaim the way of escape by the open 178 door of a crucified and risen Saviour. Not more than two months had elapsed since Mr. Macleod's admission
when the 'stupid attention' and vacant stare passed into
the wistful anxious listening, the suffused eye, the tender
subdued manner, and in some cases the heart-wringing
enquiry, 'What must I do to be saved?'

783 "For something like two years this minister 'refused
to dispense the Lord's Supper'. . . . A very early effect
of his work was the extinction of various worldly and
pernicious customs and amusements to which the people
had been previously addicted, and the substitution of
meetings for prayer, diets of catechising, day and evening
schools, family worship, and other spiritual exercises in their room. Many at the outset felt greatly aggrieved at the new order of things. Meanwhile the Lord stood by his servant, and the word mightily prevailed against all opposition. Incredible efforts were made by earnest souls
in all parts of the island to be present at the preaching of the Word, even on ordinary Sabbaths." By 1828 "the whole island seemed to be moved by one powerful spiritual
impulse" and 9000 people flocked from all parts to the Uig communion. "When the memorable 18th of May 1843 dawned"—that of the Disruption—"no part of the country was readier to rally round the banner then displayed, because of the truth, than the island of Lewis
almost to a man." It was "an unspeakable relief to the ministers' spirits to escape by one decided step at once
from the bondage of State control and the chilling atmosphere of Moderatism. . . . Even where evangelical preach-

175 ing was lacking, and the minister of the parish remained
791 in the Establishment, the popular movement inclined 793 unanimously towards the cause of the suffering and protesting Church of Scotland, with the exception of a small handful of people in Stornoway."

794 The part of elder folk in religious life continued to be 786 important, but in new ways. Masculine influence now dominated the family and the congregation. The 'Men' in 178 the Highlands were Elders of the Church who often spoke as lay preachers and who rose to speak on 'Question Day'
—that is on the Friday of the Communion Services, which extended, and still do, from Thursday, the Fast Day, to Monday, the Thanksgiving Day. The presiding minister, after opening devotions, invited any Elder of the Parish to rise and propose the Question; the Elder having read a text from Scripture, would say he wished to hear the
'marks' of the true Believer, drawn from the text. After the minister had himself "opened out the text", he would name visiting Elders, calling upon them in turn to speak.
One by one, each would rise and give his picture of the real Christian in terms of the qualities suggested by the text. "And so the hour sped under the pleasing and helpful variety of a dozen speakers or more. The 'Men' spoke out of rich experience. . . . 'Question Day' was a self-searching season, when every hearer examined his heart by the 'marks' adduced . . . and as this went on there was a sweet glow on the face of the Congregation as the presiding Minister summed up and closed the holy Convocation." [1]

175 The 'Men' had long been a recognised Order in the 178 Highlands, and their foundation is traced to Thomas Hog,
the famous minister of Killearn, "born in Tain in the 794

[1] Rev. N. C. Macfarlane, The 'Men' in the Lewis (1924).

(v) A CHANGING CHURCH: 1820–1943

195 Underneath the doctrinal severity of the Presbyterian 795 Gael, there has continued some of the cheerful faith in living, the belief in mutual aid, the tolerance and calm, [178] breathed in our native religious lore. The sternest Presby-terianism, which swept the North-west after 1820, still makes the Gaelic North its fortress in Scotland. Yet the maintenance in the Scottish Church of a doctrine of universal love was due, no less, to Gaelic ministers, and seems to have owed its rebirth to Gaelic tradition through these men. The question of continuity is important: for this doctrine, embracing all mankind, not only the predestined few, has profoundly influenced the attitude to life in all Protestant lands, throughout a century crucial to human development.

195 The most notable of the Scots ministers concerned with the doctrine of the Atonement were John McLeod
795 Campbell and his younger friend, Norman Macleod. Born 793 in Argyllshire in 1800, McLeod Campbell was ordained in 1825, and preached the assurance that God loved, and Christ died, for all men. For this he was charged with heresy by the Church of Scotland, and deposed in 1831,
a trial he bore "with saintly charity and patience", refusing to found a new sect. In 1832 he went through the Highlands and Skye, preaching everywhere in Gaelic.
A Moderate minister, John Maciver, who attended his services, said to him: "I never understood so much of your views before; now in the strength of God I will enquire more into them". It was very different when he met his own cousin, Roderick McLeod, who eight years later swept the island of Skye into the Free Church and led the Evangelicals in the Hebrides. To his sister

175 Campbell wrote, "My reception by those who are called 795 'professors'", the lay leaders who 'professed' the Evangelical doctrines, "was trying to the last. Holding 793 that Christ died for all seemed to them so fundamental an error as to poison all my teaching." Thereafter, 175 Campbell retired, in Glasgow, to read, preach to a few,
793 and write, keeping in touch with Norman Macleod and 814 Erskine in Scotland, and in England with J. F. D. Maurice
(1805–72). After Christ, the Bread of Life, Campbell wrote
The Nature of the Atonement (1856). Readers felt not only that he was one of the most lovable of men, but a profound theologian, a view reinforced today. "Of all books that have ever been written on the Atonement", wrote Dr.
Denney, "McLeod Campbell's is probably that which is most completely inspired by the spirit of the truth with which it deals. Its originality is spiritual as well as intellectual. In speculative power he cannot be compared to Schleiermacher, nor in historical learning to Ritschl; but he walks in the light all the time, and everything he touches lives."

175 Here then was a man who seemed to have been born
793 "in advance of his time", yet who came of a community
159 of deeply traditional cast. His life's thought was attuned to that of his forebears, and expressed itself most intimately perhaps in their own tongue. Campbell was born and reared in Lorne, Argyllshire, which had first received Protestantism through Carswell, who, in translating Knox's
"Liturgy" into Gaelic, incorporated the old Gaelic labour
prayer of the fishermen (Chapter VII (a)). The gentler form of Protestantism brought in by Carswell may have allowed the spirit of Celtic Christianity to survive among the people of 'Mid-Argyll' and Lorne, down to Campbell's boyhood.
It may thus have contributed to the making of "a Scottish 175 saint, a character so eminently Christ-like ",[1] and to his

793 intimate beliefs, doctrine and wide influence. The same
159 Highland roots and deep charity characterised Dr. Norman Macleod, author of the popular classic, The Friend of the Gael (Caraid nan Gaidheal).

121 If a student of community ventures upon an interpretation of theology, it is because, to him, any attempt to understand " the relations of God to mankind " must take account of men's relations to one another. Ideas are transformed by human experience during economic and social revolutions, and in their turn they transform society. To make contact with reality, theology must regard mankind: it
175 must be integrated with sociology. Because of its close 178 bond with communal life, the religious spirit, recorded in Gaelic lore, was jarred, almost overwhelmed, when com-
182 munity was shaken to its foundations by the commercial,
178 agricultural and industrial revolution. Happily, the value
79 of communal Christianity has been acknowledged both by Roman Catholics—notably (among Gaels) by the Rev. Allan Macdonald of Eriskay—and by Protestants.[2] In the Scottish Presbyterian Church today, the movement which seems most deeply aware of the need for a new society has acknowledged its debt to communal tradition where this has been best maintained, that is, in the Isles. Seeking to aid Christian endeavour, international and national, this movement has turned for inspiration to Iona.
[771] In Iona, of which the noble cathedral belongs to the Church of Scotland but is open for service to all denominations, Presbyterians have found a new symbol.

[113] [1] Canon Vaughan, cited by the Rev. Norman Maclean (Scotsman, 21st Aug. 1943).

[2] " The Church should interpret the Love of God by a flaming zeal for the redress of the social order." (The Very Rev. Prof. John Baillie, Moderator of the Church of Scotland, at St. Andrews, 1943.)

5: Caird et al. K-5 (1958) 1959 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Park

[Gr-vir] [Glengr-vir]

241 beds are now covered by sphagnum moss and heather. Other lazy-beds are permanently in natural [197] hay; only thirty per cent of the land classified as 'old arable' is now in oats and potatoes. If natural hay is added, one hundred and thirteen acres of crops are taken from an area greater than the so-called old arable; this suggests that the cultivated area was pushed beyond the limits of the old arable (ninety acres) after 1850-52. As in all the fishing townships the area of sown grass is infinitesimal for only four of the fifty-eight operative units actually sow grass. The wintering capacity of the crofts could be greatly increased by the general adoption of the practice of under-sowing.

241 There are forty-three legal crofts in Gravir but nine are sub-let, in every case to relatives.
423 All the crofts are taken up and there is evident pressure of population on the land. In addition to the crofts, there are a further ten cottars, and squatters and feuars, besides the fifteen legal Glengravir crofts (ten operative units) which have no share in the Gravir common. The common [532] has been encroached on by several feus for Gravir is the functional centre of Park: the Free
[346] Church of Scotland and Manse, the doctor, one of the two district nurses and two of the missionaries [759] (assistant ministers) are all located in Gravir.
[793]

Gravir and Glengravir thus have fifty-eight legal crofts and fifty-six operative units. Less than 233 half of the crofts with grazing rights are fully stocked and one quarter have under fifty per cent of 311 the soum, including five without any stock. The common pasture of 2,652 acres is in general of poor grazing quality, dominated by the less nutritive species of grass and poorly drained. In 1957, a ten acre plot was fenced and re-seeded: only twelve of the operative units participated in this reclamation work, and the ages of the participants ranged between 27 and 58 years; this is significant as aged tenants are unable to carry out such work. This scheme could be extended annually; if potential improvements to the crofts are limited, pasture amelioration is virtually [435] without limits. Re-seeding on a large scale would enable better stock to be kept rather than greater numbers; at present the sheep stock is over two hundred per cent of the sheep soum, and a ewe and lamb sell for as little as £2 10s to £3 10s, an indication of the consequences of over-stocking. The cattle stock is below the souming and this paucity of cattle is one of the notable changes in the agriculture since the 1930's for at that time as many as six cattle were kept on the larger crofts. The total stock kept in Gravir and Glengravir exceeds the souming by thirty-five per cent.

231 The great majority of the crofts can certainly not be considered economic units. Judging from 241 the souming of one cow and follower and eight sheep per pound sterling of rent in a township where 434 only seven crofts pay more than £2 rent, they were never intended to be self-supporting agricultural units. The produce of two cows and sixteen sheep, with potatoes, and in former days, bere or oats, locally milled by the three Gravir water mills, could scarcely ever have maintained a family. Fishing was the complementary economic activity, and in 1901 no fewer than nineteen boats and [228] eighty-nine fishermen were registered at Gravir. Today, only one boat fishes commercially for lobsters.

463 If agriculture is singularly unrewarding, weaving occupies six of the males of insurable age and 288 service occupations a further ten males and five females, but neither weaving nor service occupation 166 are sufficiently available or attractive to keep the insurable population in the district. Twelve of 167 the males between fifteen and sixty-four years take seasonal employment and forty-six are in permanent employment furth of Lewis, in all sixty per cent of the potential male resident population.

175 The economic problem of Gravir, in common with the other 'fishing' townships, became acute
228 after the fishing industry collapsed after 1914; in the hey-day of the fishing most of the men fished
434 all the year round, locally and on the west and east coast of Scotland. Earnings fluctuated but a man might make as much as £90 in a good year or as little as £5 in a poor year. Apart from the sale of young cattle, and wool surplus to home spinning requirements, the fishing earnings constituted [253] the bulk of the croft income. Today, on the basis of the souming, the income of the largest croft including subsidies could only be approximately £150 excluding the amount to be set aside for home consumption of potatoes and milk.

30

change in the use of the grazing land or a desire of the young 561 men to fence the crofts in an effort to improve the individual 886 crofts the old men must have their say. Through their position 626 in the churches, the old men also are the paramount source of social control, preserving their traditional habits and statuses, including a severe limitation on all social activity of a frivolous nature. This religiously sanctioned control is strengthened by the inability of the youth to form a solidarity. Indeed, one of the most serious limitations of the society of Skye is the small number of young men and women, boys and girls and the few opportunities which they have to come together as a group. The functions of the old men's age grade are identical with those described for the Irish small farmer.[21] Another 794 social circle is composed of the affiliates of the same religious sect. They are mainly a mutual aid group. [474]

Although the status equality noted in the township for 554
all of the same sex and age carries over to the larger community, there are always a few people who have an achieved status. The [793] minister enjoys high social prestige as the spiritual guardian of the people. The doctor is valued for his role in caring for [759] the people's physical well-being. The school teacher is respected because he educates the youth and often acts as a spokesman for the group. If there is a member of the landed gentry, [545] he will be accorded the highest status in the area. It is [555] interesting to note that the achieved status positions are most often filled by newcomers to the island. The shopkeepers and

[21] Arensberg, op. cit., pp. 125-139.

#175 #178 775 [713] can be seen. In common with the rest of Scotland up to the time of the French Revolution, the Skye ministers were abandoning their emotional approach in favor of mild methods of persuasion.[14] The rigor of Presbyterianism was succumbing before the philosophical enlightenment of the Deist.[15] At the same time religion [77] on Skye contrasted with Lowland practices. It was religion [713] based on inward conviction rather than on doctrinal dogma. The ministers were too far removed from Edinburgh to become involved in the heated debates and dissensions within the General Assembly which were creating opposing groups of theologians and, frequently, resulting in secession movements.[16] The people had no serious predilection for any specific articles of faith, and the landlords and many of the tacksmen were only nominal Presbyterians.[17]

#175 #178 713 As the proprietors and the tacksmen withdrew, the status of the ministers was augmented. They were more than spiritual leaders and moral guardians. They were descended from tacksmen, were often themselves tacksmen, and were frequently married to the daughters of tacksmen. They controlled education and administered the poor funds. But in many cases they seem to have been less concerned with the ministry than with their farms.[18]

---

[14] Pennant, op. cit., Vol. II, p. 173.

[15] Johnson, op. cit., p. 95; and Notestein, The Scot in History, pp. 202-211.

[16] Norman MacLeod, op. cit., p. 107.

[17] James MacDonald, op. cit., p. 109; and Johnson, op. cit., p. 95.

[18] John Lane Buchanan, Travels in the Western Hebrides, 1782-1790 (London: G. G. J. and J. Robinson, 1793), pp. 219-231.

#175 #178 713 They were frequently accused of failure to conform to orthodoxy and of a disinterest in their calling.[19]

#175 #178 182 161 In time a second trend appeared which was marked by conservatism and an emphasis on doctrinal dogma. Toward the close of the eighteenth century, it became apparent that the population had pressed too hard on the means of subsistence.[20] Commercialization was continuing and sheep flocks were be- [167] ginning to replace men in one parish.[21] The people, many of them destitute, were finding a solution for their plight in migration to the New World, or in seasonal migrations to the Lowlands for work.[22] Those who remained were land hungry.

#175 #178 182 713 Gradually, they were losing respect for their ministers and turning to evangelical missionaries who had begun to appear in the Isles.[23] The crucial fact would seem to be that the ministers [777] were upholding values and symbols which no longer contributed to group solidarity. The Island was on the verge of a period [72] of social disintegration and cultural instability. Under the changes that were to follow, the evangelical movement grew into a large scale revival.

---

[19] MacInnes, The Evangelical Movement in the Highlands of Scotland, 1688-1800, pp. 108-115; Roderick MacCowan, The Men of Skye (Glasgow: John MacNeilage, 1902), pp. 30-32; and Buchanan, loc. cit.

[20] OSA, II, 552; III, 247, 248; IV, 132; XVI, 151, 224, 539; XVIII, 184.

[21] James MacDonald, op. cit., pp. 754-755.

[22] OSA, II, 551; and Robert Heron, General View of the Natural Circumstances of the Hebrides (Edinburgh: John Paterson, 1794), p. 32.

[23] MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 15-16, 24-25; and MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 90-91, 98, 99, 151-165.

in Scotland, it lacked the same effects elsewhere significant correlation in the Highlands and Isla Ireland, of the disproportion of the population t
of subsistence, due to a change from subsistence partially commercial system of land use, and the crop failure. In both countries the persistence traits from the traditional economy, including co techniques, attachment to the land, and a tendenc
the land among the kin, hampered commercializatio specialization and led to devastation.

Five years of famine ended the growth of po
The emigration of large numbers and the death of must have seriously disturbed the patterns of int within the extended family and the township. Alt proprietors made a final effort to help their ten themselves financially, they had foresaken their ministers were no longer able to contribute to gr
because the symbols and values they upheld reflec
tudes of the landlords and lacked significance fo

A religious revival reached effective propo 1812.[42] The appearance of the Revival suggests th was far more disorganized than the scant social a record indicates. Normally, the attempt to seek assistance as a source of comfort and hope appear the culture has become thoroughly disorganized.[43]

---

[41] NSA, pp. 269-272.

[42] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 15, 165; and MacC
pp. 24-25.

[43] Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 437-440.

The process to be observed in the religious facet of the culture during the second period is conservatism. Itinerant missionaries, catechists, and a religious brotherhood known as the "Men" supplemented the regular clergy. As the Revival grew strong, the "Men," as tenacious defenders of the evangelical cause, began to wage an anti-clerical campaign.[44] They usually remained within the Church, opposing any separatist movement, but they drew a sharp distinction between the Church and her ministers. To be a convert of the "Men" meant to dissociate oneself from the death dealing moderate ministers," who were said to have had more interest in their farms than in their congregations.[45] The "Men" conceived their function to be one of delivering powerful testimonies of evangelical truth.[46] They rebuked and constantly reminded the people of their religious duties. They made Sabbatarianism an observable test of religious obedience, separating the respectable Christians from the godless. Prayer meetings were held at which the "Men" engaged in short, earnest prayers, and exhorted the people to read their Bibles and partake in family worship.

The growing influence of the Revival did not leave the clergy unmoved. At least two arose to recreate the spirit of vital religion and revive emotional enthusiasm in their congregations.[47] It was no accident that these ministers should

---

[44] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 151, 165; MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 53-59.

[45] MacCowan, op. cit., p. 53.

[46] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 217-215.

[47] Thomas Brown, Annals of the Disruption in 1843 (Edinburgh: Macniven and Wallace, 1884), pp. 7-8.

appear in the parishes of Bracadale and Snizort. Bracadale had already seen the beginnings of the final stage in commercialization; Snizort had been sold piecemeal to new landlords.

Evangelical Presbyterianism created a new pattern of social and religious life on Skye. It gave the culture a new focus to replace the dead clan system. Much of the form of religious worship and behavior characteristic of the Island today was established during this Revival Movement. The "Men" became the foremost members of the community. An esoteric religous hierarchy evolved. There were the unfortunate few who were in a state of saving grace and acceptable at Communion, and the eminent "Men," the aged, venerable spiritual laity.[48]

The Revival, unlike many nativistic movements, neither held out the promise of cultural regeneration nor offered the dream of prosperity. To the contrary, the attack against the folk culture characteristic of the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries was renewed with vigor. While religious enthusiasm grew, social life beyond a family level was restric Perhaps, the years of destitution and the ever present threat of famine had made hospitality a luxury which few could afford Perhaps, it was no longer possible for the people to provide whiskey and food for large numbers at a funeral or a wedding. The local ministers assert that the changes were due to the activities of the "Men." It would seem that the "Men" were

---

[48] MacInnes, op. cit., p. 211.

ien to their heritage. There was little local need for 175* 178* ads and steamships, but they were paving the way for the 621
nal stage in commercialization, the conversion of the island to sheep farms.

The record suggests that the culture was suffering from 175* 178*
sorganization and the society had been threatened by dis- 182 786 tegration. The Revival, which began at the close of the itial period, became full blown. This movement confirms at the record suggests. A new pattern of social behavior
d religious life came into being. The traditional secular tterns of interaction were being replaced by patterns of acred interaction. New values, new statuses, and new roles re evolving to give religious sanction to the old patterns.
e result was an esoteric religious hierarchy. The religious 797 aders, both the "Men" and the ministers, were coming from 793
e people rather than the old hereditary families who had een closely related to the gentry. Religion replaced the 175* 178* lan as the focus for the culture. The similarity of the story 182 771 nfolded in the Bible and the past and present conditions of 786
he crofters made the presage of the coming dissolution vivid.
By the end of the period, dissension within the Church had 798 become a significant factor and was paving the way for individual secession. The third period of the modern era was to witness more than a social and economic transformation; there was to be religious schism.

*175 employment as hands on fishing vessels. The young women
*178 followed these fleets seeking work as gutters and curers in 182 the ports. Some may have made their way to Portree, where 161 162 a woolen mill had been erected by the Highland Destitution 161 Committee. The population of Portree increased during these 162 years from 510, in 1841, to 893, in 1881, but this can hardly be regarded as a significant trend.

*175 The really striking aspect of this period is the almost *178 complete lack of protest by the Sgiathanach against the 183 181 violation of his presumptive right to the land. The disappearance 554 of the tacksmen, of course, had left the people without their 773 counselors and leaders in secular affairs, and many of the ministers, especially those who were themselves sheep farmers, counseled submission to the will of God. Then, too, the ethos of the Skyemen would not allow them to ventilate their grievances.
182 They despised the Sassanach and felt that "the landlord was bad enough, but the factor was the Devil himself." Still those who knew them well and those who rambled by their cottages wrote unanimously of a people who endured overwhelming sufferings in patience and reticence.[69] The betrayal of any weakness, especially before the cursed Sassanach, was a breach of propriety.[70]

*175 The Skyeman had not lost his capacity to respond to *178 leadership. Throughout the nineteenth century there had been 668 widespread and growing discontent all over Europe with the [69] Napier Report, Appendix 1, pp. 1-82; and Cummings, op. cit., p. 136. See also Robert Buchanan, The Hebride Isles (London: Chatto and Windus, 1883), p. 324; and Malcolm Ferguson, Rambles in Skye (Irvine: Charles Churchland, 1885), pp. 121, 122.

[70] Norman MacLeod, op. cit., p. 136.

*175 over this and an associated question, the principle of the *178 spiritual independence of the Church from civil authority.
795 Although the Revival might have created or even renewed a belief in the right of a congregation to call their own minister, it is difficult to see how the principle of spiritual non-intrusion, by courts and parliament, could have mattered much to the people. The significance of the Disruption is that it continued the trend toward conservatism established by the Revival and made it an official policy of the Free *175 Church of Scotland. The overwhelming acceptance of the Free
*178 Church manifests a strong correlation with the suggested 182 795 amount of social and cultural disorganization at the close of the second period. It was no accident that the first Free Church congregation should have been in Bracadale, the first parish to be cleared for sheep. It was not by chance that the people of Kilmuir and Glendale, like so many others, turned to *175 this new source of hope. The ministers left the Church in *178 the true tradition of the Covenanters: "in a state of toil
182 795 and privation, whether within or without the Established 793 Church, and under persecution if need be."[74] The people followed them because of emotional attachments which they had formed with the seceding ministers during the Revival. Only the seceding ministers were successfully restoring group solidarity.
Their emotional and dynamic approach was giving the people the 797 means to maintain cultural continuity. The Old Testament, which they were wont to use, was an additional factor. It

[74] Brown, op. cit., p. 1.

*175 told about a people not unlike the crofters, and the prophesies
*178 were being fulfilled before the peoples' very eyes. Is it any 182 795 wonder that thousands gathered on the hillsides to listen to a 793 minister whose dynamic appeals moved them to tears?
797

*175 As the people turned to the new church and the emotionalis
*178 of the large outdoor gatherings, they continued to forsake 183 their old customs and folklore. The songs, except in some 533 cases the waulking songs which provided the tempo for shrinking
792 homespun, and the tales were placed under clerical bann.[75]
793 The ministers and the "Men" insisted on the prerequisite of gravity in all aspects of life for salvation.[76] The communion roles were purged. In Bracadale, for example, there had been 258 communicant members. Following the Disruption there were less than ten.[77] The same pattern was repeated elsewhere on
the island.[78]

*175 The religious patterns which had evolved were, never-
*178 theless, reinforcing much of the traditional way of life.
182 795 The "Men" of Skye had become elders in the Free Church. This 793 554 status sanctioned their position in the community. Although the age structure of the population had not yet altered

[75] Norman MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 11-12, 14.

[76] Norman MacLeod, op. cit., p. 35; and Daniel Lamont, Strath: In Isle of Skye (Glasgow: A. Sinclair, 1913), pp. 27-30.

[77] Norman MacLean, The Years of Fulfillment (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1953) pp. 113-119.

[78] Norman MacLean, Set Free, pp. 14-15, 18, 203-212. See also his The Former Days (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1945), pp. 40-49, 80.

sufficiently to make age controls an irresistible force, the prestige status of the small number of the "elect," those who had experienced a saving change, and, in particular, the elders gave them complete control over all social and religious activity. In a later chapter I shall have more to say about these facts. The important fact which I want to emphasize now is that the religious patterns provided a framework in which the culture could find continuity and through which the society could achieve a reintegration. The abhorrence of pagan-like customs resulted in a change of content, but there were positive results as well. Above all, there was a change in focus for the culture and society. The decadent belief in clan brotherhood was replaced by a sense of belonging to a known religious brotherhood.

Summary. The third period of the modern phase of Skye's culture history saw the culmination of the process of commercialization of the land. All the influences necessary for the conversion of the subsistence economy, albeit a much deteriorated economy, had begun to function. Sheep farming, on a commercial scale, formed the basis for the new economy. Newcomers with the incentive and ability to introduce improved methods of land utilization were replacing the conservative and impoverished crofters and cottars. As the commercial farmers consolidated their holdings, the communal townships were being obliterated. The concept of individual possession of the land was replacing the customary rights of the small tenants, and a clearly defined social hierarchy, based on

wealth, rose above the indigent crofters and cottars.

These changes had a pronounced effect on the culture and the population. Economic hardship and evictions prompted emigration, forced many men and women to seek seasonal work away from home, and led to a reduction in the marriage rate. Crofting which had already become part-time agriculture now was a spare-time pursuit. The Sgiathanach was dependent on money, on the wider economy, for the satisfaction of most of his needs. The croft was providing no more than a few potatoes for the table and some oats for the cattle, the crofter's only export. Still, no landless working force appeared. Portree had grown and there was a woolen mill, but there does not seem to have been any marked movement into the village by the crofters.

While much of what was meaningful to the people was being lost, the religious Revival continued. The conservatism of the "Men" became an official policy of a new church. The emotional approach of the ministers and the "Men," who were now elders in the church, and the emotionalism of the large outdoor meetings functioned to restore the social disequilibrium. Although the extended family, township, and nuclear family suffered from instability, the people found intelligible roles within the religious sphere of activity. Their religion was reinforcing their way of life. The abhorrence of much of the old culture was accompanied by a strengthening of many traits which reaffirmed the desirable status values. The culture found a new focus in congregational religion and was able to maintain a continuity while the content changed.

of farm management under a resident manager, preferably not a Skyeman. The attitude of the former faction was aptly expressed by one person who was about to leave Skye: "We need the Department. If they withdrew, we wouldn't have anybody to go to for anything." This is in striking contrast to the Irish small farmer for whom land ownership is an all important factor in regulating social interaction and status.[24] On Skye land ownership has not led to any change in the traditional status values. A Glendale crofter is not a better man because he owns land.

Prestige Ranking within the Neighborhood. In so far as prestige ranking is concerned, status is more developed within the neighborhood than within the township. In addition to the crofters and their families, there are always several individuals who are given status because of their performance of the necessary functions of ministering to the peoples' spiritual and physical needs and educating the children. These are the only achieved statuses which are valued by the crofters. Noteworthy enough, only the minister of Glendale serves his own "people and friends."

The minister's status depends to some degree on his denomination and the religious sympathies of the people. In Glendale the minister enjoys the highest possible status. In Kilmuir, with two ministers, each is valued by his own congregation with whom he interacts. Nevertheless, all ministers are treated with respect. They are always addressed as the Reverend Mister MacDonald or Mister MacDonald. It is interesting to note that while only the Church of Scotland ministers will assume roles in government, on the district council or the county council, on the education committee, and similar bodies, they have not been given higher status than the ministers of other denominations, who firmly believe the function of the minister is only to correct the public servants when they err.

[24] Arensberg, op. cit., pp. 72-100; Arensberg and Kimball, op. cit., pp. 98-144.

The doctor is coming to fill a status held by no other person, except the county people, the landed gentry. Traditionally, they have ranked second only to the minister, but there is a marked trend to accord them more and more stat The doctors, of course, are less restricted in their social activities and can participate more fully in secular affairs than the ministers. They have a wider range of interaction, entering the homes of all regardless of sectarian differences In Glendale there is no question about the relative positions of the minister and doctor, who lives in Dunvegan. In Kilmuir on the other hand, the doctor is vying with the ministers. He is always addressed by his title, but often, at least in indirect speech, he is Doctor (Ian) rather than Doctor MacLeod. Many of the doctors on Skye have begun to form a cleavage between their families and the crofters. They are sending their sons to private schools. The ministers' children attend the local schools.

The school teachers also enjoy high prestige status. They are always addressed by their surname, prefixed by mister, even by older men whom they call by their Christian names. One newcomer was especially struck by this careful

ents for what have been called "rites of intensification."[49] 175* 178* 182 786 797 793 715 791 [798]
y restored the equilibrium of interaction by creating new avior patterns. This was probably particularly true during famine, when the people's relatives and friends were dying emigrating in large numbers. While the ceilidh, an ning of spinning folk tales, singing, and dancing, was demned, and the children of parents who would not conform
the dictates of one minister and the "Men" were refused tism, prayer meetings and other church services were viding emotional outlets.[50]

Like the Welsh,[51] the Skye crofters found the Bible re- 175* 178* 182 779 786 797
d much of their own past history and their present diffities. As the "Men" preached from Scripture and interpreted meaning, often using allegorical interpretations, of the d, the people became familiar with a story which was striking-similar to their own. The present social and economic ditions were but a presage of the coming dissolution. It all there in the Old Testament, in the books of Judges, s, Chronicles, Psalms, and Prophets. The omen was all the vivid because the transgressors in the Bible lived a much like the crofters. Both the ancient peoples and the men had a pastoral economy, a patrilineal family structure,

---

[49]Eliot D. Chapple and Carleton S. Coon, Principles of ropology (New York: Henry Holt and Co., 1942), pp. 399-400.

[50]Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticane, Vol. VII, p. 166; and en MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), 14-15.

[51]Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

ruled by elders, and a heritage which had never admitted compact, non-rural population centers. These basic cultural values and patterns were given religious sanction.

Year by year throughout this period the following and the influence of the "Men" increased. As the ministers were moved, especially as the old hereditary families of ministers closely related to the old gentry were replaced by ministers from the people,[52] the "Men" became influential in the Church as elders. Now they could not only exhort the people but also judge them, by determining who was worthy of communion and whose children might be baptized. The strength of their control, however, did not require holding office. In Duirinish where an old moderate minister remained, Communion had not been celebrated for eleven years in 1840, and there were 200 unbaptized children.[53] Many preferred to walk miles to worship under an evangelical minister rather than put themselves in peril by hearing the local moderate minister. Dissension was becoming a significant factor and was paving the way for personal secession from the Church. As the official Church was weakened, the stage was set for the Disruption, but we shall leave that for the following period.

Summary. The second period of the modern epoch saw the continuation of the trends established in the initial period. The process of commercialization was carried one step further. The old runrig system was replaced by the crofting system.

---

[52] Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

[53] NSA, pp. 354-355.

discovered on many occasions. I once entertained the thought that its absence was indicative of a decadent culture. Then I discovered that it was a traditional norm of behavior. Only once during the modern period has there been any aggressive behavior, during the closing years of the "Clearances." Some who remember these "old warriors" who were not afraid to stand up for their rights wonder why their descendents have changed. Today only the ministers are aggressive in their dealing with their congregations, and they reserve their aggressive pose for their Sunday sermons. Naturally, the people quarrel among themselves and a couple of drunken men may come to blows with each other or the policeman who interferes. In any group situation or in any dealings with outsiders, however, dislike or resentment takes the form of placid resistance. The Islander remains courteous and suffers in silence. This is "affect suppression," resultant from Protestantizing the crofters.[39] Even the talkative individual, unless he stands among the gentry or has achieved prestige status through his profession, is considered an eccentric. He must stand the snickers of the group and bear the title of a "worthy," a man who does not act his age.

Real anger, manifested by a loud or quavering voice, or table pounding, clenching one's fist or other recognizable signs, is not characteristic of the Sgiathanach in public. The man who forgets himself is always taken in hand by the minister, an old man, or a teacher. He may feel righteous indignation, but if he

[39] I am indebted to Conrad Arensberg for calling my attention to this fact.

The religion of the Sgiathanach may also be regarded as the logical outcome of a movement which began two centuries ago when the all inclusive bonds of kinship and affection were replaced with tenets introduced from the wider contractual society. This movement, as we know, bore its first fruits over a hundred years ago. The people themselves turned from the ministers who were supporting symbols and values no longer meaningful to the crofters. They embraced the preachers of a dynamic gospel as a means of consolation in their distress. Thus, the religious pattern derived elsewhere and superimposed on the Sgiathanach has been refined with logic and vigor. It has become the one insurmountable barrier to assimilation with Great Britain. No less than four times religious schism has demonstrated the essential unchangeableness of their religion. The process has been carried on with such dedication and success that it now disturbs the unsympathetic laity and the clergy of the Church of Scotland no less than the resistance of the people to Presbyterianism did in the remote past.

We saw in Chapter IV how an understanding of the religious history of Skye is indispensible for the comprehension of the larger problem, the means by which the culture has maintained continuity. In Chapter V and again in Chapter VI we saw how this continuity has been preserved. We have at last come to the point at which we can ask why has there been continuity. The following analysis is concerned with the sanctions of the Presbyterian ethic, particularly as it affects the social structure, religious behavior, and the roles of the ministers and the religious laity in the

All the churches on Skye are organized in identical fashion on the local or parish level of church administration. According to the democratic principles outlined in the Bible and the Books of Discipline (1561 and 1578), the congregation alone decides who will serve as their spiritual leaders. It will be remembered that patronage was one of the causes for the church schism of 1843. The members call their minister and elect the elders, deacons, and in several churches, a precentor. The elders are the very pinnacle of the lay religious hierarchy. They are chosen from the "elect" to act as the guardians of the moral and religious behavior of the congregation and to lead the congregation in worship on certain occasions which we shall meet with later. The deacons are similarly chosen from the "elect" to look after the financial affairs of the kirk. The precentor is a chanter. He gives out the psalms the people sing line by line. No matter what the official position of the church, expressed by the General Assembly, Synod, or Presbytery--the higher religious courts--the local kirk session composed of the minister and his elders retains decisive power.

Erring members of the congregation are called before these guardians of the people's behavior for judgment and discipline. For the protection of the congregation, the Presbytery, composed of the minister and a selected elder from each church, examines and installs newly called ministers and has the power to censure any minister guilty of a spiritual or moral transgression or infringement of his duty to the eternity. If he was one of the "elect, life. If he was not one of these vener

he can expect to suffer eternal damnati
is a sacrament and removes original sin,
step in the direction of salvation, whi firms. Neither the minister nor any me family offers a prayer. "What more can one woman asked. An old man said, "Tre remembered without praying for them."
is dominated by the old people, and in hoods where so many of the crofters are be expected to disturb the equilibrium
In Glendale during November and Decembe processions made their way through the times. The function of the minister is turbed patterns, both in the family and (or village). All work stops in the to from the time of death. Some of the co village, seeking to justify their devia that the lazy crofter looks forward to means three days of idleness. In the v is no longer possible to bring daily li cause the villagers serve a wide area.
deceased do stop work and close their s funeral all blinds are drawn until afte
passed.

As he would if there were illness minister calls on the bereaved family a

" he will enjoy eternal 763 able old men and women, 554 775
on. Although baptism 851
it is only the initial 783
ch election alone con-
mber of the bereaved 764
you do than bury him," 793
y are just as well 782
In a community which the crofting neighbor-
very old, death can
of social interaction.
r of 1953 funeral glen no less than nine to restore the dis- 793
in the neighborhood 182 nship for three days smopolitans of the 369
ting behavior, assert 829
a funeral because it
illage, of course, it 369
fe to a standstill be-
The "people" of the hops. On the day of the r the procession has

in the family, the 793
nd leads them in family 764

worship. If the deceased is a Sgiathanach, the minister will 793 764 call every night, if he can. Otherwise, he may call only once. His participation in family worship helps to refocus the patterns of interaction within the nuclear family and within the small circle of "people," "friends," and neighbors who come to visit and take part. Some sophisticated villagers 184 369 take this opportunity to justify their own deviations, such as going to a concert; for them this is all "a religious ceilidh with all their psalm singing, praying, and greeting." The 152 562 people do not keen, as they do in Ireland, but the women are seldom dry-eyed. Again the villager may comment that the minister at least should say a few kind words about the dead, "just to comfort his family."

On the day of burial a second and more inclusive rite of intensification is held. On this occasion the function of the minister, often aided by an elder, is to restore the equilibrium within the total sphere in which the deceased habitually moved during his life. If the person had high prestige status, the ministers of two churches conduct the family worship. All the "people," "friends," and neighbors, both men and women, attend. The minister begins with a prayer for the family, asking God's guidance. This is followed by the singing of a few verses of psalm by all who have gathered. Next the minister reads from Scripture. He concludes with another prayer for the family. If there are two ministers, or a minister and an elder present, they alternate in leading the group. If there are any present who do not "have the Gaelic," they also alternate between English and Gaelic. We have seen how 764

the nearest kin carry the body from the house. The custom 764
is to carry the coffin until the procession is out of sight of the house. This may mean a few hundred yards or several miles. Once the body was carried all the way to the grave. One skeptic said this is why Skye has lost so many people, "Half of them died carrying the other half to the grave." In Portree the body is carried across the bridge on the far side of the town. All the mourners, except the women who remain at home, and the two nearest kin who walk before and after the coffin, are given an opportunity to carry. They continuously change positions with the carriers, stepping out at the head of the line by sixes and waiting for the coffin. Those who have carried fall in at the rear of the procession. When they 602 reach the graveyard, the original carriers, his nearest kin, remove the body from the hearse and lower it into the grave. At the grave the minister delivers a short lecture on the merits 793 795 of living in the nurture of God. Only the Church of Scotland ministers offer an additional prayer for the family. The other sects believe a prayer at the grave is a prayer for the dead. Following the interment, the bereaved family provides the 273 mourners with a dram of whiskey. Does the minister take a 793
dram? I can only give the reader the answer I received after one funeral. One fellow said, "I guess nobody saw him take his drop, but if he didn't I'd be surprised." On the following day life returns to normal. The equilibrium of interaction has been restored.

people of the Free Church are "the Wee Frees." The Free 795 Presbyterians are the "Seceders" or, at least to some of the gentry, the "Split P's." Arguing about religion is 576 considered very bad taste. It is left to the ministers, 793 and they do have their points of difference. One Free 795 798
Presbyterian minister, for example, told me that no one in the Church of Scotland, including the minister, was worthy to receive Communion. On many occasions during the year the ministers of the Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church devote part of their sermon to a criticism of the Church of Scotland, not to mention the avid hostility of all Skyemen toward Catholics.

Adherents of the several sects intermarry with no qualms 582
and without suffering any loss of status. By the time a 795 person gets to be a member, marriage is no longer in his mind. Husband and wife continue to adhere to their respective 593 795 denominations, those in which they were baptized. The children 851 naturally, are baptized and raised in the church of their father. Extended families are often divided religiously 596 795 along sectarian lines. In one family one brother and his wife were Free Presbyterians, another brother and his wife were Free Church, a sister was Church of Scotland. The parents had been Free Church but became Free Presbyterians at the turn of the Century. At least one cousin was United Free Church. This religious schism did not affect their affection for one another. Once a week the sister went to have tea with her Free Church sister-in-law. Periodically chapel and its group.[16] On Skye the people can be as much attached to the sect or their minister as the group. The reason for this difference between Skye and Wales may be the recency of the appearance of the several churches on Skye. As presently constituted, all the churches were formed at the turn of the century or later. The first Free Presbyterian congregation was formed in 1896. The present Free Church, often called the Free Church (continuing), dates from 1900. The Church of Scotland is the result of unions with the Free Church in 1900 and the United Church in 1929.

My assertion that attachment is to sect and minister can be substantiated by two events, one in Portree and the other in the neighborhood known as the Braes. In 1900 when the Free Church and the United Presbyterian Church united, the Free Church minister in Portree led his congregation over to the Church of Scotland in a body.[17] Only three policemen's families, all of them newcomers, refused to follow the minister. For 13 years there was no Free Church congregation. Our three families attended the Free Presbyterian Church, until the minister at one Sabbath service held forth on the shortcomings of the Free Church. They left and began holding services in the Court House. In time the congregation grew. A missionary was appointed and later a minister. More recently, a minister of the Free Presbyterian Church, who was noted for a certain amount of leniency, such as allowing his flock to attend concerts, had a point of difference with the Synod and was removed. In the Braes which had been as staunchly Free Presbyterian as Glendale, roughly half of the congregation changed their adherence to the Free Church. The remainder have continued true to their own sect under a new minister.

---

[16] Rees, Life in a Welsh Countryside, p. 115.

[17] For a similar change in Kilmuir, see Chapter IV.

There are numerous Free Presbyterian families far beyond the reach of a minister. All they can hope for is an occasional visit, and there are no missionaries of this sect on the island. Although they attend services at the nearest kirk of the Free Church, doctrinal differences are still important enough in their minds to keep them within the folds of their sect. They were born in it and will die in it. Moreover, despite the lack of a minister in Glendale between 1908-1911, 1913-1920, and 1931-1933, the people are as staunch as ever. At such times one of the elders steps forward to conduct services as he would during the temporary absence of the minister. His ability to fill the role of a spiritual leader fortifies his control and his prestige. This is true in Portree. The elder, even a newcomer, who stands in the pulpit is deeply respected. Identity with, and attachment to the denomination is maintained in the absence of a minister by visiting other churches at the Communion season and by the visits of a minister on the Sabbath and for annual Thanksgiving services following the harvest. So strong is the sectarianism of the Glendale crofters that the Church of Scotland minister for Duirinish is convinced that "Churchianity mainland villages and crofting areas. Ministers from 178

neighboring and even distant churches used to come to take 794 part in conducting the services. There was no church to hold 796
so many people, so the Communion was celebrated outside. Then, of course, the population was much larger and the majority belonged to one church, the Free Church.

The Communion Season is still marked by large gatherings 794
of people at each church in turn. The "elect" from the 796 neighboring churches and the ministers from churches near and far exchange visits. The adherents also participate in the celebration of the Lord's Supper. From Thursday until 794
Monday the homes of the people in the vicinity are open to 796
their relatives and friends who have come to partake of the 574 sacrament or who find the highly emotional atmosphere and gregariousness stimulating. Some, especially the "elect," stay for the five days. Others will spend one or more nights. During the day and in the evening, whenever they are not [571] attending religious services, they visit their "people" and "friends" to renew ties which in many cases have been allowed to languish since the last Communion. Thus, we find religion [182] sanctioning the time-honored custom of Highland hospitality. It is interesting to note that many a woman who depends on [485] the tourist trade for a good share of her income will not accept paying guests at this time. The local people have a further 794 share in extending hospitality to their visitors. All who 796
are able send food to the manse (parsonage) to lessen the 574
burden on the minister who extends hospitality to the 793 ● visiting clergy and as many of the laity as he can. This custom is well established. Even war-time restrictions and 794

rationing had little effect on Communion attendance. Skye 796
exiles in the United States and Canada sent food parcels 793 ●
to the ministers and their kinsmen to provide for their 574
visitors. The minister takes in as many as he can. One [167] minister, for example, not very far from Portree has a large manse with seventeen rooms. It is customary for him to have [264] twenty-five or thirty people for lunch and again for high tea (the Skyeman's evening meal) on Friday and the Sabbath. Many of his guests spend five days with him.

Some idea of the size of the gatherings may be gained 794
from the need for the Free Presbyterian Church in Portree 796
to hold duplicate services. The church, I should think, holds around 300. During the Communion Season, the congregation takes over the drill hall, normally used by the Territorial Army for training and by the villagers for social affairs, in addition to the kirk. In the drill hall services are held in English; in the kirk, they are in Gaelic.

Such large gatherings of people require a means to establish meaningful contacts and create a feeling of belonging. Thursday is a fast day. All work stops. The people attend services in the morning, at noon, and again in the evening. Their minister, assisted by two visiting clergymen conducts them in a dynamic, highly emotional appraisal of the coming event. All the ministers participate in the sermons, stressing [78
the confession of sin and the need for humiliation. Many ministers are known for their preaching ability, that is their

glens a family, newcomers to Skye, prevailed on the local 191
school teacher to hold a Sabbath school for the children. 771
The local missionary objected. If they were going to have 621
Sabbath school, it should be in Gaelic. His prestige and control over the population secured his position. The children of the people who originated and organized the program were excluded because they did not "have the Gaelic."

Another problem which is beginning to stem from the 191
use of Gaelic as the language of religion is the difficulty 793 of securing a minister. Traditionally, it was an ideal to [183] send a son to study for the ministry. This ideal remains, [874]
but in the last few years only one young man from Skye has shown a desire to become a minister. Indeed, the majority of ministers on Skye are not Skyemen. I believe the only minister who serves his own neighborhood, the neighborhood in which he was born and raised, is the Free Presbyterian minister in Glendale. It is becoming more and more difficult to fill charges as they go vacant. Each year several Highland charges are changed from "Gaelic essential" to "Gaelic preferred." If we go beyond the role 121
of religion as it orders human relationships, through its 771
more formal aspects, and consider the influence of religion 626
on the secular behavior of the Sgiathanach, we can come 178
closer to an understanding of why the youth are slowly turning away. At the same time we shall be able to round out our picture of the expression given to the Presbyterian ethic on Skye.

[621] character traits just by virtue of his belonging to a 156 particular family; he is protected from the "out"
[520] world even though he may have broken its rules. The [519] village provides a colorful arena of recreation in the form of ceilidh, the character, and holidays such as New Year's.

[781] A major system of order and meaning is provided by
• 794 religion, and by the opportunity to belong to a tightly-[181] knit religious clique. Lewis is sometimes called Tir an I-moigenil, Land of the Scriptures, in contrast with [57] the decadent outer world. The male drinking fraternity
[82] constitutes a second important group. And for everyone
[520] there is the cinema of their neighbors' activities, which are placed in a vast human calendar that includes the behavior of many generations.

Chapter 6

THE BIBLE AND THE BOTTLE

[591] Two of the most important networks in the village are
• 794 the converted members of the Free Church, and the drinking [215] fraternity of the males, especially the unmarried males who lack the obligations of married men, and who can therefore drink with greater freedom.

A. The Bottle

[293] The word "whiskey" (or "whisky," as it is spelled in [175] Scotland) is almost synonymous with "Scotland," despite the fact that the earliest reference to whiskey in that country appears only in the late 15th century. The word is derived from the Gaelic uisge beatha, "water of life," a translation from the Latin aqua vita.

Martin Martin (1716: 3) describes the types of liquor made from "corn" in the Outer Hebrides as Common Usquebaugh, Trestarig (three times distilled), and Usquebaugh-baugh (four times distilled). He states, "...two spoonfuls of this last liquor is a sufficient Dose; and if any Man exceed this, it would presently stop his Breath and endanger his life."

[293] out and celebrate. There's no other way to express [501] myself."
[156]
[154]

"Now that Ruaridh has stopped drinking, he's not very interesting to talk to. He's very dull these days. He doesn't say a thing."

During the Communions, a sense of excitement and [501] holiday permeates the village. Among the converted [526] members of the Free Church, this feeling is expressed in
• 794 vigorous participation in long church services and meetings
[794] in the homes of the converted. In the rest of the village, the unconverted men don their best suits and head for the hotel, or the bothan opens earlier in the week than usual. All special occasions such as fank days or the arrival of relatives generate excitement, which is most often expressed, among the unconverted men, by drinking.

[781] A man may propose to a woman, and the next day "forget"
[293] this rash action with impunity. When a man has been [501] drinking, he is more likely than on other occasions to [594] be openly affectionate to a woman, or to express strong feelings of friendship to his fellows. "It's the only time when you're really happy. You can sing, tell your life story. It's the only time when people are really friendly. But it's a false friendship, because when you meet someone the next day, he's not the same person. He's distant, cold. You feel depressed. You want to recreate the situation, so you start drinking again."

[781] 1. Bible vs. Bottle: An islander living on the [293] mainland once observed that the Free Church plays cat
[501] and mouse with members of the community who drink heavily.
• 794 Death is a common event in a community which has a large
[161] number of old people, and the theme of death appears repeatedly in sermons and in the conversations of those who have undergone religious conversion. The temporary pleasures of drink are contrasted with the eternal joys awaiting those who have been saved. The "false" friend-
[781] ships of the drinking situations are contrasted with the more lasting, consistent relations which characterize the clique of the converted. "You have lots of friends when you get converted, and they don't change overnight the way your drinking companions do."

[293] "With the drink it's easy to get started and just not
[594] be able to stop drinking, especially with the money there
[781] is now. Everything's unsteady here except religion."

[293] Many of the most deeply religious male members of [794] the church were once heavy drinkers. One villager observed, [783] "If a man went to extremes as a sinner, he'll be just as [781] fanatical when he becomes holy. Had it not been for
[143] religion, some of them would have landed in Craig Dunain [the mental hospital near Inverness]. The talk is forever on religion. That keeps their mind at rest."

[175] to join the Free Church (Donaldson 1960: 100). The Free
[795] Presbyterians left the Free Church in 1893 because they found it too "liberal." Several dissenting groups, including most of the members of the Free Church, formed [659] a United Free Church at the turn of the century. After a long court case, the church property was left with the Free Church, which continues to support itself without aid from the state. Collections and funds solicited by [795] • 794 villagers who visit the households periodically are sent
[465] to a central office in Edinburgh, which pays all ministers an equal salary, despite variations in the size of their congregations. About one-fourth of the church's income comes from Lewis. A minister's salary is between L950-1,000, and the upkeep and fueling of his manse is included. The present minister in Shawbost uses oil and coal, but at an earlier time received loads of peat from the villagers. The villagers bring extra food to the manse when Communions are held, although the church donates about L20 to be used to provide for visiting ministers.

[795] The Free Church contains a number of presbyteries, of which Lewis and Harris are one. An Assembly is held each year which parallels the Assembly held by the Church of Scotland. (According to one minister of the Free Church, "A Berlin wall divides the two.") The Free Church publishes a monthly report of church activities and amount of money

[795] collected, and an annual report on morals, which usually condemns drinking and "the decline in moral standards."
Ministers are trained in a college in Edinburgh. Many [177] are Gaelic speakers, although the number is said to be declining.

• 794 When a congregation loses a minister because of death [783] or other reasons, it issues a "call" to some other minister.
The congregation is familiar with the names and preaching styles of a number of ministers, who have in the past visited the community as guest speakers. The congregation votes for a minister from a list made by the lay officers of the church. The minister may or may not accept the call.

[795] The Free Church and the Free Presbyterian Church, two [178] fundamentalist Protestant sects which have survived the tendencies toward unification evident since the turn of the century, are strongest in the Highlands and Islands. Shawbost contains a few people who belong to the Church of Scotland, but most villagers belong to the Free Church.

[795] The only church (in the sense of a building in which sermons [346] are preached) is a Free Church which was built in 1883, [193] supposedly after men from Shawbost helping to repair the fence at the minister's manse in Carloway, where they then attended church, were refused boiling water for their oatmeal "brose" by the minister's wife. A building in which members of the Church of Scotland worshipped was built

[795] before 1883 but now serves as a school museum. When it [346] closed, most of the members changed to the Free Church.

• 794 The present congregation includes many families from the neighboring village of Bragar, who come to church for the morning service and usually attend a prayer meeting in their own village in the evening. Once a month the minister gives an evening sermon in Bragar. The left side of the church, where most of the Bragar people sit, is called "the Bragar side."

Lay officers of the church, called elders and deacons, are elected by the communicants, those members of the congregation who have taken Communion. Both elders and deacons sit in special seats at the front of the church beneath the pulpit. Deacons, who are concerned with material matters such as collections and church property, sit in the "wee seats" slightly lower than the partitioned seats of the elders, the "big seats." The deacons meet in a deacons' court which the elders may attend. A meeting is held once a year at which the congregation is told matters such as how the church money was spent. Kirk sessions are limited to elders, who decide who will be baptised or take Communion.

[621] Each street or neighborhood within the village has its own deacon and elder, to whom members of the street bring various matters that concern church organization, such as plans for baptism.

• 794 2. The Township as Religious Network: The religious [621] sphere has two distinguishable social networks, one of which coincides in personnel with the village network. Most households within the village feel obligated to "make an appearance" during at least one of the two 794 Sunday services. Most children are sent to Sunday school, [85] and all are baptised. In baptism, fathers stand with the children, promise to raise them in the church, and to set a good example for them. Baptism must precede Communion, the ceremony by which a person becomes a full member of the church. Baptism signifies membership in the community the village-qua-congregation. "Somehow you're not really legal until you've been baptised." Some feel that the child's soul may be endangered if he should die without baptism, although this idea is discouraged by the church.
[199] According to the Calvinistic ideas of predestination, the [621] fate of one's soul has already been decided.
794 The pressure to have children baptised enables the [85] village-as-congregation to exert social control over devia
[621] individuals. If a child is conceived out of wedlock, the [848] parents of the child (if they have gotten married) or the unwed mother alone must stand in front of the congregation and be lectured by the minister before the child may be baptised. A woman who has married a man known not to be the father of her child must also stand by herself. A

784 miscarriage occurring before marriage also requires
832 standing even when the child to be baptised was conceived
824 by the couple after marriage. A married man who has 849 impregnated a woman who is not his wife must undergo [837] this ordeal before he can have his own children baptised.

It is the responsibility of the entire community to ensure that this punishment is carried out. On one occasion, the minister forgot to lecture a couple, and afterwards sent them a note that they would not have to stand; but they insisted, afraid that people would say that they were getting special treatment.

[203] According to one minister, the manse is a kind of [572] "research center" to which all gossip is reported. Some
[793] ministers use this information in the pulpit, chiding
• [799] people and calling attention to wrong-doings in front of the congregation. In contrast, a different attitude exists
[184] in parts of Stornoway, where villagers have approached
[154] doctors in the maternity ward for information regarding miscarriages and premarital births only to be told that this information is confidential. The ordeal of standing in church does not exist in Stornoway. In 1971 a person
[178] in Shawbost was accidentally exempted from this ordeal and his exemption was seen by some as providing an opportunity to stop what is considered by many to be an archaic custom.

791 the children might not receive proper religious 792 instruction.
178

"Family worship" is considered an important part 791 of daily life. Prayers should be said before meals
792 and teas, and the head of the household should read
673 passages from the Bible to the assembled members of the household every morning and evening. The practice of [178] "reading the books" prevails in households headed by 572 older men, but is less common among families headed by younger men.

• 794 2. The Clique of the Converted: The second network
632 within the religious sphere is a special religious in-
621 group, the clique of the converted (curamach). This clique constitutes a relatively strongly bounded system which to some extent competes with the township boundary system. Owen (Rees 1960) has noted that as persons become more involved with religion in the Protestant Hebrides, they tend to remove themselves from community life.

Intense involvement with the church sometimes conflicts with township activities since people may attend Communions at times when a fank is planned, leaving the work to be done by others. When elders of the church are present at activities, such as fanks, which are otherwise usually boisterous and full of humor, behavior tends to be "properly" restrained.

• 794 Membership in the religious clique offers many 781 satisfactions. "You can talk with the converted all night, see them the next day and go on talking, because you're always talking about something new. Now, when [192] you hear someone telling a yarn or joke, you say to yourself, I've heard that before, I don't want to hear it again. But when you're talking about Christ, sharing your experiences of conversion, the conversation is always new."

794 A few cynical, non-converted persons describe the 781 clique as a "social club" whose members sit together in 824 church, shake hands with each other more often than with non-members, and are always having meetings in each others' houses from which others are excluded. "They came in and invited Jessie and Harian to come to their prayer meeting, but they didn't ask me. They have tea, sing psalms, and have religious discussions. Ministers and converted people from all over the island come to these meetings."

"I said to her, 'You wouldn't be caught dead talking to me. At the church you all shake hands with each other, but never with me. How about passing some of it on?'"

The non-converted often express envy, and say they wish they felt the same way that the converted people seem to feel. "I was sitting with my sister at the fire

• 794 one night, and she said, 'I've got something, have you?'
781 She told me, 'I've got Christ.' She said that Christ
824 whispered to her as we were sitting there, "Come, come, come to me.' Now she's got full military honors. I felt so bad when she took Communion, because I hadn't got it. We're all going to die. Christ is everything. Without Christ you've got nothing. I go to bed at night and something is hanging over the bed saying, 'This isn't your bed, this isn't your place.' This is the last fling, you won't have me with you long. The next time you see me, I'll be in the church parade."

Often the converted are criticized for "dropping the old crowd" or for not fulfilling their neighborly obligations. "When these people need something, they're going to be hard put to find anyone eager to help them." "You're supposed to be good and loving when you're converted, but they never help anybody except themselves. They look down on anyone who's not converted."

When someone begins to come to the Wednesday night prayer meetings, the most noticeable sign of conversion, the newcomers are welcomed into the fold with eagerness; after the prayer meeting, members shake their hands and congratulate them. To be converted is to be "Born again." "My life is like a boat that was once tied to a pier with many ropes. One by one, these ropes have fallen away. There is only drudgery to this life. I feel as though I

• 794 could float right up to heaven. The only pleasure I get, 781 although it is but a shadow of that ultimate joy, is being
824 in the company of good-living people."

The converted often spend evenings with each other singing psalms and sharing experiences of conversion. They follow the Communions as they are given in different congregations throughout the island, and may even go to Communions on the mainland. "You get to meet all kinds of interesting people that you wouldn't meet otherwise. If it weren't for these meetings, it would be like the cities, you'd never meet." "East side knows west side because of the Communions, not because of the dances. You're alone at dances." Although every house in the village is open to visitors at Communion times, the converted tend to gather in the homes of their fellow converted, where, between the twice-daily services, they gather for intense religious discussion.

Persons who are converted, even if they have not taken Communion, attend the prayer meeting held in the middle of each week, but only the communicants may attend the "private meetings" (coinne ualgneach), which are held once a month. "My father used to tease my mother, who went to these 'darkness' meetings. But it's only a prayer meeting that gives the younger, recently converted members a chance to give the prayers, since when you're a communicant you're

• 794 called on an awful lot to give prayers in church, and it's 781 hard for some of them to get up and speak." The Reverend 829 Macleod notes in his diary that private meetings were [915] initiated on the island in 1826.

A quarterly meeting (coinne raith) is held in Stornoway, [996] to which many of the converted from the villages go. The Communions are held twice a year. "Special services," or "small communions," held soon after the Communions, are intended as evangelical services for young people, that is, services enjoining people to convert. These services, which last from Monday through Friday, were started in Rees after the first world war.

794 4. The Communions (Cruisigheas): Communions are given
794 twice a year, during autumn and late winter. They are scheduled for different weeks in different parts of the island, and neighboring congregations close their churches when Communions are being held nearby, so that during the Communion season some persons may attend a number of services at different churches.

In the days when transportation was limited, visitors
794 coming from a distance away stayed for an entire weekend.
574 All households prepared food and made ready for any over-
794 night visitors who might arrive without prior warning.
173 Guests often slept on mattresses laid on the floor. After 484 facilities of transportation improved, it became common for people to drive down for the day in private cars and return to their own homes at night.

000 return to their own homes at night. There is now less 794 need for the generalized hospitality of the past, which
• 794 was given to anyone who came to the door looking for food 824 and shelter. Through these visits some families in 591 different villages have, however, established relation-
574 ships which are kept up by exchanging hospitality at times of Communion and also in other ways. A family in [262] Rees may send to a friendly family in Shawbost some ewes,
[250] goslings of solan geese which are captured by Nessmen on the island of Rona once a year and are salted to make a delicacy that is in great demand. Through such contacts a family wanting to purchase a cow may receive word of one that is being offered for sale in the village of a Communion contact.

794 Services of Communion last five days. All services except that held on Sunday evening are intended for the communicants or full members of the church, also called [535] "the believers" and "good livers." During this time, no
[805] dances are held in Shawbost, and in Carloway the hotel is closed.

On Communion Sunday, the upper balcony of the church
794 is filled with villagers watching to see if any of the 794 recently converted have decided and have been allowed to 824 take Communion. Because the villagers watch very closely the behavior of everyone else within the village, any change

794 in behavior is noticed long before the person takes
• 794 Communion. A person may never take Communion, even 824 though they are generally known as "good living."

A person who shows signs of being "good living" (converted) is carefully watched by all villagers, but especially by the clique of the converted whose strict standards he must satisfy before he is able to gain admission.

A communicant who gets drunk or in other ways falls from grace is not allowed to take Communion again until he goes before the kirk session and attests that his ways have been mended.

794 Thursday, the first day of the Communions, is "a day
794 of humiliation and prayer." Friday is Latha na Caint, [182] the day of questions or catechism, sometimes called "fast ship day" or "men's day." A passage is read from the Bible, which different elders must discuss in the light of their experiences of conversion. The day is also called a day of marks and signs. The elders who speak as a part of the day's rites are from congregations outside the village, which is regarded as "a matter of courtesy, and to bring in new ideas." They are called on by the minister and stand to give testimony or "fellowship," sharing their experiences of conversion with the assembly. These attestations are also spoken of as giving "tokens"

at Skeabost. A minister drove by one day and said to the 785
workmen, "Don't you know you're building a house for the Devil?" 795
One of the laborers, a Lowlander, replied, "It's a good thing 575
we have a place to keep him." The Order of the Eastern Star and the Masons are condemned because, while they are religious,
they are secret orders. Even if the person's religion did not stand in the way of his becoming a Mason, his distrust of mystery probably would. As one young fellow said one night in the bar when being chaffed about the Masons, "I'm not going to join any secret organization until I know what the secret is."

Included among the objectionable activities by these two 785
churches are the traditional Highland Games, held each year 795
at Portree in August, probably about the time of the old Saint's 541 Fair. The day is a school holiday. Aside from New Years, it is the big occasion of the year. People come in from all over the Island. Few of the Skyemen actively take part in [526]
the contests of tossing the caber and throwing the stone, or in the piping and dancing competitions, but they look forward to the event. It gives them an opportunity to see their [571]
"friends" and join them in the pub for a dram. Although the [793]
ministers disappprve, they lack the backing of the "elect," so the games go on each year. I hasten to add that they have lost much of their appeal in recent years, but I am told that this is due to the fact that the clique who runs the Skye
Council of Social Service has, in an effort to attract tourists early in the season, set up Skye Week in May. Included in the Skye Week program are Highland Games. I might also add

794

794 CONGREGATIONS--groups organized for common worship (e.g., kin and local groups, special cult-groups, church congregations, parishes); lay organization (e.g., elders, deacons, committees); qualification for membership; admission and disciplining of members; fund raising; maintenance of place of worship; religious activities (e.g., sunday school); secular church activities (e.g., education, welfare work, church gambling, temple money lending); recreational facilities (e.g., parish houses); etc. See also:

Recreation 52
Religious activities of kin and local groups . 61, 62
Churches and temples 346
Banking 453
Relief and welfare 73, 74
Education 87
Gambling 525
Temple prostitution 786

[For information on parishes, see categories 631 and 632.]

which signify that they are believers and differentiate them from the non-believers. "Some people may think they're ready to take Communion, but listening to these people helps them to see if they really are. Often their daily actions give the lie to their intentions, and they realise this and decide to wait a while longer." The sermon is propitiatory and includes psalms on such subjects as "Blessed are they that see the light."

After this service, the minister announces that the kirk session is prepared to interview new persons who would like to take Communion. From Friday until Saturday night, individuals "give witness" before the session. After an individual has described his experiences of conversion and has been catechised, he leaves the room and his case is discussed. The elders bring up any items of behavior that would cast doubt on his testimony. Questions about his moral behavior might include, "Has he taken a drink lately? Has he been seen in a dance hall? Is his behavior sufficiently circumspect?" The person is then called back and told the decision of the session by the minister. Occasionally someone is rejected.

Saturday is the day of preparation, the day on which those planning to take Communion are called upon to look at themselves carefully, inspect their faith, and prepare themselves to go to the Lord's table. After the morning service, believers remain in the church where they receive tokens given to them by the elder of their street. These are pieces of metal on which is printed the name of the church and village, and a verse from Corinthians, "Do this in remembrance of me." Communicants planning to take Communion in other villages take with them tokens which they have received from their own minister, or ask the local minister for one.

The Communion Services begin on Sunday morning at about 11:30. Persons not taking Communion sit in the back of the church or in the balcony. Communicants give their tokens to the elders who stand in the aisles, and are allowed to sit in seats in the front section of the church, which are marked off from the other seats by white tablecloths. The service lasts for three to four hours. Many communicants also spend a half hour or an hour in informal prayer before the ministers arrive to begin the service. In the past, a prayer meeting was also held at 6:00 in the morning, a custom still practiced in some places, such as the island of Scalpay.

Sunday is the only day of Communion on which standardized selections of Biblical verses are spoken and psalms are sung. On other days the ministers are allowed wide variation in the contents of their services. On Sunday, Psalm 22 is followed by the reading of Isaiah 53, and

and then by Psalm 69, all of which emphasize the suffering of Christ. The sermon which follows may be based on any text; its intent is to strengthen the believers. It is followed by Psalm 118. The minister then announces that the most sacred part of the day's service will follow, the "feasting at the table" (mir-gnath na a-Shoper). He reads from Galatians 3, in which those of the flesh are separated from those of the spirit. Those who wish to take Communion are exhorted to leave everything behind, including husbands, wives, parents and children who are non-believers, and to "bear the fruits of the spirit. One man is said to have become converted when he saw his wife going to take Communion for the first time.

Psalm 103, a psalm of blessing, is then sung. Until five years ago, communion was served at the end of the congregation and rose to "come to the table" (those seats marked off by white tablecloths or sheets) for different "sittings," as the congregation sang the psalms of blessing.

The elders then take the elders to bring to the elements" of wine and bread. The wine is served in silver pitchers (which are refilled from bottles kept in a trunk beside the pulpit) by an elder who turns his back to the congregation while doing this task, and poured into silver wine goblets which are passed down the rows of communicants along with plates filled with bread cut into tiny squares. The ministers and the elders partake first. A final hymn is full of rejoicing, and the minister then exhorts the communicants to return to the world and give witness and to live exemplary lives.

The evening service on Sunday is evangelical, intended for non-believers. After this service the communicants conduct a brief prayer meeting to give thanks.

On Monday, the minister again tells the communicants to go out into the world and declare publically their experiences of the preceding day; and to demonstrate in everything they do and say that they are believers. In the past, only a morning service was given, as most people had a long journey ahead of them to return home; but now that cars are available, a similar evening service is also conducted.

3. The Process of Conversion: The process of conversion may be slow or sudden, but conversion is most common at middle age and young persons. One informant wryly observed, "Only recently women were allowed to have souls. But from the looks of the Communion table, mostly women are going to heaven." Many of the women taking Communion are dressed from head to foot in black, a color which indicates their widowed status.

The first sign that a person is "following" (leanmail) the church is that he begins to attend the weekly prayer meetings. If a woman converts when she is off the island, this occasionally happens during the first year or so at university or other school, the tell-tale sign is that she begins to let her hair grow, and wears it tied back in a bun.

The word cursed means "conversion," but is also used in ordinary conversation to mean being careful, such as keeping one's clothes tidy. It also means to be circumspect. In a religious context, it means to be careful of one's behavior, as this behavior reflects on the state of one's soul. When a person "has the cursed," he has demonstrated that he is "in a state of conviction," that he has undergone a change in his life. This change has come into my life." The "change" includes the cessation of drinking and going to dances and concerts. Woman stop smoking. "After you are converted, you don't watch TV on Sunday. You should do everything for Sunday on Saturday, like shine your shoes for church or cook the Sunday dinner."

A dramatic change in behavior is often found among men who have had a history of hard drinking. One man went into the harbour, conversed a glass to his lips, but never drank. "He put it down and walked out. They put the glass of whiskey aside, expecting him to return. He was a hard-working man, one of the hardest workers in the village, but everything went to hoose in the bothan. He slept in conversions that take place in other villages. "Five persons converted recently in Locha. Two used to drink a lot, they're saying." Sometimes mass conversions occur, called "revivals," during which people shout, chant, speak in tongues, and sometimes collapse.

Although strict observance of religious practices must be maintained by the converted while they are on the island, it is possible for them to relax this observance when they visit mainland cities. The converted see nothing wrong with attending plays or movies in Glasgow, as long as no one observes them. A non-believer once commented wryly, "They believe in the 11th commandment: thou shalt not be seen." Women who have spent many years in domestic service on the mainland, where they generally live very different sorts of lives from those of island people, often return to the island to retire. They then take up the color of their surroundings. The long black dress then becomes the appropriate garb for them on Sundays. As one person observed, "Women deposit their murain in the left luggage Department at Stornoway, and pick it up fifty years later."

The beliefs of the Free Church include explanations for all events. "Everything of importance that happened in history is recorded in the Bible." Predestination lies behind all unexpected events; the cause of fatalism cuts

The Harris Tweed industry is lauded as an industry which is compatible with crofting. Because weavers are self-employed, they can set their own schedule of work and thus continue to participate in croft work and fulfill various township obligations. The effects of this industry on the township as a social boundary system were investigated. The income available from weaving is unpredictable, which encourages the retention of crofting practices and other patterns of behavior, such as "occupational pluralism," that were found to be adaptive in the past. Such strategies also strengthen township boundaries; for example, they encourage mutual aid and communal township practices. But weaving also offers a high level of independence. Some weavers, preferring to spend most of their time weaving, have neglected crofting, or have invested in tractors or other motorized transport which enables them to harvest crops, cut peat and perform other activities independent of other township members.

The fundamentalist Free Church constitutes an important boundary-maintaining mechanism, serving to exclude various external influences of the larger society from the township. However, a smaller network of persons engaged in the religious sphere of social activity, a subsystem within the township system, also exists which has the appearance of a firmly bounded system. These are members of the of the converted, who occasionally neglect township and neighborly duties in favor of religious activities. The increase in private transportation during the past 25 years has facilitated the maintenance of closer ties within the clique. The existence of such a strongly bounded subsystem is an example of a trend toward the weakening of the township as a social boundary system, but this trend is counteracted by other factors that strengthen or help preserve the township as a bounded system.

People come and go from the township, but this appears to maintain rather than weaken township boundaries because behavior differences in the township are generally those that can be performed outside it, and conformed behavior reassumed upon reentry. Those unable to conform with standards of behavior prescribed within the township are not likely to return.

Township members who have settled away from the island come back periodically for recreation and a sense of belonging. They increase the value of the township and the way of life in the eyes of the inhabitants, and provide them with subject matter for conversation until the next holiday season, when the exiles again return.

The boundedness of the township is thus a qualified boundedness that, over the past 100 years and especially since the second world war, has decreased in strength but is nevertheless strong today.

"I couldn't get back my health, but I didn't want to go home, because the houses weren't so good there as on the mainland. I went to work on a farm. It was for the cream I was going. I was so weak I couldn't lift the milk pails for a week, but I got on so well with the old lady that the farmer let me stay in and keep her company. The other girls were always running off to dances and out late at night, but I didn't care about that. I stayed in with her, and got so jelly with her that the others were jealous."

She had been coming back every winter to be with her mother, and during the war returned to nurse her until she died. Anna then returned to Glasgow, where she married a widower from the mainland. When he died a few years later, she returned permanently to the island. Although she had not belonged to the Free Church while living in Glasgow, she became a member when she settled permanently in Shawbost.

The Baker

"The Baker" was 22 when the first world war broke out. Many Shawbost villagers joined branches of the armed services at that time. The baker joined the army, and two months later was wounded in one lung. Tough as salted dogfish and solid as Lewisian gneiss at the age of 76, he pounds his chest and shows visitors his scar. After scriptions flowed in. In 1729 the Queen granted Letters Patent under the Great Seal for erecting certain of the schoolhouses into a corporation. Thus did the SSPCK come into being, with an initial capital fund of £1,000. Its progress was rapid. In 1731, it supported twelve schools; in 1765, 325 schools. In addition to paying the salaries of teachers, the Society supplied the children with school books, established public libraries in various parishes, and defrayed the expenses of printing Gaelic Bibles and other books.

HISTORY

Harris here enters in an interesting fashion. In the records of the Presbytery of Moll, 1730, it is reported that "Mr M'Aula . . . carried off the library to Harris, because he was not paid for his expenses in bringing down the Book of the Society's to Coll." This MacAulay was the great-grandfather of the English man of letters, Lord MacAulay.

The Gaelic School Society was founded in 1811 and existed until 1892. It supported a large number of schools, as the desire for education had exceeded the capacity of the SSPCK. In 1796 there were two schools and a spinning school in the parish of Stornoway. The minister of Barvas, writing in that year, says that there had been a parochial school in that parish for many years, but that there was a Society school at Ness, attended by about twenty pupils, instead of noble that number had all the children been able to attend. The minister of Uig stated that three spinning schools were established there by Lady Seaforth, but he does not refer to a parochial school in his parish at that time. According to the minister of Locha, a parochial school was built there in 1795, and a Society school some three years earlier.

By the middle of the nineteenth century matters had improved considerably, though there were still complaints that education was not appreciated. In fact, education tended to be discouraged for a very practical reason. Back in 1811 an observer in the island stated in his report that the great mass of the Lewis people would not send their children to school. When reproached on this head they answer "If we give them education, they will leave us." Seventy-seven later (1887, the Napier Commission was told that 'Sir James (Matheson) supported and contributed to seventeen schools in the Island, many of which he built with teachers'

THE PEOPLE

181 ing but black. The young have found the island a much more kindly place. They have never been forced by circumstances to choose between predestination and despair.

To take account of matters beyond the material level is inherent in the Gaelic Celt. Scottish poetry and song, legend and folklore, all so alive with fancy and so sympathetic towards the things of nature, reflect the inborn sensitivity and character of the present-day Highlander and Islander. Fiction's caricature of the island-dweller (not only in Harris and Lewis, but in the other islands) has been taken by another society with a different cultural background, with insufficient knowledge of historical facts, as being virtually authentic. The Western Isles have had more than their share of 'observers' who have failed to penetrate to the inner Gael. Only with a knowledge of the background, social, cultural, ethnic, historical and so on, can the 'larger than life' islander be seen in perspective—as a normal human being.

RELIGION

191 There are few communities in the British Isles which have, since the Christian dawning, so closely integrated religious belief with secular day-to-day living as the Harris and Lewis people. Though many times the religious element in island life foundered in a Sargasso Sea of outright superstition, it has managed to survive to its present-day form which might be described as catchartic in nature. When one attempts to investigate religion and superstition as separate subjects, one is forced to consider either both as one, or one as complementary to the other. Even in those times during the island's history when materialism was prominent, somewhere in the background religion was acknowledged in one manner or another.

As mentioned in Chapter 3, in 1610 Lord Kintail brought Farquhar MacRae, the vicar of Gairloch, to Lewis. The first Earl of Seaforth, who built a church in Stornoway (St Lennan's) was nominally Episcopalian. During the temporary supremacy of Episcopacy in Scotland, there was little disturbance in the Highlands of the Presbyterian tradition. The bishops controlled their dioceses; but the ministers controlled their parishioners. In

RELIGION

Lewis, there were but two ministers in 1626, their parishes being 195
Barvas (which included Uig) and Eye, which included Lochs; the 195 population of the island at the time was about 8,000. When Presbyterianism was re-established in Scotland in 1640, the Lewis 192 ministers found no trouble in conforming, as did their fellow 192 parishioners. Sectarian feeding in the island during the seventh 192 and eighteenth centuries was not so much between Presbyterians and Episcopalians as between Romanists and Protestants.

In the year 1738, nine Episcopalian Lewismen signed a letter 193
to the Bishop of the Isles, asking for an annual visit from a pastor, 195 being unable to support a full-time minister. Almost a century 195
later in 1839, the foundation stone of St Peter's in Stornoway was 196 laid : this is the town's Episcopal Church. The other building on 196 the island which belongs to the Episcopalians is the ancient church 194 at Eoropie, dating back to the 16th century and perhaps the 194 oldest still in use in the Hebrides; services are held there occasionally, though there is no local Episcopalian congregation. One of 195
the most significant events which echoed right through to the 195
island was the Disruption which took place in Edinburgh in 1843. 198
The result was a 'church spectrum' in Scotland which is still 198 mirrored on a smaller scale in the island : the Church of Scotland, 198
the Free Presbyterian Church, the United Free Church, and the 198
Free Church. The Roman Catholic Church is also represented.

Lewis has one of the largest Free Church congregations in the 194 country. This denomination is particularly known for its outspoken pronouncements from time to time on questions of the day. 194
It is Calvinistic in doctrine and has a reputation for holding the 'Calvinistic outlook' in the more general and pejorative sense; 192 though in strictness may sometimes be over-painted, it is much 192 less liberal in its moral standpoint than is the Church of Scotland, if lest austere in some respects than the Free Presbyterians. 192
Its doctrinal position is that of unclassed adherence to the Wes- 199 tminster Confession, its ministers and other office-bearers affirming their belief 'in the whole doctrine of the Confession'. It is 145 opposed to all forms of liberalism and accepts the inerrancy and 166 infallibility of the Scriptures. Only the Psalter is used in public 195 worship, and instrumental music is dispensed with; strong 162

NORTH RONA

Though the island is but a great lump of rock, Dean Monro says 191
that in his time an abundance of corn was grown, by delving 191 only, and an abundance of clover-grass for sheep. The island also 191 produced a fine bere-meal which the islanders ruffled into the 192 skirts of sheep and sent, as their rent or tribute, to MacLeod of 192
Lewis, along with mutton and fowls.

Of St Ronan's Chapel, still to be seen and reckoned the oldest 191
Christian building in Britain remaining in its original state, 195
Monro says : 'As the ancients of the country allege, they have a 196 spade and a shoul [shovel] when any man dies, and upon the 194 morrow find the place of his grave marked with a spade, as they 194
allege.' In 1695 Martin wrote of Rona in 1680 :

The people repeat the Lord's Prayer, Creed, and the Ten Com- 198
mandments in the Chapel every Sunday morning. They have 198
cows, sheep, barley, oats, and live a harmless life, being perfectly 194 ignorant of most of those vices that abound in the world. They 194 know nothing of money, or the use of it, having no occasion for either; 195
they neither sell nor buy, but only barter for such little things as 195
they want; they covet no wealth, being fully contented and adapted 195
with food and raiment; though at the same time they are very 195
precise in the matter of property among themselves; for none of 195
them will by any means allow his neighbour to fish within his 195 property . . . They concern not themselves about the rest of mankind except the inhabitants in the north part of Lewis. They have 195 their surnames from the colour of the sky, rainbow, and cloudy 195
. . . There are but two families in this small island, and every tenant 195 has his dwelling-house, a barn, a house where their best effects 195 are preserved, a house for their cattle, and a pouch on each side 195 to keep off the rain or snow. Their houses are built with stone and 195 thatched with straw . . . When any one of them comes to Lewis, 195 which is seldom, they are astonished to see so many people.

Then came tragedy. Somehow, probably off a wreck, a swarm 195
of rats landed on the island and consumed virtually all the food. 731
A few months later, some seamen landed and robbed the islanders 145
of their only bull. These misfortunes and the want of supplies 166 from Lewis for the space of a year occasioned the death of all but 162 that ancient race of people.' Some years afterwards a new colony 195 was sent to the island. In 1796, at the time of the Old Statistical 162

CHAPTER VII

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE OF THE COMMUNITY

INTRODUCTION

771 A in every form of religion rooted in communal life, 192
192 the sacraments and prayers of the Gael were linked 192 to labour and to the family and child's cycle. While 192 some of the 'runes' or prayers were essentially personal 192
and others were breathed only in the closest intimacy, 192
many were shared by a group of families : the tried tears 192
of the men or women of a joint farm, the people of a 192 620 neighbourhood and township or wider group. The com- 192 munities being so small and isolated, their members depended greatly upon themselves and upon one another. 192 194 As in worship in common, so in healing of body or spirit 192 and in the invocation of grace upon youth, now, now 192 another might lead in praise and prayer. So, too, the 192 leader of a little team would lead in the dedication of their 192 work, and, when it was completed, he 'the consecrator' 192
of its fruit. 192

771 Where no clergy were at hand, neighbours, perforce, 192
194 practised the saying of one they called their 'foster-192 brother' : that if no more than "two of you agree on 192 earth about anything you pray for, it will be done for you 192 by my Father in heaven. For where two or three have 192 gathered in my name, I am there among them " (Matt. 192

CH. VII SPIRITUAL LIFE OF COMMUNITY

771 xviii. 19-20). The worldly wise might think that the 192
194 spiritual fare of these poor folk must have been lean indeed ; 192
while others, having heard much of the Highlanders' 192
'pagan' aspirations, may think even worse ! The evi- 192
173 dence from which to judge is found in survivals from a 192
538 rich lore, and for most readers seen but 'darkly' through 192 verse translations from the poetry of a tongue now known 192 to few. 192

The richest collection is Alexander Carmichael's Carmina Gadhelica (Orisons, Incantations and Prayers from the Celtic Lands).[1] Others were made 192
771 558 by the Rev. Fr. Allan MacDonald of Eriskay, and by the 192
Rev. Kenneth Macleod with Mrs. M. Kennedy-Fraser in 192
the Songs of the Hebrides. Included here are unpublished 192 verses given by crofters, fishermen, the Isles and others from 192
Fr. Allan Macdonald's collection,[2] hitherto untranslated, 192
and others were breathed only in the closest intimacy, 192 escapes. One is reminded of 'Father Allan's' early 192 death, after nursing his parishioners through an epi- 192
demic; and Carmichael's escape from drowning as "on

[1] Carmina Gadhelica, Orisons from the Celtic Lands, Hymns and incantations with illustrative notes on words, rites and customs, dying and disappearing rites, collected in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, translated into English ; vols. 1 and 2 (1st ed., 1900 ; and ed., 1928) ; vols. 3 and 4 (1st ed., 1900 ; 2nd ed., 1954) ; vol. 5 (1st ed., 1954) ; vol. 6 (1st ed., 1940). Carmichael was a gentleman, Post Janitor Carmichael Watson, whose death as an Ordinary Seaman in the war in Greece is recorded in the Roll of Honour in the Museum of Education.

[2] Gaelic and of Instructor Learning in Scotland. One more volume of verse was collected by Jessie A. Watson awaits publication. (In the following, quotations are referred to as from Carmina, followed by the number of the rime : Nos. 1-216, vols. 1 and 2 ; and Nos. 217-351, vol. 3). Vol. 5 contains varied lore.)

[3] Of all these four, the least known is Fr. Allan Macdonald's Irish collection, Cnoch-Chaisteanachadh de Laoidhean Spiritadhail, Hugh Macdonald, Oban, 1893. It was privately printed, and lacks a table of contents. There could be no finer method to do so, and the community where spiritual life he helped to record than a new edition of the ancient 'Spiritual Songs'; with the addition of those he has given of the ancient Irish lore of rags, and perhaps, of some of his own poems, notably his famous Ritual on p. 62, " Life of the Young ".

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

771 a night of black mutiness . . . he waded nearly breast-
538 high " through the dangerous South Ford of Benbecula, 192
" conscious only of the roll and the singing of waters 192
and the rhythm of a poem he had taken down a few 192 hours before "—" The Invocation of the Graces ", so 192 nearly lost with him ! Much that Carmichael learned was 192 given him under a seal of confidence he never broke, 192 although he mourned the loss this meant. The confidence 192
he inspired—which even those who knew him only in their 192 childhood remember for life—was a source of his quiet, 192
unfailing power. 192

The following begins with the runes and rites of labour, 192
771 the spinning of wool, the milking of cows, and so on and so 192 at home. Turning to the day of rest and to congregational 192 771 worship, one must enquire as to the presence of the clergy, 192 and questions closely have far the people had access to the 192
Bible throughout the centuries : were they really cut off 192
from its riches, from its essence, as the Reformers and the 192
Evangelicals of last century asserted with such vehemence ? 192
One can then turn to the runes and rites which plumed the 192 phases of life, from birth to maturity, marriage and parent- 192
hood, healing and so on to death. 192

But no social inheritance is without its burden. Having 192
192 told of the foundations of faith, something must be said 192
192 in the opposite chapter of the negative or superstitious side of 192
192 Island belief, of temptations and evils which, the people 192
192 could face, and of others to which they submitted in 192
192 ignorance. From the evidence of faith and wisdom, or 192
192 error, one must attempt some evaluation of attainment by 192
192 single souls and by the community, and of the power and 192
192 fullness of life in common. 192

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. III

195 Roman Catholicism was far less complete than that ulti- 192
198 mately brought about by Protestantism—Episcopalian or 192
198 Calvinist. 192

195 At least twenty-five churches, chapels and tiny oratories 192
196 are named by Martin in Lewis and his list is incomplete 192
194 (1934, p. 106). Harris and its isles also had their complex- 192
194 ment of 'temples', in addition to the priory church of 192
192 Rodel. We may perhaps assume that before the Reforma- 192
192 tion Lewis had a population of some 4000 persons, 192
192 or 1000 families, and contained some thirty chapels or 192
192 oratories in inhabited areas. If so, then one church or 192
192 'temple' (an average served thirty-five families) or twelve, 192
192 or six or seven farm-groups. Yet only the larger congre- 192
192 gations at Eye, Stornoway, Ness or Uig and Rodel would 192
192 normally be served by clergy : the people of smaller congre- 192
192 gations would be without, for weeks and months or even 192
192 years. 192

195 When the people were too distant from priests (and 192
79 later ministers) to hear the Lessons, they handed down 192
192 the Word orally. Their power of retaining memorable 192
153 lines, even in prose, is still remarkable, and were 192
192 strengthened memory. For example, 'the Ten Com- 192
192 mandments' paraphrased in rhyme are recorded in Fr. 192
192 Allan Macdonald's little collection, 'the gives the God 192
192 of graces to Moses in the wilderness" (Na Fainteam, 192
192 p. 62). Moses, had he understood Gaelic, would have 192
192 protested at the omission of the Second Commandment, 192
192 but no sculptor of Iona, Rodel or Eye would have felt a 192
192 need for it, being unafraid that a Christian could bow 192
192 down to a golden calf. Believing, with Solomon, that a 192
192 craftsman's work is his prayer, the artist-monks held that 192
192 an 'image' should represent, though never replace, God's 192
192 creation, and may even quicken our concept of the Creator 192

CH. VIII RELIGION AND SOCIAL CUSTOMS

195 ing was lacking, and the minister of the parish remained 192
197 in the Establishment, the popular movement inclined 192
193 unanimously towards the cause of the suffering and pro- 192
testing Church of Scotland, with the exception of a small 192
handful of people in Stornoway.[1] 192

192 The part of elder folk in religious life continued to be 192
192 important, but in new ways. Masculine influence now domi- 192
192 nated the family and the congregation. The 'Men' in 192
192 the Highlands were Elders of the Church who often spoke 192
192 as lay preachers and who rose to speak on 'Question Day' 192
192 —that is on the Friday of the Communion Services, which 192
192 extended, and still do, from Thursday, the Fast Day, to 192
192 Monday, the Thanksgiving Day. The preaching, delivered 192
192 after opening devotions, invited any Elder of the Parish to 192
192 rise and propose the Question ; the Elder having read a 192
192 text from Scripture, would say he wished to hear the 192
192 'marks' of the true Believer, drawn from the text. After 192
192 the minister had himself " opened out the text ", he would 192
192 name visiting Elders, calling upon them in turn to speak. 192
192 One by one, each would rise and give his picture of the 192
192 Christian in terms of the qualities suggested by the 192
192 text. " And so the hour spent flew by, and there was much 192
192 helpful variety of a dozen speakers or more. The 'Men' 192
192 spoke out of rich experience. . . . 'Question Day' was a 192
192 self-searching season, when every hearer examined his 192
192 heart by the 'marks' adduced . . . and as this went on 192
192 there was a sweet glow on the face of the Congregation as 192
192 the presiding Minister summed up and closed the holy 192
192 Convocation." 192

195 The 'Men' had long been a recognised Order in the 192
197 Islands, and their foundation is traced to Thomas Hog, 192
193 the famous minister of Kilmarnock, " born in Tain in the 192
194

[1] Rev. N. C. Macfarlane, The 'Men' in the Lewis (1924).

CONTINUED ON NEXT FICHE

oth the Highlands and the Lowlands politics and religion 175* 771 became completely intertwined. In the latter half of the 794 ● 795 ingdom it began as a support for the crown and a force for aceful and orderly government, but the church became the ey of self-seeking prelates.[85] On Skye hardly anything was nown of the abuses of the Roman Church. There was no scope r two ruling powers in the small communities. The priests, ithful to their heritage and loyal to chief and clan, minisred to the clansmen while their contemporaries elsewhere in rope were guilty of neglect and corruptness. Nevertheless, e Reformation, 1560, gradually influenced the Sgiathanach.
ere was an important difference between the acceptance of e reformed kirk in the Lowlands and on Skye. In the Lowlands esbyterianism, in particular its emphasis on individualism, ited the needs and aspirations of the people, and they welcomed form. In the Highlands the Catholic faith was extinguished a lack of priests.[86] Although the old faith was regarded an amalgam of paganism, a cult of the saints, and meaningless rmalism, practically all the reformed kirk could do, in the ce of strong opposition, was to expel the priests, or make re that no new priests found entry.

While the Scots were prepared to fight the Stuart king of otland and England in 1638 and on several other occasions, laminating in the Glorious Revolution in 1688, for their [85] Notestein, op. cit., pp. 103-114.

[86] Peter Anson, The Catholic Church in Modern Scotland (London: Oates and Washbourne, 1937), pp. 35-44.

spiritual independence, the Skyemen stood stoutly behind their 175* 771
devine right kings who tried to modify the church in the 794 ● 795 direction of Anglicanism. It was not until after Presbyterianism had been replaced by Episcopacy that the Reformation reached Skye, and it was not until after the Glorious Revolution that communion was celebrated in the Presbyterian form.[87] Even so, it required using the well worn trick of inviting the clan chiefs to dinner on board ship and then arresting them to make them agree to support the clergy and the discipline of the reformed kirk.[88] As late as 1700 the people had not shown any of the religious fervor which had ripped the Lowlands asunder.
The Sgiathanach, although nominally converted from Catholicism, was apathetic to the slight differences between Episcopacy and Presbyterianism. Revolution and Restoration made little difference. The ministers, who were hereditary, remained, and were succeeded by their sons.[89] Catholic and pagan rituals persisted. At the close of the seventeenth century, Christmas, Good Friday, Easter, and St. Michael's Day were still observed.[90]
They had been dropped from the Scots' calendar more than a hundred years before. The holy wells were still believed [87] Hew Scott, Fasti Ecclesae Scoticanae (new ed.; 8 vols.; Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd, 1928-1950), Vol. VII, p. 166; see also J. B. Craven, Records of the Dioceses of Argyll and the Isles, 1560-1860 (Kirkwall: Peace and Son, 1907); and Duncan MacPavish, Minutes of the Synod of Argyll, 1639-1661 (2 vols.; "Publications of the Scottish Historical Society," Vols. XXXVII-XXXVIII; Edinburgh: Scottish Historical Society, 1943-1944).

[88] MacKenzie, op. cit., pp. 130-132.

[89] See, e.g., Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182; Vol. VIII, pp. 683-684; and Craven, op. cit., pp. 46, 48-49.

[90] Martin, op. cit., p. 250.

efficacious. Amulets were still worn as charms. 175* 771
Even more important, religion was still intertwined 794 ● 795 with the structure of the clan. The ministers were said to be negligent, either afraid of or sympathetic with local sentiments, in their duty, by the evangelicals who waged an uncompromising hostility to the old folk culture which tied the people to the past.[91] It could hardly have been otherwise. The ministers were tacksmen; they were married to daughters of tacksmen, and their children married into tacksmen's families.[92] The chief or a cadet of the clan met with the minister and his elders, the lay kirk officers who were probably tacksmen, when a kirk session was held, and the chief enforced their decisions by his "irresistible authority."[93] Thus, the influence of clan brotherhood pervaded every aspect of the culture. There still was no room for two independent leaders. The people could not have lost toleration for differing faiths. Episcopal, Catholic, and Presbyterian families lived together without rupture. Religious fervor could have broken the clan. To see how the old and the new blended, let us turn to the life cycle.

[91] John MacInnes, The Evangelical Movement in the Highlands of Scotland, 1688-1800 (Aberdeen: The University Press, 1951), pp. 2, 14-15, 50-55; and Gartmore, op. cit., pp. 340, 366-367.

[92] Scott, loc. cit.

[93] Martin, op. cit., p. 185

In 1951 the population stood at 1,094. There has been a slight 178* 632 shift from the rural areas to the village, but it can hardly 161 be regarded as significant. For one thing, the 1951 figure 162 included an unknown number of workers on the hydro-electric scheme. Then, too, it included children from the Outer Isles who attend school in Portree, not to mention the very large number of newcomers, teachers, government employees, shopkeepers, management personnel in the stores and banks, and tradesmen, to give only a few examples.

The trend toward religious conservatism continued in 175* 178*
the fourth period. During the closing years of the preceding 771 period, the Free Church attempted to modify her theology and 795 polity. The old trend toward relaxing the rigor of Presbyterianism, in accordance with the feelings of the other dissenting denominations in Scotland in order to pave the way for union, was reversed by the passing of a Declaratory Act which stated that the Free Church does not teach and does not regard the Confession of Faith as teaching the foreordination of men to death (eternal damnation) irrespective of their sin. Further, that while the Gospel is the ordinary means of salvation, it does not follow that all who die in infancy are lost. The 175* elders, the lay kirk officers, of Skye protested violently.[88] 178* 771
It was popery to make the Church the judge of spiritual affairs. 795 794 ● More important, it threatened their prestige status, which had been sanctioned by the interpretation of the religious ethic.
In several parishes the elders threatened to withdraw from [88] The Free Presbyterian Church, History of the Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland, 1893-1933 (Glasgow: H. Ashead and Son, 1933), pp. 96-130.

Communion, and when they were backed by a few dissenting ministers, the schism gave rise to the Free Presbyterian Church. The first 175* congregation of the new church was a Skye congregation. 771 795 794

In no small way the threatened disorganization of the culture and the suggested social disintegration at the end of 175*
the "Clearances" played a role in the acceptance of the Free 178*
Presbyterian Church. This situation, I suggest, created a need 771 to reaffirm the religious sanction of the desirable features 795 of the culture. Since the Church of Scotland minister in Waternish was jailed for inciting the crofters to stand up for their rights,[89] without adding any people to his congregation, the new schism must have been a reaffirmation of the religious focus for the culture.

The acceptance, however, was neither uniform nor immediate. There was, in fact, a religious and social upheaval.[90] In Glendale, a strong Free Church area and a neighborhood which required the presence of military troops to restore order, family ties and friendships were broken in the controversy over which church manifested the true religion. In Staffin and the Braes, also areas marked by the need for police protection, the same pattern was repeated. The experiences of one Church of Scotland minister over the years following the schism, led him to make a rather unusual statement for a man who became one of the foremost ministers in Scotland: "The [89] Norman MacLean, Set Free, pp. 52-54.

[90] Ibid., pp. 148-212.

tourists, and newcomers who carry with them ideas of reform. 621
Further, as well as being mutually dependent commercially, the crofters and the villagers interact formally and informally in social, political, and, especially, religious activities. The consciousness of common interest of the villagers, however, 621 186 stems more from a knowledge that they are different from the crofters than from any common symbol. The 1000 villagers [162] are from diverse backgrounds. They find solidarity in being different rather than in "neighboring" or all attending the same church. The village also lacks the time depth of the rural settlements, being a creation of an individual in the last century.

For community I prefer an inclusive definition on the 631 order of Redfield's.[8] A community is characterized by conventional understandings, the occupation of a territory, and the possession of a culture. Thus, we shall refer to the Isle of Skye as the community.

It will be noted that I have not used the term parish. 632 794 Although the parish was once important politically and religiously, 178 as the older baronies were replaced, it lost these functions in 1929.[9] People reside within parishes and they, along with their crops and stock, are enumerated by parishes, but the parish is now little more than a statistical convenience. Church organization and political administrative units cross-cut and override parish boundaries. Indeed, I doubt if the people [186] ever thought of themselves as members of a parish.

---

[8]Redfield, The Folk Culture of Yucatan, pp. 15-16.

[9]See, e.g., C. De B. Murray, How Scotland is Governed (Glasgow: Art and Educational Publishers, Ltd., 1947), pp. 113-118, et passim.

by a second cousin. The striking thing to realize here is that 593 the nearest surviving relative always knows his obligation and 764 is ready to fulfill it, without question. Fatherless children 602 are buried by either their paternal or maternal uncle. I have 603 not forgotten the existence of women. The simple fact is, [562] women play no part as mourners. Indeed, the rare woman who goes to the grave becomes the subject of lasting gossip.

Fundamentally, the system of kinship is patrilineal. 611 Linguistically, the terms for relatives may be bilateral, and 601 inheritance of possessions other than the name may be matters 428 of small importance, but the patrilineal emphasis remains. The Sgiathanach lives in a man's world. I shall explore this [128] male dominance further in the following chapter. At present, I want to briefly discuss two additional cliques.

Religious and Age-Grade Cliques. Like the members of any 573 society, the Sgiathanach associates most frequently with those who share his interests and attitudes. It is natural, then, for his associates, other than his kinsmen, to be people who attend his church and people of his own age group. We need not explore the nature of these cliques at this time; but we should have some understanding of their function. The 794 573 religious clique is primarily a mutual aid group. There is 476 reason to believe that this particular group has lost much 178 of its importance of late, with the coming of the welfare state. Many feel that the government pays people to look after the aged and infirm. As far as doing a favor for someone is concerned, few of the same kirk, other than close friends, offer help without an expectation of payment. Nevertheless, 794 anonymous donations of food and casual visits make sure that 573 none of their number becomes absolutely destitute. In Glendale this religious clique merges with the person's "people and friends." Kilmuir has two religious cliques.

We have had ample opportunity to examine the age-grades 561 of Skye's society and in the next chapter we shall have a closer look at the functions of the age-grades, especially that of the old men. One of the most important weaknesses 857 of the social structure, in my mind, is the lack of age mates 883 for children and adolescents. They find it difficult, almost 561 impossible, to come together as a sodality. In Kilmuir, for example, there are only fifteen boys under twenty in an area of ten square miles. A youth is anyone under forty. Of the [162] total population 60 percent are over fifty. For this reason 561 the important age grade clique tends to merge with the re- 794 ligious social circle. The situation is much the same in Glendale. There the age-grade and kinship groups are intertwined with the kirk congregation.

Status Equality within the Neighborhood. The fundamental 621 status equality which we found for the crofters within the 534 township carries over to the neighborhood, but, as would be 571 expected, there is often a need for leadership in this larger group. Let us look at the two neighborhoods which I know best to cast light on the methods employed in the self-election of a leader and the means of expressing leadership as a role. Kilmuir has a Crofters' Club, which was originally formed by 573

a former school teacher. The present sponsor and chairman 573 is his successor. The teacher is automatically rated socially 875 because of his important function, educating the children of a 534 people who value education, and his university background. Further, he is from the Outer Isles and, therefore, is not expected to conform to all the traditional norms. Were he a Sgiathanach he probably would not accept the office for it would conflict with older and far deeper values.

The Glendale club farm is administered by a committee 573 of five, a secretary, and a chairman. Here all are crofters 241 from the several townships. All, therefore, are equals. Who, 534 794 then, might they have for a chairman? They have selected an elder of the church. A church elder is the highest lay official in church government and, on Skye, one of the oldest men in the neighborhood. As one man asked, "If you can't respect an elder, who can you respect?"

Selecting members for the committee and electing a secretary 573 is a real problem. Each man serves for three years. How the 241 original committee was formed I do not know, but I had an 534 opportunity to see how vacancies are filled. In 1953 there were three vacant posts. Parliamentary procedure has been introduced, but it finds limited expression. For two of the seats, the retiring members were "re-elected;" a crofter nominated them and after a long pause another man seconded the nomination. No vote is taken; silence means unanimous consent. A story slightly off the point illustrates this. At the same meeting the committee's stock report was read. Following parliamentary procedure, it

CONTINUED
FROM PRECEDING
FICHE

175 year in which John Bunyan was born ". Archbishop Sharp 178 " banished him to the dungeons of the Bass Rock for twenty-eight years, and it was during his imprisonment
• 794 that the meetings of communicants were kept going by a parishioner,—a reformed tinker and a gifted and consecrated lieutenant ". This tradition of the ' Men ' renewed itself and spread with each wave of ' Revival '. It sprang up in the Islands more than a century ago, as it had on the north-western mainland during the later eighteenth century, and in ' Easter ' Ross two hundred years before.

[798] The spiritual crises of the Reformation and of the Cromwellian and Covenanting age are still profoundly influential; yet they seem hard for those from the Lowlands and England to understand because they occurred so long ago. But in Lewis, Macfarlane writes of the ' Men ' whom he knew and admired, in order to keep their memory green. Once more, life in the Isles throws fresh light on the past, revealing its significance.

(D) EVANGELISM AND ERASTIANISM, WRATH AND WOE

175 The Disruption [1] gave a powerful urge to the move-668 ment for freedom, in many ways. Throughout Scotland
the people were made to feel that both landlordism and the [795]

[1] The issues of Disruption, for the sake of freedom from the choice of a minister by the landlord's patronage and from State control, were reviewed by the Rev. Prof. G. D. Henderson, in Heritage of the Disruption, 1943 (published at the centenary, and nearly half a generation after the Union of 1929). While the Free Church still maintains a strong hold in the Island—and among a small minority elsewhere who feel that even the terms of the Union could not secure full moral freedom—it is claimed by the Church of Scotland that its constitution now goes far to solve " the age-long antinomy of establishment and freedom ", a view widely held abroad, both in Germany and in the smaller lands of North-west Europe occupied by the invader, at the time of the centenary.

All the churches on Skye are organized in identical fashion on the local or parish level of church administration. According to the democratic principles outlined in the Bible and the Books of Discipline (1561 and 1578), the congregation alone decides who will serve as their spiritual leaders. It will be remembered that patronage was one of the causes for the church schism of 1843. The members call their minister and elect the elders, deacons, and in several churches, a precentor. The elders are the very pinnacle of the lay religious hierarchy. They are chosen from the "elect" to act as the guardians of the moral and religious behavior of the congregation and to lead the congregation in worship on certain occasions which we shall meet with later. The deacons are similarly chosen from the "elect" to look after the financial affairs of the kirk. The precentor is a chanter. He gives out the psalms the people sing line by line. No matter what the official position of the church, expressed by the General Assembly, Synod, or Presbytery--the higher religious courts--the local kirk session composed of the minister and his elders retains decisive power.

Erring members of the congregation are called before these guardians of the people's behavior for judgment and discipline. For the protection of the congregation, the Presbytery, composed of the minister and a selected elder from each church, examines and installs newly called ministers and has the power to censure any minister guilty of a spiritual or moral transgression or infringement of his duty to the congregation. The Synod and, in the case of the Church of Scotland and the Free Church, the General Assembly do not normally interfere in local administration. They can be called upon to enforce the decisions of the Presbytery, but they are primarily deliberative assemblies which meet once a year in Edinburgh to discuss over-all church policy. Again, as we have seen, attempts of these higher bodies to impose their will on the local kirks have led to schism. Thus, since the fundamental seat of control is vested in the kirk session, in the neighborhood, the interpretations reflected in the higher religious courts do not necessarily find expression in the patterns of religious behavior on Skye. Indeed, the Church of Scotland on Skye is more like the other sects than it is like its parent body elsewhere in Scotland, where it has gradually moved toward a position similar to the Anglican Church or the Presbyterian churches of the United States. To the uninvolved observer, the differences are insignificant compared to the essential similarities of the local churches.

The Role of Religion on Skye

Because of the hold of the ramifications of religion on man, in particular, man as a member of a folk, peasant, or predominantly rural community, religion tends to have a permeating influence on all significant phases of life.[4]

[4] Cf., e.g., Robert Lowie, Social Organization (New York: Rhinehart and Co., 1948), pp. 191-192; T. Lynn Smith, The Sociology of Rural Life (New York: Harper & Bros., 1947), p. 423; and Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 282, 284.

nderstanding of the role of religion ships for the Sgiathanach is an
and all-pervading feature of church ly discussed theology, we noted the es of "Foreordination" and "Effectual may pay them lip service, the them. Because of their unfaltering rpretation of "Effectual Calling," ches is very limited. Admission ct," those who have received a pirit and experienced a soul-gained by attaining the status
on" depends on manifesting a e behavior patterns approved by well past sixty. Adherents, who way but have no voice in kirk mmunion, far outnumber these ple, among the religiously homogeneous dale, there are 14 members in a
In Kilmuir, a neighborhood with
, there are 58 members of the ngregation of 211. Portree, as number of newcomers who are of Scotland. Having been brought atmosphere and being relatively the convert is exposed, they have Thus, the Church of Scotland has 794 125 members. That the Sgiathanach has not been influenced by the laxity of the newcomers in self-examination is indicated by the existence of 450 adherents. Further, the Free Church has only 21 members in a congregation of some 280, and the Free Presbyterian Church only 20 members in a congregation of 320.

The esoteric religious hierarchy established by the "Men" during the nineteenth century revivals continues to influence the lives of the people. From the small number of the "elect" are chosen the elders, the venerable guardians of behavior, and the deacons. The majority have been baptized [565] but are in a fallen condition. Shall we stretch an analogy and ask is this not comparable to the social hierarchy of ceann-cinnidh (clan chief), daoin'-uaisle (tacksmen), and clanna (clansmen) of the past? This much is certain: a strong hierarchial sense must be numbered among the persistencies.

888 575 794 626 In our discussion of the Islanders' economy we noted two significant facts concerning the sodality of the old men of the neighborhoods. We saw that they have a deliberative function in discussing economic innovations before they pass down to the townships, and that they are able to block any innovation of which they disapprove through the requirement of complete unanimity in township affairs. We may also recall the statement, "If you can't respect an elder of the church, who can you respect?" We may now add they have judicial and authoritarian functions in the religious sphere of activity, and, through their status within the church, they ultimately control the patterns of social behavior.

Their deliberative, judicial, and authoritarian functions 626 are identical with those found among the Catholic small 171 farmers of Ireland.[9] Of course, it is by no means unique in 888 human groups for the aged to attempt to maintain their 575 accustomed habits and statuses while the youth endeavor to 794 find acceptance for new ideas.[10] Nor is it unique for the 121 younger members of the society to resent the restraints imposed by the older people to punish deviation from traditional behavior.[11] Culture phases, as Kroeber has pointed out, associated with age tend to correspond to changes taking place within the society, rather than reflect static lines of segregation, such as those which exist between classes.[12] If these assertions are valid, the success which the elderly, 888 as a sodality, enjoy in barring the youth from achieving 626 acceptance of novel patterns should be indicative of the importance of age controls on the Isle of Skye. In order to see how they exercise control and how successful they are, let us consider those events in the life cycle which Van Gennep has called rites of passage.[13]

Rites of Passage

Rites of Passage function in all societies to mark the 121

---

[9] Arensberg, The Irish Countryman, pp. 122-139.

[10] Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 274-275.

[11] Herskovits, Van and His Works, p. 479.

[12] Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 274-275.

[13] Arnold Van Gennep, Les Rites de Passage (Paris: E. Nourray, 1909).

"The Iona Community is a Brotherhood of men within the Church of Scotland seeking to find the implications of the Kingdom of God for modern society. During the summer months they worship, work and live together on Iona, rebuilding the ruined Abbey on a co-operative basis. Half the Brotherhood are young clergy pledged to work for two years in the difficult places of the cities (after three months in Iona), emphasising the place of the Church in the New Community that is emerging in the world. The other half are skilled artisans who desire to express their labour as a ministry within the Priesthood of all Believers and create—in the building—a microcosmic witness of how labouring is transformed when seen as a Sacrament. The Brotherhood is based on Reformation principles. Several members of the Community are married. At present the artisans return to the ordinary labour market in the winter time." [1]

In the Iona Community, theology is linked to communal labour and the re-shaping of society; and its symbolic centre, Iona, is more than a literary name, or a historic ruin, to those who have set about rebuilding its cathedral tower, cloister and surrounding dwellings. Continuity is exemplified in its leader, the Rev. George F. Macleod, a descendant of Dr. Norman Macleod, the friend of McLeod Campbell. The significance of this Community to the theme of this chapter lies in the endeavour of its members to learn, by help of ancient native ways, new ways of Christian life in their own land. The attempt to link industrial Scotland, and lands beyond, to the Gaelic West, is a notable recognition of what Celtic Christianity, maintained and renewed by communal tradition, has yet to give the world.

[1] From the magazine of the Iona Community, The Coracle.

CHAPTER IX

ECONOMIC CHANGES: 1750–1919

(A) TRANSITION: MIGRATION, FISHING AND KELP-MAKING

UNTIL the 'Forty-five the township had lived an almost self-contained life. Its traditional economy was self-sufficient except for two indispensable commodities—salt for the housewife and iron for the smith. Beyond this, the chief demand for payment was the rent to the lord, with tithes for the kirk. For these needs and demands a step towards production for exchange was required, the more so that what was exported might include the very necessities of life in 'bad years'. The rent was paid largely by the sale of a surplus steer or two, and drovers called for the cattle. By 1790, if not before, two or three open boats set out annually from Uig, for instance, for Glasgow, laden with salt beef and dried salt fish. Although salt seems of little account today, it once bulked large in the Budget, its price being heightened by duty, especially after 1707: "as dear as salt", was a saying, cho daor ris an t-salluinn. Salt was needed to preserve the carcase of a 'cattle-beast' or sheep killed in autumn, and for cod and herring curing. Wrecks were valuable, as on all infertile undeveloped coastlands, both for their timber and their iron. Cairds or tinkers occasionally brought metal goods; or a packman called, as strange a figure then a wider applicability of my thesis. The evidence in sup my assertion was collected on the culture history of the Skye, a part of the area known as the Highlands and Isla Scotland.

Since I shall frequently speak of the Highlands an
in the following pages, we should have a precise definit region (Figure 1). Geographically, the Highland boundar be placed at the Great Highland Fault, a series of geolo faults which extend across Scotland from the River Clyde Stonehaven, south of Aberdeen. Politically and economic however, this line has receded to the north and west. S it has been common in Scotland to equate the Highlands a with the "Seven Crofting Counties," those counties in wh predominate form of land use is the crofting system. Cr may be defined as a system of hereditary tenure of a few of arable land combined with common tenure of hill grazi
These counties are: Argyll, Inverness, Ross and Cromart Caithness, Sutherland, Orkney, and Zetland. Out of the parishes in these counties only 12 are considered non-cr
In addition to this shared socio-economic pattern, the s counties have experienced common economic-geographical a century of accelerating population growth, followed by of persistent depopulation.

[1] Adam Collier, The Crofting Problem: A Social and Economic Study (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1
p. 11n. A parish in Scotland is an ecclesiastical distr which until 1929 was also a civil unit with self-governm such local affairs as education, relief for the poor and and health. If the British county is thought of as anal to an American state, the parish can be thought of as a but one devoid of any function.

pport of Isle of nds of

d Islands
tion of the y should gical
to ally,
Since 1883
nd Islands
hich the rofting
acres
ngs.
y, 163
rofting.[1]
even nfluences,
a century

953), ict
ent in infirm, ogous
county,

change in the use of the grazing land or a desire of the young men to fence the crofts in an effort to improve the individual crofts the old men must have their say. Through their position in the churches, the old men also are the paramount source of social control, preserving their traditional habits and statuses, including a severe limitation on all social activity of a frivolous nature. This religiously sanctioned control is strengthened by the inability of the youth to form a solidarity. Indeed, one of the most serious limitations of the society of Skye is the small number of young men and women, boys and girls and the few opportunities which they have to come together as a group. The functions of the old men's age grade are identical with those described for the Irish small farmer.[21] Another social circle is composed of the affiliates of the same religious sect. They are mainly a mutual aid group.

Although the status equality noted in the township for all of the same sex and age carries over to the larger community, there are always a few people who have an achieved status. The minister enjoys high social prestige as the spiritual guardian of the people. The doctor is valued for his role in caring for the people's physical well-being. The school teacher is respected because he educates the youth and often acts as a spokeman for the group. If there is a member of the landed gentry, he will be accorded the highest status in the area. It is interesting to note that the achieved status positions are most often filled by newcomers to the island. The shopkeepers and there was famine. To supplement the diet, the men fished for domestic use. There were no specialists. Each man was a subsistence farmer, who bred a few head of cattle to meet his rent and provide dairy products, grew some grain for his family, and fished.

[21] Arensberg, op. cit., pp. 125-139.

Trade with the Lowlands was established by the chief and his tacksmen. The droving industry, the overland marches of cattle from the Island to the market centers, provided the chief's only source of income, from which he paid the taxes assessed by the Crown and provided the clansmen with meal in bad years. There was also a less well organized trade in minor local produce and imports carried on with the Lowlands.

The Religion of the Clansmen

Very little is known about the religious aspect of the culture during the days of the clan beyond the knowledge that the people passed through several changes in common with the rest of Scotland.[83] During the years of Norse occupation they worshipped under a tribal religion known as the Culdees Church, a secular order with a married priesthood and hereditary abbots. By the time Skye had become a part of Scotland, and the old Culdees Church had been replaced by Roman Catholicism.[84] In

[83] Cf., e.g., Lauchlan M. Watt, "Religion in the Clachan," in Home Life of the Highlanders, pp. 52-60.

[84] Origines Parochiales Scotiae (2 vols.; Edinburgh: W.H. Lizars, 1854), Vol. II, part I, pp. 340, 343-344, 354, 357.

same as in the crofting areas. When a young girl presented 794 796 herself for instruction in the significance and meaning of 349 church membership, preparatory to her acceptance of Communion, 626 she refused to take the final step not because of any personal religious problem, but rather because such a step would upset her normal associations. What her Free Church and Free Presbyterian friends would say was her main concern. Who was she to become an "elect" member? Here, then, is the answer to how the elders of the other sects are able to control behavior of the larger group, through the fear of gossip as a negative social sanction and, perhaps, rejection.

The semi-annual Communion celebrations are rites of 794 796
intensification par excellence. Although some churches celebrate only one commemoration of the sacrament, and it may be as early as February or as late as November, the months from late April until early September, are commonly referred to as the "Communion Season." The activities of the people during this period cast additional light on the influence of religion in ordering social relationships. While [573] [571] clique membership based on sectarian affiliation is a secondary factor in determining the patterns of interaction in the extended family in the local group, it is very important in determining one's wider relationships, the relationships between the neighborhoods and between the Sgiathanach and the mainland Highlander.

Within living memory thousands used to come to the 178 794
Communion celebrations from all parts of Skye and many nearby 796

mainland villages and crofting areas. Ministers from 178
neighboring and even distant churches used to come to take 794
part in conducting the services. There was no church to hold 796
so many people, so the Communion was celebrated outside. Then, of course, the population was much larger and the majority belonged to one church, the Free Church.

The Communion Season is still marked by large gatherings 794
of people at each church in turn. The "elect" from the 796 neighboring churches and the ministers from churches near and far exchange visits. The adherents also participate in the celebration of the Lord's Supper. From Thursday until 794
Monday the homes of the people in the vicinity are open to 796
their relatives and friends who have come to partake of the 574
sacrament or who find the highly emotional atmosphere and gregariousness stimulating. Some, especially the "elect" stay for the five days. Others will spend one or more nights. During the day and in the evening, whenever they are not [571]
attending religious services, they visit their "people" and "friends" to renew ties which in many cases have been allowed to languish since the last Communion. Thus, we find religion [182]
sanctioning the time-honored custom of Highland hospitality. [485]
It is interesting to note that many a woman who depends on the tourist trade for a good share of her income will not accept paying guests at this time. The local people have a further 794 share in extending hospitality to their visitors. All who 796
are able send food to the manse (parsonage) to lessen the 574
burden on the minister who extends hospitality to the 793
visiting clergy and as many of the laity as he can. This custom is well established. Even war-time restrictions and 794

rationing had little effect on Communion attendance. Skye 796
exiles in the United States and Canada sent food parcels 793
to the ministers and their kinsmen to provide for their 574
visitors. The minister takes in as many as he can. One [167] minister, for example, not very far from Portree has a large manse with seventeen rooms. It is customary for him to have [264] twenty-five or thirty people for lunch and again for high tea (the Skyeman's evening meal) on Friday and the Sabbath. Many of his guests spend five days with him.

Some idea of the size of the gatherings may be gained 794
from the need for the Free Presbyterian Church in Portree 796
to hold duplicate services. The church, I should think, holds around 300. During the Communion Season, the congregation takes over the drill hall, normally used by the Territorial Army for training and by the villagers for social affairs, in addition to the kirk. In the drill hall services are held in English; in the kirk, they are in Gaelic.

Such large gatherings of people require a means to establish meaningful contacts and create a feeling of belonging. Thursday is a fast day. All work stops. The people attend services in the morning, at noon, and again in the evening. Their minister, assisted by two visiting clergymen conducts them in a dynamic, highly emotional appraisal of the coming event. All the ministers participate in the sermons, stressing [783]
the confession of sin and the need for humiliation. Many ministers are known for their preaching ability, that is their ability to move their listeners. Friday is a day of self- 794

examination and prayer. A fellowship meeting is held. The 796 senior minister gives the sermon. The local minister follows the sermon with a few lines of psalm, which the precentor will chant for the congregation to sing, and calls upon one of the "elect" to prepare a question. After the singing has finished, an elder of the host church presents his "question." The "question" is a line from Scripture which relates to human experience, which relates to their experience as pastoral-agriculturalists. The remaining "Men," customarily visitors from other kirks, speak to the question, giving "marks" (examples) which distinguish between those who possess Christian virtues and those who profess the virtues essential for salvation. The speakers interpret the meaning of the line, it is only a single verse, often using allegorical interpretations. They are not supposed to tell about their own spiritual experience of conversion. To the contrary, their discussion is intended to have significance for all present. At the end of three or four hours of "speaking to the question," the junior minister sums up what has been said and, infrequently, makes any necessary corrections.

In addition to establishing an emotional atmosphere of [786]
revivalism and the tempo of interaction between the visitors [888]
and the local congregation, the fellowship meeting introduces the venerable old men of neighboring churches to the local people. Their prestige extends beyond their own neighborhood and congregation. Their ability becomes a topic of conversation

for the approaching evening and many nights to come. 794

Saturday is a day of preparation. After a morning 796 service, those who have been examined by the elders and admitted to church membership, and the visitors who satisfy the elders of the kirk that they are worthy to receive Communion, receive tokens which will admit them to the Lord's Table on the following day. 573

On the Sabbath the service is oriented around an "Action Sermon." The minister speaks of the sufferings and blessings of Christ. At the conclusion of the sermon, the Lord's Table is "fenced." Once all the Highland churches gave communion at a table with a rail around it. Now there is only one kirk on Skye with the fenced table, the old parish church in Bracadale. Today the first few pews are used. The minister 794 draws a sharp distinction between those who are entitled to 796 sit at the "table" and those who do not have the right to 573 partake of Christ's body and drink of His blood. The former are reminded of the dangers which neglecting to come forward involves. The latter are warned of their promised damnation as a consequence of partaking unworthily. Since only the 888 old men and women are worthy of the sacrament, the minister's 626 exhortions and denouncements function to sanction the prestige 182 of the old people before the congregation and the wider community. After reading from the Bible, offering a prayer, and 794 addressing the communicants on their humble position, the bread 796 and wine is distributed.

The Communion is concluded on Monday morning with a

794 thanksgiving service. The visiting ministers, the "elect,"
796 and the adherents go their own separate ways. They have spent five days in intense, emotional spiritual communion and they carry away with them definite, vivid remembrances. Many of them will meet again in a few weeks when they will exchange 573 the roles of guests and hosts. The reciprocal nature in all interpersonal activity on Skye is well developed. In many ways, the Communion season parallels the Welsh Song Festivals.[18]

794 We noted earlier in our discussion of the Communion
796 season that there has been a decline in the number who attend
178 the Communions. I should like to add a few general consideration to what I have already said on this point. Aside from the influence of depopulation, there have been several influential factors in operation. The smaller attendance is traceable to some extent to an almost imperceptible movement by the youth away from the more conservative denominations. The ever-increasing necessity of working for a wage, especially since most employment opportunities are in summer time programs, is another cause. This factor is not, however, important within the local kirk district because most adherents and all the "elect" who work take a vacation in order to attend. It does mean that visitors may only be able to attend on the Sabbath.

178 The custom of visiting has almost disappeared in some 794 churches, including the Church of Scotland in Portree where 794 the fellowship meeting is no longer significant because the 369
574

[18] Rees, op. cit., pp. 129-130.

"elect" are predominantly newcomers and the elders are either 178 members of the landed gentry or newcomers. I was rather 794 amazed one day when a Skyewoman told me, "the 'Wee-Frees' 796 and 'Seceders' are no better than the Mohammedens giving 574 gifts to idols," when they sent food to the manse for the 369 minister's guests at the Communion. Over in Bracadale the 798 custom is also losing its importance, except in the Free Presbyterian Church, and the fellowship meeting has been abandoned in the United Free Church because of the reluctance of the members to engage in public displays, either at Communions or at prayer meetings. The custom of visiting has entirely disappeared in Sleat and Strath. One of the ministers ascribed this to the isolation of the two parishes from the rest of the island and from each other. Certainly the Sgiathanach on the south end of the island seldom locks to Portree and the northern crofter hardly ever goes to Sleat, but this does not explain why people from the mainland will go to Bracadale, by-passing Strath.

The vitality of religion can over-ride considerations 771 of family and friendship if a Sgiathanach deviates from the 626 accepted norm. We may recall the young girl who stole church funds and was ostracized by her "people" and the whole community. Let us consider another example. Marriage vows, as 586 we know, are held to be sacred on Skye. Divorce is all but 771 unknown and separation is uncommon. To be precise there are 626 four known cases of separation. Nevertheless, if a husband or wife were to break a taboo, it is expected that the offender would be cast out. Forgiveness is not compatible with a belief in a God who punishes iniquity "unto the third and 586 fourth generation." 771 626

In one family the wife transgressed by committing 684 adultery, albeit a rare sin. Her husband was one of the 794 "elect" and a deacon in the Free Church. Fully aware of 626 the fact that his wife had remained away from Skye until after her child was born, he took her back. He was older than she and devoted to her. The story could not be covered up on Skye, where the elders have their thumbs on the pulse of the congregation. The elders summoned him before the kirk session. After he admitted he knew all the details and the fact that his sister-in-law had taken the child, they declared him to be excommunicate. The control of the elders is still characterized by austerity and severity toward the godly and ungodly alike. What hope has a Sgiathanach once 771 he has been eternally denied salvation? Perhaps, someday 794 he will again receive a visitation from the Holy Spirit and experience a saving change. Although no longer entitled to the benefits of the church, he continues to attend, as an adherent. One may ask, what was the reaction of the people to this punishment? A few Church of Scotland people, feel that the elders might have tempered their decision. As one said, "They thought only of Moses on Mount Sinai and forgot Jesus on Calvary." Most of the people, however, including all in the Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church, either approved the action taken or, at least, would not question the judgment of the elders.

child. Consequently, the sacrament is normally administered 369 thout even the formality of a kirk session examination. The 626 nisters of the other churches assert that non-church-going, 851 unken fathers whom the kirk session has refused have gone to 888
Church of Scotland and have secured the sacrament for their 794 ldren after pretending to mend their ways. They have then e back to their former habits. It may be so, but at least man in Portree was very surprised to find that the Church Scotland can require a severe examination.

At baptism the child is formally introduced into the 851 ds of his father's church. His mother and father stand 794 fore the minister and are admonished to bring up the child the murture and admonition of God, to the best of their lity.

Marriage is not a sacrament in Scotland, and, therefore, 585
s not provoke any strong resentment beyond a feeling that [179]
Church of Scotland should not have the exclusive right proclaim the banns of marriage. It is the one time in 585 life of a woman when she is the center of attention and 562 complete control over the situation. She decides where 794 will be married and what minister will preside. Church iliation seems to make little difference. At least, the ding of a daughter of a strict Free Presbyterian family
the Church of Scotland did not give the people any cause gossip. Although a wedding is no more than a legal formality, vows made at marriage are sacred. It would not strike ricans as being particularly significant to omit the promise
obey from the ceremony; Americans are said to have an equality of the sexes. On Skye, where women are the social 585 inferiors of men, its omission is curious. The ministers have 562 taken the promise of the ceremony out because, as one said, "The 794 man may be a rogue, irresponsible, making it impossible for the woman to obey." She nevertheless promises to be "loving, truthful, and dutiful."

Election, as a passage rite, marks the attainment of the 794 status of the elderly. We already know that to become one of 888
the "elect" the individual, man or woman, must not only 626
experience a soul-saving change but also manifest steadfast conformity to the ideals of behavior which have religious approval. These ideals are the habits and statuses which the old people are striving to maintain. Thus religion 794 sanctions the status of the venerable old people. Their 888
interpretation of "Effectual Calling" functions to provide 626
the elders, the most eminent of the "elect," with an additional [182]
means to exercise their judicial and authoritarian roles.
There can be no rapid conversion. Whether or not the probationary period of three years imposed by the "Men" in the last century is still enforced I do not know. The person who believes he has experienced a saving change, "a visitation from the Holy Spirit," is examined by the minister and his elders. Like the father who is seeking baptism for his child, such an old man or woman is judged on his knowledge of the Bible and the Shorter Catechism and on his conformity to the righteous life. No one can experience a saving change unless he is known, by observation, to have lived an upright life.
The person who continues to pursue his own mundane pleasures

cannot be spiritually enlightened. The individual who is asked 794
about the nature of his visitation is not judged on his ability 888 to raise his family in the murture of the church. He is rather 626 judged on his preparation to carry on the tradition. He must be worthy of the respect due to one of his status. While old [562]
women are numbered among the "elect," their exclusion from any active role in the church has kept them socially inferior to the old men.

I wish I could give some examples of the nature of this 124
"visitation;" however, Skye is a land where the direct question 576
is not used. One can ask a direct question without offending,
but the code of hospitality requires an either affirmative
answer or the answer you think your guest expects. My circuitous promptings on this topic only succeeded in arousing
concern for my soul.

Two groups escape from the control of the elders as it 626
is exercised through acceptance of an individual into the 888
"elect." As mentioned earlier, the newcomers to Skye have 794
come from different backgrounds. Beyond the Highlands, the 167 meaning of "Effectual Calling" has changed over the years. The [184]
youth attend a young communicants' class in which they are taught the meaning of church membership. Notestein, writing about the national character of the Scot, maintains that interest in "election" has disappeared.[14] Most of the members of the Church of Scotland in Portree would no doubt agree with him. One attempt has been made on Skye to hold a young 794 communicants' class. It took place, of course, in the Church 779
184

[14] Notestein, op. cit., p. 153.

of Scotland in Portree. Only one girl appeared for instruction. 794
After the significance of her preparation had been fully explained, 779 she declined to take the final step. She did not disagree 184 with the minister's view that she was prepared for membership and communion, but she was afraid of what her friends in the Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church might say. She was probably wondering what the middle-aged adherents of her church might have to say, too. When the Sgiathanach takes his first Communion, in Glendale, Kilmuir, or Portree, the people must be able to look up to him.

The second exception to the age-grade requirement rules 626 among the county people. Because of their social position 888 in the community, which rests on the expression of their statuses, 565
as roles, as landlords, village and neighborhood representatives 794 and leaders, and members of the national class system, and because of their education in England, the county people attain membership in the church at an early age. Some have become elders of the church at twenty-one. To subject them to the control of the crofters would, obviously, be incompatible with their social standing. Although they are all Church [182] of Scotland, here again religion is a reinforcing factor for the structure of the society.

Dying, the final act of living, reveals a host of traits 763 which only receive covert expression during an individual's 829 life. While the youth is censured for his spontaneous pleasures and the adult is criticized for his behavior, the deceased is always respected. As one woman said, "It is the one time in a person's life that the people have nothing but blitz of London he was talking with a crofter's wife, and they 795

got to discussing Hitler. "What a terrible man he is," she 829
said, "Why he's worse than...worse than...almost as bad as the 778 Pope." In another township there is a Church of Scotland 795 missionary, a lay preacher. His religious sectarianism does 797
not prevent his interacting with the Free Presbyterians,
who are in the majority. Not infrequently, he visits his neighbors and when they need help on the croft he is prepared to lend a hand. When he pays a call, he establishes the tempo of interaction at mealtime or tea time by saying grace and returning the thanks. This is part of the hospitality 574 of the Sgiathanach. The visitor is always asked to say 782 grace.

What is true of the township on Skye, is also partly 621
true of the neighborhood. Here the members and adherents of 794
the same church do get to know one another better because of a common faith, or their particular interpretation of a faith
common to all. They see each other with greater regularity.
Then, too, since the congregations are small, they feel they belong. At the same time, the patterns of interaction are not exclusive, except in Glendale. The religious cliques are [476] mutual aid groups, doing what they can for the infirm and [496]
destitute; they are not opposing factions. Nor does religious homogeniety mean the absence of factions. Glendale has its independents who are set against the disciples of the Department of Agriculture. Anyone who knows Wales may be struck by this 795 difference, for in Wales the people are attached to a particular 171

allowing his flock to attend concerts, had a point of differ- 793
ence with the Synod and was removed. In the Braes which had 795
been as staunchly Free Presbyterian as Glendale, roughly 798
half of the congregation changed their adherence to the Free Church. The remainder have continued true to their own sect under a new minister.

There are numerous Free Presbyterian families far 795 beyond the reach of a minister. All they can hope for is an occasional visit, and there are no missionaries of this sect on the island. Although they attend services at the nearest kirk of the Free Church, doctrinal differences are still important enough in their minds to keep them within the folds of their sect. They were born in it and will die in it.
Moreover, despite the lack of a minister in Glendale between 794 1908-1911, 1913-1920, and 1931-1933, the people are as staunch [793] as ever. At such times one of the elders steps forward to 794 conduct services as he would during the temporary absence 888
of the minister. His ability to fill the role of a spiritual 554 leader fortifies his control and his prestige. This is true in Portree. The elder, even a newcomer, who stands in the pulpit is deeply respected. Identity with, and attachment [796] to the denomination is maintained in the absence of a minister by visiting other churches at the Communion season and by the visits of a minister on the Sabbath and for annual Thanksgiving services following the harvest. So strong is [795] the sectarianism of the Glendale crofters that the Church of Scotland minister for Duirinish is convinced that "Churchianity

rather than Christianity is the prevailing practice in Glendale." 795
This attachment to a sect is all the more significant in the [796]
crofting neighborhoods because there is not one iota of difference in the Gaelic services in any church. The difference is doctrinal.

In the neighborhood the affiliates of the same church 571
have been said to interact with their fellows more regularly 794 then with the remainder of the group. They come together on 795
the Sabbath for a regular service and on Wednesday night 796
for a prayer meeting. On the Sabbath they come as families, [593] husband, wife and children and they sit together. Normally 562
the sexes are segregated in public. Indeed, in the home [574]
men keep to one side of the fire and women to the other when there are callers. They also leave in family groups. Their interaction is spiritual. There are no gatherings outside the church either before or after the service to gossip, discuss the stock, or even comment on the weather. They will all know who was absent, but they will only greet their fellows with a slight nod. The Wednesday night prayer meeting is different. This is a group situation. Some come by bus and gossip on the way. Others get together before and after the service for a chat. At these prayer meetings [554]
the stature of the "elect" again emerges. They offer the [888] prayers on behalf of the congregation. The prayers, it should [782] be noted, are extempore. No form is followed. The basis for them are passages from Scripture and interpretations of the passages.

There is another aspect to the prayer meetings. They 796
are no longer held in the Church of Scotland in Portree. 795
The ministers of the other sects say this is an indication 794
of the low degree of spiritual enlightenment among that 369 congregation. Further, Wednesday night is picture night in the village. The newcomers taunt the devout with, "off to the pictures?"

It is at these Wednesday night meetings that the people 554
get to know one another. They participate in the worship 571
through the eminent "Men," who in a society such as Skye 776
where almost everybody is related on one side of the family 794
or the other by some bond of consanguinity or affinity, are [602]
the "people" or "friends" of the worshippers. This custom of offering extempore prayers not only augments the prestige of the "elect" but it intensifies the unity of the group and makes them secure in the knowledge that they belong. This feeling of unity and the sense of belonging is further strengthened in some churches by setting aside a day of Humiliation. Services are held during which the congregation [782] as a group beseech God for forgiveness for the poor spiritual condition of the world. In their minds the God of this world is surely the Prince of Darkness.

But for the interaction of the members of the several 794
sects, the control of the "elect" would not be as strong as 795
it is. The elders of one kirk cannot exercise any direct 626 control over the adherents of another sect. Through what agency could they express their judicial and authoritarian functions? Certainly not the kirk session. But since they 794 share a common tradition, which is reinforced by interaction 795

and mutual respect, the elders impose more or less common 626 standards. The norms are the by-product of the history of Skye. If there was cleavage, might not the behavior of the people begin to diverge? In Kilmuir there are three sects. 795
Two of them have churches. The Church of Scotland is in the 796 majority. The Free Presbyterians are a definite minority;
I think there is only one family of them. Although several ministers of the Church of Scotland have begun to follow
the example of the national church elsewhere in Scotland and celebrate Christmas, at least on an appropriate Sunday,
there is no Christmas in Kilmuir any more than there is in Glendale. The custom is said to be "popish." Naturally, if the birth of Christ is not celebrated, his rebirth cannot be commemorated at Easter. All churches, on the other hand, celebrate New Years, which is also the traditional time to exchange gifts among members of the family. It is a time of license. After midnight the people of the townships 796 practice "first footing." Until early in the morning, the [273] people make their rounds exchanging visits and toasting one another and the New Year with whiskey, for the men, and wine, for the women. The people of Kilmuir are noted for their 571 inter-relationships. "You have to watch what you say up 602
there," I was told, "they're all relatives and friends of each other."

The situation in Portree for the Sgiathanach is much the 400

Religion has done more to keep the Gaelic language alive than any of the numerous outside agencies dedicated to the preservation of the language, such as An Comunn Gaidhealach, a national organization which sponsors a series of local, regional, and national programs in an attempt to maintain and stimulate an interest in the Highlands and their songs and stories. Except in Portree and at Dunvegan, church services are mostly conducted in Gaelic. The newcomer who wishes to attend church services in the crofting areas, and he had better, must either learn Gaelic or be content with the few words the minister may speak in English for his benefit if the minister is aware of the presence of someone who does not "have the Gaelic." Some might feel that this is rude since most Skyemen are bi-lingual, but the crofter seems to think quicker in his own tongue. Many crofters' children learn English only when they begin to attend school or pick it up from an older sibling who is going to school. Family worship is almost always in Gaelic, unless there is a visitor. We have already seen that the family worship at the time of death is in Gaelic or in Gaelic and English. Again we have a parallel with Wales, in that Welsh has been mainly preserved through religion.[19]

Making Gaelic the language of their religion has, however, led to several problems. It has weakened township solidarity on occasion. There are many isolated townships beyond the reach of a minister. In one of these remote

---

[19] Ibid., p. 129

that young sinners will not escape from his kingdom." 785 779
Another of the same church expressed himself, "One is constrained to look upon this world as a great battlefield between Christ and the devil and between grace and sin. In our day the kingdom of darkness is carrying everything before it; the Prince of the kingdom of darkness is the god of this world." This attitude is not, however, carried to the extreme that characterizes the Old Order Amish in their determination to "Be not conformed to this world."[24] On Skye, the position is rather that the church, as Christ's witness, must resist the encroachment of worldly pursuits. In a world which is moving as fast as ours, the success 88 of the resistance of the church is indicative of the hold 62 of the pillars of the faith, the venerable old man, over 79 the group. We have learned how the prestige status of the "elect" and the elders stems from their high position in the esoteric religious hierarchy, and how, through their power to withhold the sacraments, they enforce social control. When the elders sit in judgment of the father whohas come to ask that his child be baptized, or the person who thinks he has experienced a "saving change," they base their estimation of him on his non-religious behavior as much as his knowledge of the tenets of the faith. He must not only attend church regularly and conduct family worship he must also deny himself all pleasures of a frivolous natu

---

[24] Kollmorgen, Culture of a Contemporary Rural Communi The Older Order Amish of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, p.

in the nurture of the church by being tested on his knowledge of the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. The elders, then, sit in a judicial capacity. If the father measures up to the standards imposed by the elders and the minister, who is their choice and, therefore, must reflect their views, the father is told to present the child for baptism. If he does not satisfy the elders, his child is refused the rewards of the church until his father mends his ways. Here the authoritarian function of the elderly finds expression. 626 951 888 794 [771]

Many men are reluctant to approach the elders to ask for the sacrament. Everyone knows when a man is going to be tested and judged. The humiliation of being refused forces the father to reform. Since the elders think in terms of habitual behavior, one or even two years may pass before the father will feel that he has continuously demonstrated his conformity to the satisfaction of the elders. Nor is the bond of affection between the elder and his people and friends strong enough to prompt any leniency. To do so would threaten the status of the elders and the continuation of their control. In one case a first cousin of the minister was refused.

In the trade center village the question of baptism is a sore point for the ministers of the Free Church and the Free Presbyterian Church. As might be expected, the elders of the Church of Scotland are chosen from the county families and the prominent newcomers. Neither group shares the views of the Sgiathanach as far as their interpretation of circumspect behavior is concerned. For them baptism is administered to 369 626 951 888 794 age of the individual from birth, through his age statuses, 121

eath and to re-establish meaningful patterns of interaction
r a disturbance by an event in the life cycle. When 851 vidual and reciprocal patterns of behavior following birth 774 described, I pointed out that they were a much modified ival of the old practice of kirking, the custom of having parents, their "people," and "friends" attend a church ice to offer thanks, followed by a feast and dance. Similar ivities once accompanied baptism. As the first event in life cycle which concerns the church, and as one of the sacraments celebrated in the church, baptism is of supreme rtance. In addition to revealing the amount of control [121] elderly have over the group, it shows how the status and of the father has been maintained.

The child's father, as the religiously sanctioned head 626
he family, approaches the elder for his township and 851 ests the administration of the sacrament. The elder, in 888 774
, intimates the father's request to the minister, who calls a kirk session. At the kirk session the father is ined. He must live an exemplary life, in the way of the ch, including regular sabbath church attendance, daily hip in the home, and the renunciation of all forms of olous amusement. The elders, of course, know how he tually behaves by observation and reputation. In Glendale, ot in Kilmuir, the minister knows as well, for, as one n said, "You never know what your neighbors will run and the minister." Sudden reform is not good enough. The [779] er must also demonstrate his ability to raise the child hat the people of Skye, including many of the newcomers, 785 ave not been favorably impressed by Skye Week. The consensus 795

s that it is not representative of Skye. For the Sgiathanach 541 he Highland Games are alright, but the concerts, dances and imilar festivities only cause ill feelings.

As might be expected social life is more vivid in Portree. 369
ere the members and the adherents of the Church of Scotland 795 artake of a number of recreational activities. In the winter 52 here is badminton twice a week. In the spring and summer [326] here is a little golf and tennis. The limitations are not [526] eligious; they are climatic. Then, too, there is shinty.
have already noted the existence of many clubs. There are [535] egular dances. Moving pictures take place twice a week. [546] l of these activities are run by newcomers; the Skyemen have [167] more or less passive role. The "elect" of the two smaller 795 cts are, to say the least, very much disturbed by these 794 ivolities. What is worse, the children attend the dances 626
d the concerts and the boys play shinty. They can find 883 ough solidarity among those of their own age grade to out- 52 igh the threats of their elders. Apparently they find ough security to be unaffected by the stern denunciations of e minister from the pulpit. When they marry, however, they 794 ve to recast the pattern of their behavior, for now the 884
ders are in a position to exercise control by withholding 626 ptism from their children. Some may turn to the Church of otland.

Standing in marked contrast to Portree, in Glendale the 888 ntrol by the aged is complete. There is not a single activity 883 626
[53]

contrast the friendly and homely atmosphere of the English 275
"pub" with the austerity of the public bar on Skye. The same 185 man who went into the "Coach and Four" to play a game of darts and sing a few songs over his pint of beer goes down to the local hotel bar on Skye to toss off his dram, follow it with a pint of beer, and chaff his neighbors. "There is nothing else to do." Skye exiles in Glasgow, and not only 275 the youngest of them, often complain about the lack of 167 opportunity for social intercourse at home. What they really 571 mean is that "there is nothing else to do" unless they do not care about the reaction of their "people and friends."
Moreover, they may want to return some day to stay, and, then, they will have to face the judgment of the old men in their neighborhood.

Another contrast of the Welsh and the Sgiathanach can 525
be found in their respective attitudes towards gambling.
Traditionally, both enjoyed forms of recreation in which competition plays a major part, but the Welshman today does little gambling, implicitly because of his religious outlook.[27]
The Sgiathanach, too, is not an open gambler, but the football pools find many interested individuals on the Misty Isle.
There was, for example, the deacon in one church who forgot he 525 had a meeting to attend. Much to his dismay, when another 794 member of the kirk stopped by to see why he was late, he was busy filling out his football coupon. Dissimilarities, of 785 course, are not particularly significant. In both regions

[27] Ibid.

from the necessity of daily calls at the post office and shop, 182
but the drivers serve the function of passing on the news of the 571
day at each stop. 203

Standing in the place of many of the traditional social 182
outlets which have disappeared or been modified, there are the 794 religious occasions for joining together as a small group. We have found the Sgiathanach to be very religious. Everyone is [796] expected to go to church on the Sabbath, and everyone goes to church. Irregular attendance soon becomes noticed by one's neighbors, the kirk elders, and the minister. Concern over [626] what one's neighbors may think, in itself a strong motivating factor, is reinforced by a forbidding fear of what the venerable old men may do whenever an opportunity presents itself. There are Wednesday night prayer meetings for further social intercourse. Above all, there are the semi-annual Communions which, 182 except in Sleat and Strath and one Bracadale sect, bring to- 794 gether the people of the kirk, the members of the same sect from 796 other neighborhoods, and affiliates of the denomination from the mainland. Even the adherent, the individual who has not experienced a saving change because he is not old enough, normally takes his vacation, if he is employed, at the time of the Communions in order to attend.

The decline in interpersonal religious strife does not 182
mean that strong personal sentiments are not present. No one, 571
other than the eccentric, is indifferent to his neighbors or 203 others with whom he may have dealings. The crofter and his [646] village cousin may not bother to vote, but they closely watch [666]
and freely discuss their representatives. Gossip has retained maintain their position by intermarriage, by educating their 182 571 children in England, and by interacting with people of similar 554 status within the community and beyond. 565

The crofters continue to stand at the opposite pole. They seldom achieve status within their neighborhood. Upward mobility is possible only through outward mobility. Leadership fails to find expression among them in the township or the neighborhood. The rare exception is the crofter's son who becomes a [795] minister and returns to lead his people spiritually. When the [794] crofters must select a leader, from their own number, the status is accorded to an elder of the church. The elder [794] already has high status because of his advanced age and his position in the kirk. As I have said, the continued operation of primitive democracy means a minimum of authority and a maximum of equality.

The intermediate group in the social hierarchy cannot be 182 profitably used in this discussion. They are primarily newcomers, 554 565 people from the Lowlands or England, who have joined with the 167 relatively few Skyemen who have left the croft. Sufficient time has not elapsed for a class oriented structure to emerge. Then, too, they are not a numerous group. Still, status is important in the village. As in the crofting neighborhood, ministers, doctors, and teachers achieve high status through their occupation. For the remainder of the population of Portree, status depends more on personal qualities and outside activities, especially in the kirk, than on the way one may make his living.

While we are on the topic of status and ranking, let us 121 554

else the spouse is likely to lose status. 626 284

The most powerful of all agents for social control are 626 the old men of the neighborhood. Through their position in 882 the church, a religious sanction for their prestige status, [794] they enforce conformity to the norms of behavior which religion has sanctioned either positively or negatively. No one, nor any group, has been successful in questioning the right of these venerable men to maintain their habits and statuses which have been preserved over the generations. The baptism of a man's children and his own salvation depends on acceptance of the authority of the elders, for they will be his judges.

As far as the contemporary scene is concerned, there 183 is no anomie. The content of the culture has been greatly 178 modified, but the form, the underlying distinctive pattern, has been preserved. We are dealing with a single tradition in which the norms of behavior and the sanctions for them have remained common and clear. This is all the more striking because there have been periods in which cultural and social disintegration threatened to overwhelm the Sgiathanach. This brings us back to the role of religion in preserving cultural continuity.

Loomis and Beegle have employed Durkheim's theory to 171 analyze the growth and spread of fundamentalist religious 182 sects in contemporary United States.[16] They conclude: "It 771 is no mere coincidence that various types of emotional 786 religious sects are now among the most rapidly expanding 781

[16] Loomis and Beegle, Rural Social Systems, pp. 401-407.

795

795 SECTS--organized groups of congregations with differing and unreconciled systems of beliefs; crucial divergences in dogma; organization of sects or denominations (e.g., episcopal, congregational); admission of members (e.g., baptism, confirmation); distinguishing characteristics of members (e.g., special garb or behavior); established churches; splinter sects; interdenominational conferences and federations; etc. See also:

Sectarian philanthropic institutions 73, 74
Sectarian educational institutions 87
Castes 564
Secret societies 575
Government support of established churches . 659
Medicine societies 756
Associated theological systems 779
Baptism of infants 881

THE PEOPLE

181 ing but black. The young have found the island a much more kindly place. They have never been forced by circumstances to choose between predestination and despair.'

To take account of matters beyond the material level is inherent in the Gaelic Celt. Celtic poetry and song, legend and [538] folklore, all so alive with fancy and so sympathetic towards the things of nature, reflect the inborn sensitivity and character of the present-day Highlander and Islander. Fiction's caricature of the island-dweller (not only in Harris and Lewis, but in the other islands) has been taken by another society with a different cultural background, with insufficient knowledge of historical facts, as being virtually authentic. The Western Isles have had more than their share of 'observers' who have failed to penetrate to the inner Gael. Only with a knowledge of the background, social, cultural, ethnic, historical and so on, can the 'larger than life' islander be seen in perspective—as a normal human being.

RELIGION

771 There are few communities in the British Isles which have, since the Christian dawning, so closely integrated religious belief with secular day-to-day living as the Harris and Lewis people. Though many times the religious element in island life foundered in a Sargasso Sea of outright superstition, it has managed to survive to its present-day form which might be described as cathartic in nature. When one attempts to investigate religion and superstition as two separate subjects, one is forced to consider either both as one, or one as complementary to the other. Even in those times during the island's history when materialism was prominent, somewhere in the background religion was acknowledged in one form or another.

175 795 As mentioned in Chapter 3, in 1610 Lord Kintail brought Farquhar MacRae, the vicar of Gairloch, to Lewis. The first Earl of Seaforth, who built a church in Stornoway (St Lennan's) was nominally Episcopalian. During the temporary supremacy of Episcopacy in Scotland, there was little disturbance in the High- [793] lands of the Presbyterian organisation. The bishops controlled [794] their dioceses; but the ministers controlled their parishioners. In

RELIGION

Lewis, there were but two ministers in 1626, their parishes being 175* Barvas (which included Uig) and Eye, which included Lochs; the 795 population of the island at the time was about 4,000. When Pres- [793] byterianism was re-established in Scotland in 1640, the Lewis [62] ministers found no trouble in conforming, as did their fellow parishioners. Sectarian feeling in the island during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries was not so much between Presbyterians and Episcopalians as between Romanists and Protestants.

In the year 1738, nine Episcopalian Lewismen signed a letter [793] to the Bishop of the Isles, asking for an annual visit from a pastor, being unable to support a full-time minister. Almost a century 175* later in 1839, the foundation stone of St Peter's in Stornoway was 346 laid: this is the town's Episcopal Church. The other building on the island which belongs to the Episcopalians is the ancient church at Eoropie, dating back to the tenth century and perhaps the oldest still in use in the Hebrides; services are held there occasionally, though there is no local Episcopalian congregation. One of 175* the most significant events which echoed right through to the 795 island was the Disruption which took place in Edinburgh in 1843. The result was a 'church spectrum' in Scotland which is still mirrored on a smaller scale in the island: the Church of Scotland, the Free Presbyterian Church, the United Free Church, and the Free Church. The Roman Catholic Church is also represented.

Lewis has one of the largest Free Church congregations in the 794 country. This denomination is particularly known for its out- 795 spoken pronouncements from time to time on questions of the day. It is Calvinistic in doctrine and has a reputation for holding the 'Calvinistic outlook' in the more general and pejorative sense; though its strictness may sometimes be over-painted, it is much less liberal in its moral standpoint than is the Church of Scotland, if less austere in some respects than the Free Presbyterians. Its doctrinal position is that of unrelaxed adherence to the West- 779 minster Confession, its ministers and other office-bearers affirming their belief 'in the whole doctrine of the Confession'. It is opposed to theological liberalism and accepts the inerrancy and infallibility of the Scriptures. Only the Psalter is used in public worship, and instrumental music is dispensed with; strong

A HARRIS

Lands were not allowed to become waste; in 1
Campbell in North Uist was paid to come north island of Ensay, Sound of Harris.

It is significant that much of MacLeod's re money rather than produce, for it emphasises th
the cattle trade in the Highlands, in which Harris significant part—that is, compared with neighb was sound economy for the Highlands, and far i theories of the so-called 'improvers' of a later age.
MacLeod estates were collected by chamberlains,
work of Malcolm Campbell, the chamberlain f
beginning of the eighteenth century, was the fe cattle to Skye. In Rodel, MacLeod had a 'keepin probably consisted of rooms for the chief while was also a brew-house.

To introduce more efficient communications
nect all the small Hebridean islands of the estate, chased for a Lauchlan MacLean in 1705; he wa maintain a regular ferry between Harris and operated between the mainland of Harris and islands in the Sound, such as Berneray, Ensay Pabbay. In religion the estate was Presbyterian, had the burden of providing both suitable re ministers and the communion elements. As menti Rev Aulay MacAulay, the great-grandfather of the English writer, was once minister in Harris.

The first half of the nineteenth century saw the ownership of the various islands compri Hebrides. MacLeod of Harris retained Harris un eighteenth century, when it was purchased by family, a son of Sir Norman MacLeod of Berner
This son, Captain MacLeod, who had made a fo East and ploughed some of it back into his nati man who introduced fishing as an industry to th
In 1834 the Harris estate passed to the Earl o
£60,000. Dunmore sold north Harris to Sir E
1868 for £155,000. In 1919, Lord Leverhulm
Harris and St Kilda for £36,000.

1. [See map, pp.8-9--Analyst]

VIGNETTE

10, a Roderick 614
nd settle in the 175*
427 ts was paid in [231]
great value of played a not inuring Lewis. It advance of the
The rents of the
and part of the r Harris at the rying of Harris
g house', which in Harris; there

nd to intercon- 614
a boat was pur- 175*
s empowered to 505
Skye. This also the populated
, Killegray and [795] •
, and MacLeod
sidences for the oned earlier, the Lord MacAulay,

great changes in 614
sing the Outer 175*
il the end of the 423
a cadet of the
ay, for £15,000.
rtune in the Far [228]
ive soil, was the e Harris people.
of Dunmore for dward Scott in
e bought south

175 visited the chapel of St. Rona. It was fenced, and was 814 swept every day, suggesting daily worship; and the Lord's 771 Prayer, Creed and Ten Commandments were repeated
there every Sunday morning. This led Martin to say that [788] the people had no vices; and indeed the Gael's own prayers insist upon the beauty of virtues rather than on the evil of vices. In Lewis at that time (1695) there were two ministers, at Stornoway and at Barvas; and the Barvas minister visited Rona yearly. Isolated though they were from their fellow-Lewismen, the Rona folk thus had annual contact with organised religion, such as was lacking even
on the main island during periods of stress in Scotland.
[648] Invasions, repeated destruction and prolonged intrigue by the Norsemen or the English Kings, led to, and intensified, [798] internal strife. And in Lewis forty years of warring interregnum had followed the 'Reformation'.

175 These and other notes of worship given by Martin,
771 such as those of the Lewismen's devotions when touching
at the Flannan Isles, show that the worshippers relied 798 greatly upon themselves and one another. They did so even after their primitive Christian modes of worship had been blamed and derided by Reformers, and the new modes
in their turn condemned by such ordained priests as secretly
made their way north from Armagh to Uist, Harris and probably to Lewis. How much more stable must their community's faith have been before the tragic upheavals
[797] which began at the Reformation. Some four centuries
earlier, the Roman Church supplanted the institutions
developed by the early Celtic missionaries from regional
and rural growth, by a formal organisation developed upon an imperial and civic model. Thus they may already have shaken faith by undermining the authority of communal
• [795] sanctions and traditions. But the break caused by medieval

175 Roman Catholicism was far less complete than that ulti
771 mately brought about by Protestantism—Episcopalian o
798 Calvinist.

• 795 At least twenty-five churches, chapels and tiny oratorie are named by Martin in Lewis and his list is incomplet
175 (1934, p. 106). Harris and its islets also had their comple
346 ment of 'temples', in addition to the priory church o
Rodel. We may perhaps assume that before the Reforma
[162] tion Lewis had a population of some 4000 persons or 1000 families, and contained some thirty chapels o [794] oratories in inhabited areas. If so, then one church o
'temple', on an average served thirty to thirty-five families
or six or seven farm-groups. Yet only the larger congre gations at Eye, Stornoway, Ness or Uig and Rodel woul
normally be served by clergy; the people of smaller congre gations would be without, for weeks and months or eve
years.

175 When the people were too distant from priests (an 79 later ministers) to hear the Lessons, they handed dow
the Word orally. Their power of retaining memorabl [153] thought, even in prose, is still remarkable; and vers strengthened memory. For example, 'the Ten Com
175 mandments' paraphrased in rhyme are recorded in F
788 Allan Macdonald's little collection, "as given by the Go 779 of graces to Moses in the wilderness" (Na Faintean
p. 62). Moses, had he understood Gaelic, would hav protested at the omission of the Second Commandmen but no sculptor of Iona, Rodel or Eye would have felt need for it, being unafraid that a Christian could bo down to a golden calf. Believing, with Solomon, that craftsman's work is his prayer, the artist-monks held th an 'image' should represent, though never replace, God'
creation, and may even quicken our concept of the Creato

781 3. Bible vs. Bottle: An islander living on the 273 mainland once observed that the Free Church plays cat
• 795 and mouse with members of the community who drink heavily.
794 Death is a common event in a community which has a large [761] number of old people, and the theme of death appears repeatedly in sermons and in the conversations of those who have undergone religious conversion. The temporary pleasures of drink are contrasted with the eternal joys 781 awaiting those who have been saved. The "false" friend-794 ships of the drinking situations are contrasted with the more lasting, consistent relations which characterize the clique of the converted. "You have lots of friends when you get converted, and they don't change overnight the way your drinking companions do."

273 "With the drink it's easy to get started and just not [434] be able to stop drinking, especially with the money there
[781] is now. Everything's unsteady here except religion."

273 Many of the most deeply religious male members of 794 the church were once heavy drinkers. One villager observed, 733 "If a man went to extremes as a sinner, he'll be just as 781 fanatical when he becomes holy. Had it not been for [743] religion, some of them would have landed in Craig Dunain
[the mental hospital near Inverness]. The talk is forever on religion. That keeps their mind at rest."

B. The Bible

771 1. The Free Church: "A man in my great-grandfather's
175 time," said a 65-year-old man, "talked about the great
178 change within his generation, from the days when fanks
were held on Sundays to such strict observance on the Sabbath that not even a cow could be tethered."

175 The first evangelical minister on Lewis came to the 793 parish of Uig in 1824. The Rev. Alexander Macleod belonged
• 795 to the Church of Scotland, but joined the Free Church when it broke away from the Church of Scotland in the "Disruption"
of 1843. When he came in 1824, he found "superstition,"
"spiritual darkness," and "polluted remains of Popery,
since it was the religion in this place...the only notion
they had of Christianity (Beaton 1925: 7-8)." The southern 795 isles of the Outer Hebrides are still Catholic, but in the 829 Protestant isles of the north, holidays associated with 184 Catholicism are avoided, and stories are still told of the 798 burning of Protestant martyrs by Catholics. Catholics are disliked "because they believe that they can buy their way out of sin," or that the bread and wine of Communion
is really the blood and body of Christ. "A Catholic is anointed with oil and left to die without food or water.
We are privileged that we are not like them."

175 In the Disruption of 1843, about one-third of the 795 people and 39% of the ministers left the established church

175 to join the Free Church (Donaldson 1960: 100). The Free • 795 Presbyterians left the Free Church in 1893 because they found it too "liberal." Several dissenting groups, including most of the members of the Free Church, formed a United Free Church at the turn of the century. After [659] a long court case, the church property was left with the Free Church, which continues to support itself without aid 795 from the state. Collections and funds solicited by 794 villagers who visit the households periodically are sent 465 to a central office in Edinburgh, which pays all ministers an equal salary, despite variations in the size of their congregations. About one-fourth of the church's income comes from Lewis. A minister's salary is between L950-1,000, and the upkeep and fueling of his manse is included
The present minister in Shawbost uses oil and coal, but at an earlier time received loads of peat from the villagers.
The villagers bring extra food to the manse when Communion are held, although the church donates about L20 to be used to provide for visiting ministers.

795 The Free Church contains a number of presbyteries, of which Lewis and Harris are one. An Assembly is held each year which parallels the Assembly held by the Church of Scotland. (According to one minister of the Free Churc
"A Berlin wall divides the two.") The Free Church publish a monthly report of church activities and amount of money

795 collected, and an annual report on morals, which usually condemns drinking and "the decline in moral standards." Ministers are trained in a college in Edinburgh. Many [197] are Gaelic speakers, although the number is said to be declining.

794 793 When a congregation loses a minister because of death or other reasons, it issues a "call" to some other minister. The congregation is familiar with the names and preaching styles of a number of ministers, who have in the past visited the community as guest speakers. The congregation votes for a minister from a list made by the lay officers of the church. The minister may or may not accept the call.

795 [178] The Free Church and the Free Presbyterian Church, two fundamentalist Protestant sects which have survived the tendencies toward unification evident since the turn of the century, are strongest in the Highlands and Islands. Shawbost contains a few people who belong to the Church of Scotland, but most villagers belong to the Free Church.

795 346 [173] The only church (in the sense of a building in which sermons are preached) is a Free Church which was built in 1883, supposedly after men from Shawbost helping to repair the fence at the minister's manse in Carloway, where they then attended church, were refused boiling water for their oatmeal "brose" by the minister's wife. A building in which members of the Church of Scotland worshipped was built 795 346 before 1883 but now serves as a school museum. When it closed, most of the members changed to the Free Church.

794 The present congregation includes many families from the neighboring village of Bragar, who come to church for the morning service and usually attend a prayer meeting in their own village in the evening. Once a month the minister gives an evening sermon in Bragar. The left side of the church, where most of the Bragar people sit, is called "the Bragar side."

Lay officers of the church, called elders and deacons, are elected by the communicants, those members of the congregation who have taken Communion. Both elders and deacons sit in special seats at the front of the church beneath the pulpit. Deacons, who are concerned with material matters such as collections and church property, sit in the "wee seats" slightly lower than the partitioned seats of the elders, the "big seats." The deacons meet in a deacons' court which the elders may attend. A meeting is held once a year at which the congregation is told matters such as how the church money was spent. Kirk sessions are limited to elders, who decide who will be baptised or take Communion.

[621] Each street or neighborhood within the village has its own deacon and elder, to whom members of the street bring various matters that concern church organization, such as plans for baptism.

781 794 [302] meetings. If a woman converts when she is off the island, as occasionally happens during the first year or so at university or other school, the tell-tale sign is that she begins to let her hair grow, and wears it tied back in a bun.

The word curam means "conversion," but is also used in ordinary conversation to mean being careful, such as keeping one's clothes tidy. It also means to be circumspect. In a religious context, it means to be careful of one's behavior, as this behavior reflects on the state of one's soul. When a person "has the curam," he has demonstrated that he is "in a state of conviction," that he has undergone conversion. People say, "A change has come into my life." The "change" includes the cessation of drinking and going to dances and concerts. Woman stop smoking. "After you are converted, you don't watch TV on Sunday. You should do everything for Sunday on Saturday, like shine your shoes for church or cook the Sunday dinner."

781 794 795

781 273 A dramatic change in behavior is often found among men who have had a history of hard drinking. One man went into the bothan, raised a glass to his lips, but never drank. "He put it down and walked out. They put the glass of whiskey aside, expecting him to return. He was a hard-working man, one of the hardest workers in the village, but everything went to booze in the bothan. He slept in

105 241 188 632 The Harris Tweed industry is lauded as an industry which is compatible with crofting. Because weavers are self-employed, they can set their own schedule of work and thus continue to participate in croft work and fulfill various township obligations. The effects [121] of this industry on the township as a social boundary [434] [463] system were investigated. The income available from weaving is unpredictable, which encourages the retention of crofting practices and other patterns of behavior, such as "occupational pluralism," that were found to be [476] [082] adaptive in the past. Such strategies also strengthen township boundaries; for example, they encourage mutual [434] [407] aid and communal township practices. But weaving also offers a high level of income; and some weavers, preferrin to spend most of their time weaving, have neglected crofting, or have invested in tractors or other motorized transport which enables them to harvest crops, cut peat and perform other activities independent of other township members.

105 621 795 632 184 The fundamentalist Free Church constitutes an importan boundary-maintaining mechanism, serving to exclude various external influences of the larger society from the townshi However, a smaller network of persons engaged in the

105 794 621 632 184 religious sphere of social activity, a subsystem within the township system, also exists which has the appearance of a firmly bounded system. These are members of the cliq

● 795

[For admission of new members to the Free Church in 794 and 796.]

n Shawbost, by the process of communion, see categories

who seeks sensory pleasures and finds enjoyment in 785 recreation is believed to be spiritually un- 779 ened. It seems almost an anticlimax to add that life is restricted.

Beyond the Highlands and, indeed, within the Highlands 771
ain prosperous areas, where poverty has not been 883
r of such importance that it requires religious 571
n, the Church of Scotland has endeavored to find thin the church for recreational activities, es-y for the youth. As in America, the church feels nsibility to the youth which requires a combination gion and recreation if the citizens of the community be well-rounded adults. Youth programs and youth young adult groups, and social circles for the older l women are an essential part of church work. In 794 nizational sense, the Church of Scotland on Skye 571
the most, a Woman's Guild which meets once a month
a lecture on a topic such as missionary work in and which holds an occasional sale of work to reduce urch debt or buy the minister an electric tea kettle in his vestry; and a choir, which meets once a week hearsal. It is, as I have said before, not the over-licy of the church which determines the activities ch the people participate or which they reject. The 888 are the prime movers. Were the youth in Kilmuir 561 under thirty, instead of anyone under forty, the 626
l of the aged might not be as strong as it is. In much of Protestantism was a denial of Christianity. Holders of all these forms of Trinitarian belief have united in condemning Unitarianism as heresy, its earlier Arian form having been stamped out in blood. The 'heterodox' are held by the orthodox of many Churches to be awaiting eternal torture. To a thoughtful humanist like Sir James Frazer, on the other hand, the belief that one alone by suffering can atone for the sins of others is of the deepest significance, as being an ancient, widespread and 'pathetic fallacy'. Happily, one finds the greatest tolerance and sympathy where Protestant and Catholic are mixed in the Isles. Elsewhere, too, sympathy and reverent enquiry are taking the place of dogmatic assertion.[1] It is in this spirit that we can best understand Gaelic beliefs at their highest, and so distinguish their lowered use—or misuse for selfish ends—from the highest use of sacrament and prayer by the pure of mind and heart.

(8) RELIGION, MAGIC AND SUPERSTITION IN DAILY LIFE

Evil ends might be sought by means of the ancient runes: the power of their poetry and associations could tempt to perverted use. Carmichael tells how in Uist a malefactor, in terror of the law, went to a needy woman, and by appealing to her pity—and in exchange for a small sum—learned from her an "Invocation for Justice". Strengthened by its rhythm and imagery, and by his own associated belief in its magical power as a charm, he stood up boldly in Court, firmly asserted his innocence and got

[1] Cf. the friendly theological arguments between a Bernera Presbyterian and a Roman Catholic from Barra (Bodach Bharraidh—vii, viii), sketched in Gaelic by I. N. Macleoid, Litrichean Alasdair Mhoir, Stornoway, 1932.

175 year in which John Bunyan was born ". Archbishop Sharp
178 " banished him to the dungeons of the Bass Rock for 794 twenty-eight years, and it was during his imprisonment that the meetings of communicants were kept going by a parishioner,—a reformed tinker and a gifted and consecrated lieutenant ". This tradition of the ' Men ' renewed itself and spread with each wave of ' Revival '. It sprang up in the Islands more than a century ago, as it had on the north-western mainland during the later eighteenth century, and in ' Easter ' Ross two hundred years before.

[798] The spiritual crises of the Reformation and of the Cromwellian and Covenanting age are still profoundly influential; yet they seem hard for those from the Lowlands and England to understand because they occurred so long ago. But in Lewis, Macfarlane writes of the ' Men ' whom he knew and admired, in order to keep their memory green. Once more, life in the Isles throws fresh light on the past, revealing its significance.

(D) EVANGELISM AND ERASTIANISM, WRATH AND WOE

175 The Disruption[1] gave a powerful urge to the move-
668 ment for freedom, in many ways. Throughout Scotland
[795] the people were made to feel that both landlordism and the

[1] The issues of Disruption, for the sake of freedom from the choice of a minister by the landlord's patronage and from State control, were reviewed by the Rev. Prof. G. D. Henderson, in Heritage of the Disruption, 1943 (published at the centenary, and nearly half a generation after the Union of 1929). While the Free Church still maintains a strong hold in the Island—and among a small minority elsewhere who feel that even the terms of the Union could not secure full moral freedom—it is claimed by the Church of Scotland that its constitution now goes far to solve " the age-long antinomy of establishment and freedom ", a view widely held abroad, both in Germany and in the smaller lands of North-west Europe occupied by the invader, at the time of the centenary.

spiritual independence, the Skyemen stood stoutly behind their 175* 771 794 795
devine right kings who tried to modify the church in the direction of Anglicanism. It was not until after Presbyterianism had been replaced by Episcopacy that the Reformation reached Skye, and it was not until after the Glorious Revolution that communion was celebrated in the Presbyterian form.[87] Even so, it required using the well worn trick of inviting the clan chiefs to dinner on board ship and then arresting them to make them agree to support the clergy and the discipline of the reformed kirk.[88] As late as 1700 the people had not shown any of the religious fervor which had ripped the Lowlands asunder. The Sgiathanach, although nominally converted from Catholicism, was apathetic to the slight differences between Episcopacy and Presbyterianism. Revolution and Restoration made little difference. The ministers, who were hereditary, remained, and were succeeded by their sons.[89] Catholic and pagan rituals persisted. At the close of the seventeenth century, Christmas, Good Friday, Easter, and St. Michael's Day were still observed.[90] They had been dropped from the Scots' calendar more than a hundred years before. The holy wells were still believed [87] Hew Scott, Fasti Ecclesae Scoticane (new ed.; 8 vols.; Edinburgh: Oliver and Boyd, 1928-1950), Vol. VII, p. 166; see also J. B. Craven, Records of the Dioceses of Argyll and the Isles, 1560-1660 (Kirkwall: Peace and Son, 1907); and Duncan MacTavish, Minutes of the Synod of Argyll, 1639-1661 (2 vols.; "Publications of the Scottish Historical Society," Vols. XXXVII-XXXVIII; Edingburgh: Scottish Historical Society, 1943-1944).

---

[88] MacKenzie, op. cit., pp. 130-132.

[89] See, e.g., Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182; Vol. VIII, pp. 683-684; and Craven, op. cit., pp. 46, 48-49.

[90] Martin, op. cit., p. 250.

efficacious. Amulets were still worn as charms. 175* 771 794 795

Even more important, religion was still intertwined with the structure of the clan. The ministers were said to be negligent, either afraid of or sympathetic with local sentiments, in their duty, by the evangelicals who waged an uncompromising hostility to the old folk culture which tied the people to the past.[91] It could hardly have been otherwise. The ministers were tacksmen; they were married to daughters of tacksmen, and their children married into tacksmen's families.[92] The chief or a cadet of the clan met with the minister and his elders, the lay kirk officers who were probably tacksmen, when a kirk session was held, and the chief enforced their decisions by his "irresistible authority."[93] Thus, the influence of clan brotherhood pervaded every aspect of the culture. There still was no room for two independent leaders. The people could not have lost toleration for differing faiths. Episcopal, Catholic, and Presbyterian families lived together without rupture. Religious fervor could have broken the clan. To see how the old and the new blended, let us turn to the life cycle.

---

[91] John MacInnes, The Evangelical Movement in the Highlands of Scotland, 1688-1800 (Aberdeen: The University Press, 1951), pp. 2, 14-15, 50-55; and Cartmore, op. cit., pp. 340, 366-367.

[92] Scott, loc. cit.

[93] Martin, op. cit., p. 185

*175 *178 182 As the tacksmen withdrew, the farms wer joint-tenants.[10] The former subtenants, who at will of a tacksman, became tenants at will Since the people no longer had to divide the land with their superiors, they were able to needs more adequately. Population pressure w by the introduction of the potato and kelping seaweed to produce alkalies.[11] The acceptance potato and kelping was facilitated by the fac involved any great change in traditional tech expenditure other than labor. The potato ga a secure yield several times that of oats and year in every four there was no grain harvest was confined to waste land, it also enabled t to reclaim land for increasing the acreage of
and direct participation in the cattle trade,
the control of the chief and tacksmen, freed
from complete dependence on their harvests.
small pox reduced the death rate,[13] as did th [61] hostilities. Consequently, between 1755 and lation increased from 10,671 to 17,029.

*175 *178 795 Little is known of the religious life o Still the beginning of a trend which continue

---

[10] Canon MacLeod, The Book of Dunvegan, and OSA, II, 551; III, 247, IV, 132-133; XVI, XVIII, 183-184.

[11] Walker, An Economical History of the
p. 137, 348.

[12] Pennant, op. cit., Vol. II, pp. 305-3

[13] Walker, op. cit., Vol. I, p. 348; OSA
XVIII, 551.

re made over to
had been tenants
of a landlord.
produce of the meet subsistence
was further reduced
, the burning of
of both the t that neither niques or any ve the islanders
barley. One
.[12] As the potato
he cultivators
grain. Kelping hitherto under a large number Vaccination against cessation of 1811, the popu-

f this period, s to find expression

Vol. I, pp. 70-71;
551, 224;

Hebrides, Vol. I,

06.

, XVI, 224;

#175 #178 775 [773] can be seen. In common with the rest of Scotland up to the time of the French Revolution, the Skye ministers were abandoning their emotional approach in favor of mild methods of persuasion.[14] The rigor of Presbyterianism was succumbing before the philosophical enlightenment of the Deist.[15] At the same time religion [771] [773] on Skye contrasted with Lowland practices. It was religion based on inward conviction rather than on doctrinal dogma. The ministers were too far removed from Edinburgh to become involved in the heated debates and dissensions within the General Assembly which were creating opposing groups of theologians and, frequently, resulting in secession movements.[16] The people had no serious predilection for any specific articles of faith, and the landlords and many of the tacksmen were only nominal Presbyterians.[17]

#175 #178 773 As the proprietors and the tacksmen withdrew, the status of the ministers was augmented. They were more than spiritual leaders and moral guardians. They were descended from tacksmen, were often themselves tacksmen, and were frequently married to the daughters of tacksmen. They controlled education and administered the poor funds. But in many cases they seem to have been less concerned with the ministry than with their farms.[18]

---

[14] Pennant, op. cit., Vol. II, p. 173.

[15] Johnson, op. cit., p. 95; and Notestein, The Scot in History, pp. 202-211.

[16] Norman MacLeod, op. cit., p. 107.

[17] James MacDonald, op. cit., p. 109; and Johnson, op. cit., p. 95.

[18] John Lane Buchanan, Travels in the Western Hebrides, 1782-1790 (London: G. G. J. and J. Robinson, 1793), pp. 219-231.

The process to be observed in the religious facet of the culture during the second period is conservatism. Itinerant missionaries, catechists, and a religious brotherhood known as the "Men" supplemented the regular clergy. As the Revival grew strong, the "Men," as tenacious defenders of the evangelical cause, began to wage an anti-clerical campaign.[44] They usually remained within the Church, opposing any separatist movement, but they drew a sharp distinction between the Church and her ministers. To be a convert of the "Men" meant to dissociate oneself from the death dealing moderate ministers," who were said to have had more interest in their farms than in their congregations.[45] The "Men" conceived their function to be one of delivering powerful testimonies of evangelical truth. They rebuked and constantly reminded the people of their religious duties. They made Sabbatarianism an observable test of religious obedience, separating the respectable Christians from the godless. Prayer meetings were held at which the "Men" engaged in short, earnest prayers, and exhorted the people to read their Bibles and partake in family worship.

The growing influence of the Revival did not leave the clergy unmoved. At least two arose to recreate the spirit of vital religion and revive emotional enthusiasm in their congregations.[47] It was no accident that these ministers should

---

[44] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 151, 165; MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 53-59.

[45] MacCowan, op. cit., p. 53.

[46] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 217-218.

[47] Thomas Brown, Annals of the Disruption in 1843 (Edinbur Macniven and Wallace, 1884), pp. 7-8.

single example may be given; so far as I know, it is unrecorded. I learned it in South Uist, where Catholic and Protestant mingle in tolerance and sympathy; it had been told by an old woman, a Catholic, to a young neighbour, a Protestant fisherman's son, later a minister.[1]

The story takes place after the Crucifixion. It may be remembered that in the Gospels not a word is said of Jesus's mother after His farewell to her from the Cross (John, xix. 26). He—or she—who first conceived the legend may have asked, would not a mother visit the tomb of the son she had just lost? And surely she who at His birth had cried, "My soul magnifies the Lord . . . my Saviour", would be the first to seek Him out after His death? The legend tells that, on the second day of the Entombment, Mary, Jesus's mother, in an agony of mourning and suspense, visited the tomb of her son, calling upon Him with many an endearing name. From the tomb He answered that she would be consoled, for He would arise. And He told her that because of the depth of her love, of all forms of human love a mother's would be accounted the highest for ever after.

The Gael had fused the grandeur of the Old Testament with the hope and humanity of the New; for them the light of dawn on sea and snow awoke the light within. A last example is taken from two fragments forming part of a single theme, perhaps of one original poem.[2] Chanted

[1] It is interesting to compare this quiet legend with the late Roman (and Episcopalian) "Apostles' Creed", apparently based on the vivid story in the Gospel of Bartholomew: after Christ "was crucified, dead, and buried, He descended into hell" (hades). Montagu R. James (translator), The Apocryphal New Testament, 1924.

[2] Carmina Gadelica, 201, 197. No translation can be perfect, and Carmichael offers alternatives: line 6, "Ti nan dul, Being of life", or "of the elements"; l. 13, "light on the plain" or "the land", fearann. The last line is intimate and simple: "The hour (or era) God's Son came in (among us)," a steach, as into a dwelling.

State were in the wrong: the people were with God and, most of all when they suffered, God was with them! The sense of liberation brought to the Highlanders and Islesmen encouraged them to press their claim to the land they worked, strengthening the agrarian movement of 1880–86. The moral victory of 1843 contributed to legal victory in 1886.

The influence of Evangelism continued for some time at fever heat. "Even down to the present time (1877) there are tokens of the gracious working of the Spirit on men's minds, although it is a day of small things compared with the past and, in the case of some, a day of stumbling and instability. How humbling to behold the first reaction in favour of worldly and Erastian [1] principles, manifesting itself on the spot where the gospel banner was first unfurled in Lewis! But there is a God that judgeth in the earth, and his time to vindicate his cause shall come. 'Offences must come, but woe unto that man by whom they shall come!'" [2]

What comment can be made on this? One shudders at first, to hear of 'gross vices' among the people, only to find that by these 'vices' was meant fidelity to the religious past. It may seem strange that Highlanders such as these writers on the 'Disruption Worthies', who were almost as proud of Columba as of the Covenanters, were blinded to the enduring values in Columban tradition. They were certainly unable to foresee the effects of their preaching.

[1] 'Erastianism' is the doctrine of the supremacy of the State in ecclesiastical causes, a term which came into use in Britain in the seventeenth century. Actually the problem is one which Erastus, 1524–83, nowhere entered upon; none the less, the name is established, and it denotes a major issue of principles.

[2] J. Greig (ed.), Disruption Worthies of the Highlands (1877).

The Evangelicals, so insistent in condemning the beliefs and worship of ancient Christianity as 'vice' and 'superstition', comparatively rarely condemned words and rites designed to bring punishment upon a person believed to have wronged one—that is upon a person one hated! Of such was the practice, widespread in the Old World, of moulding a clay figure representing the person to be harmed, and either sticking pins into it, exposing it to fire, or leaving it in a stream, with a prayer that as the figure wasted away so would the object of hatred. An educated Lewisman I knew, Dr. Norman Morrison, stated that an aunt of his own performed this rite. No doubt she persuaded herself that if the desired injury took place, natural or Divine law was at work and she herself was therefore innocent or actually just. What is striking is that in the twentieth century, long after the healing beauty and Christian calm of runes and rites had been banished and the healthy laughter of gay custom silenced, this pre-Christian rite of ill-will had lived on. One hardly knows whom to pity the more: the hated, for the fear they would feel if they knew the rite was at work, or the hater. The extreme Evangelicals made so little appeal to reason based on fact, that the irrational element in superstition was not firmly replaced by a sane, scientific outlook. Indeed 'science' was condemned as 'unbelief'. The constant evocation of wrath, anger and "the punishment of just and unjust" played havoc with the emotions.

Those brought up on the precepts of Presbyterianism—especially in its milder forms—and familiar from infancy with a selection of Old Testament readings, can hardly appreciate the shock to a sensitive heart of first hearing the whole of the Old Testament read Book by Book. The shock is due not only to the acts of vengeance or massacre, but still more to their repeated justification in the name of the Lord 'God'. 'God' the universal (Elohim) came to be identified with the tribal god Jahveh or Yahweh, altered, late in Jewish history, to "the LORD God", the term still used in Bibles. The war cry of the Jewish tribes, as they swept in from the desert or tightened their hold upon citizens and cultivators, was that of many wild wanderers, before and since, who have cried upon their God of Battles, upon Jahveh, or Allah. Magnificent in its affirmations of righteousness, the Old Testament can be terrible in its denials of pity.

The Bible (literally Biblia, the Books) reflects the search of a people through centuries towards the idea of God; but the tragedy of the Bible, or rather of its historic misuse, came with the acceptance of all 'Scripture' as equal in inspiration and truth. The early and the late were accepted together, the mixed or false with the true. The custom of seeking Divine guidance by simply opening a page of 'the blessed Book'—that is, any text on any page of any one of its books—was an example of such acceptance; and it was only possible for the literate. In Lewis, Macfarlane records the custom, practised by 'The Men', late in the nineteenth century.

Reading came late to the Islanders, but its effects were as direct as among the Puritans or Covenanters at an earlier period. The people, whose hearts had long since been wrung with pity at the Crucifixion and who were steeped in reverence for the Gospels, became 'changed' indeed. Once their minds had been crushed by the Old Testament's massive weight, the 'change' was reinforced by the vision of a world to come, limned by fevered imagination in the New Testament's finale, the Apocalypse. The 'change' was brought by Evangelicals who had themselves

175 undergone the same crushing experience, at a time when 178 communal life was being overthrown by the Industrial 771 Revolution. "Terrible old men!" exclaimed a wise Lewis schoolmaster, of these 'Disruption Worthies'. It was not • 795 that they were inhuman—that is clear from the warmth felt for them by so many of the people, who would never have taken kindly to the unkind.

175 Nor were the first Evangelicals invariably severe. Of 178 the Rev. Mr. Macrae, long in Lewis, it is told that, when 771 young he had rebuked an older fellow-minister for levity at a ministers' supper on Communion Monday. Leaping 795 up, the minister seized Macrae by the shoulders and danced behind him, till Macrae was forced to join in the laugh!
181 Macrae never forgot the sane and kindly words spoken to him after: and he saw he had been wrong to identify cheerfulness with irreligion. Yet much joy was extinguished or found illicit vent. To such ruthless zeal, there came inevitably reaction, noted even by 1877, and still more notable during the war of 1914–18 and after. Conflict or compromise was inevitable where Churchmen emphasised terror and inveighed against the calm heritage of their forebears and the happiness for which human nature
178 asks. The days of emotional 'Revival' are by no means 771 over and from them the pendulum may swing from excess back to relieved but wearied unconcern. Moreover, with the emigration of so many of the men, the balance of family life was upset. Some thoughtful men and women feel that the 'Revival' which swept their Island (with the rest of the Presbyterian Hebrides) before 1939 and during the war was partly due to the excessive influence of spinsters, to whom strict Presbyterianism offered little outlet for motherly emotion or sisterly service.

(E) SOCIAL CUSTOMS IN CHANGE

178 In spite of 'the wrath to come', life had to go on, work be done, and natural affection find an outlet in youth.
181 How could the women waulk the cloth without a chorus
183 to keep their beating hands in time? Songs had to be allowed by the sternest for this work in common. In a land where marriage was not an affair of dowries, but chiefly of love choice among the young folk, the old courting customs could not wholly be denied. Curiously enough, drinking was not severely looked upon by Scots rural Evangelists; in one story in the Old Testament, it is not the drunkard, but his mocker whom the Lord punished! In a city, a drunk man is a prey to thieves and harpies; but in a township none will do him harm. But today there are Evangelical ministers who think that drink should be frowned on at weddings and ceilidhs, while song and dance might be tolerated.

175 Not all the people gave in willingly to the severity of the new creed. In Uig there is a cave, the 'Piper's Cave', 771 to which a crofter was wont to resort on dark nights, his
• 795 pipes in his oxter, when the wind blew from the manse and 183 out to sea! Ultimately the least willing were forced to give in, first, by the appalling threat of the refusal of communion, and secondly, by denunciation from the pulpit [178] and the ostracism of the Elders. Much was destroyed that can never be recovered now, and many a fine heart saddened or broken. It was the most intimate expression of their lives, their religious lore, which suffered most.[1]

178 Yet something remains, preserved by the good sense, 181

[1] Carmichael gives an infinitely pathetic account of a conversation in a home in Ness about 1880–85. Carmina, pp. xxvii-xxxii.

(F) A CHANGING CHURCH: 1820–1943

175 Underneath the doctrinal severity of the Presbyterian
• 795 Gael, there has continued some of the cheerful faith in living, the belief in mutual aid, the tolerance and calm, [178] breathed in our native religious lore. The sternest Presbyterianism, which swept the North-west after 1820, still makes the Gaelic North its fortress in Scotland. Yet the maintenance in the Scottish Church of a doctrine of universal love was due, no less, to Gaelic ministers, and seems to have owed its rebirth to Gaelic tradition through these men. The question of continuity is important: for this doctrine, embracing all mankind, not only the predestined few, has profoundly influenced the attitude to life in all Protestant lands, throughout a century crucial to human development.

175 The most notable of the Scots ministers concerned
with the doctrine of the Atonement were John McLeod
795 Campbell and his younger friend, Norman Macleod. Born
793 in Argyllshire in 1800, McLeod Campbell was ordained in 1825, and preached the assurance that God loved, and Christ died, for all men. For this he was charged with heresy by the Church of Scotland, and deposed in 1831, a trial he bore "with saintly charity and patience", refusing to found a new sect. In 1832 he went through the Highlands and Skye, preaching everywhere in Gaelic. A Moderate minister, John Maciver, who attended his services, said to him: "I never understood so much of your views before; now in the strength of God I will enquire more into them". It was very different when he met his own cousin, Roderick McLeod, who eight years later swept the island of Skye into the Free Church and led the Evangelicals in the Hebrides. To his sister

125 Campbell wrote, " My reception by those who are called 795 'professors' ", the lay leaders who 'professed' the Evangelical doctrines, " was trying to the last. Holding 793 that Christ died for all seemed to them so fundamental
an error as to poison all my teaching." Thereafter, 175 Campbell retired, in Glasgow, to read, preach to a few,
793 and write, keeping in touch with Norman Macleod and 814 Erskine in Scotland, and in England with J. F. D. Maurice
(1805–72). After Christ, the Bread of Life, Campbell wrote
The Nature of the Atonement (1856). Readers felt not only that he was one of the most lovable of men, but a profound theologian, a view reinforced today. " Of all books that
have ever been written on the Atonement ", wrote Dr.
Denney, " McLeod Campbell's is probably that which is
most completely inspired by the spirit of the truth with which it deals. Its originality is spiritual as well as intellectual. In speculative power he cannot be compared to Schleiermacher, nor in historical learning to Ritschl; but he walks in the light all the time, and everything he touches lives."

175 Here then was a man who seemed to have been born 793 " in advance of his time ", yet who came of a community of deeply traditional cast. His life's thought was attuned 159 to that of his forebears, and expressed itself most intimately
perhaps in their own tongue. Campbell was born and reared in Lorne, Argyllshire, which had first received Protestantism through Carswell, who, in translating Knox's
" Liturgy " into Gaelic, incorporated the old Gaelic labour
prayer of the fishermen (Chapter VII (a)). The gentler form of Protestantism brought in by Carswell may have allowed
the spirit of Celtic Christianity to survive among the people
of ' Mid-Argyll ' and Lorne, down to Campbell's boyhood.
It may thus have contributed to the making of " a Scottish

178 or after it. After 1914–18, the Rector of the Nicolson
771 Institute, Stornoway, proposed village halls for village 517 education and recreation.[1] The scheme was never fully [346] realised except in one township, Sandwick, near Storno-way, owing to the strength of puritanical opposition. In [345] particular, dancing by young folk was condemned as " dancing upon the graves of their brothers ". This atti-[181] tude is breaking down; social standards, in becoming less [535] repressive, may encourage young people to stay.

178 Broadcasting—a factor of change everywhere—came to the townships as a revolution. Newspapers had already 207 filtered in; but for the first time the Gaelic-speaking [204] home was entered and dominated by an English-speaking voice. It has made itself heard there almost ceaselessly ever since—in broadcast talks, discussions, announcements 178 of news, entertainment, singing and prayers. Only the 201 Sabbath imposes general silence. In the Scottish Home Service great trouble has been taken to meet all tastes at 795 the highest level for each, from ' low-brow ' to ' highbrow ' and from Clydeside to the Isles. To a thoughtful, selective Island listener the new opportunity for imaginative human contacts and for initiation of all kinds is immense.
And the purely Gaelic listener is not forgotten. He welcomes Gaelic song or story; and worship in Gaelic has reached many an elderly person's bedside.

178 Yet few listeners select: much broadcasting is designed 207 for those whose only picture-galleries are advertisement hoardings and whose only drama and music are to be found [525] at " the Pictures ". And through no fault of the B.B.C., the Sports News offers temptations for those in poverty to acquire wealth innocently through luck in a football pool,

[1] W. J. Gibson, " Social Amenities in the Western Isles ", Sociological Rev. (Jan. 1932).

10 hinterland with the outside world, Portree is a center for 621 tourists during the summer. Due to the people's dependence 345 on tourism and also the presence of newcomers, the villagers
795 participate in a number of social activities which are not 181 tolerated elsewhere on the island because of religious asceticism.

Glendale and Kilmuir are crofting communities, each with [346] a population of about 300. All, except the ministers and school teachers, are dependent on the breeding of cattle and sheep and the growing of a limited amount of grain, potatoes [47] and hay for all or a large part of their livelihood. All are bilingual, speaking Gaelic and English. Neither community [178] has a village nucleus, but both have an economic focus. Glendale [34] has a cooperative farm, and Kilmuir has a drained loch which has been divided among the small farmers. The significant [42] differences between them are three. The Glendale people are [184] land owners. In this respect they are rather unique in the [42] Highlands. The Kilmuir residents, like most Highlanders, rent [178] their crofts. The second difference is religious. Glendale
[184] is religiously homogeneous while Kilmuir includes church-goers [57] of three Presbyterian sects. Finally, no formal social activities other than an annual meeting of the share-holders in the farm is allowed in Glendale, but Kilmuir has a club organization for the men who gather for lectures and discussions of economic problems.

mainly because there are enough young people to form a strong 571
age grade of their own. The more liberal outlook of the 184
villagers is, however, tempered by the old men. 554 888

Religion

The attachment to the past embodied in the social and 771
economic aspects of the culture carries over into the religious life of the Sgisthanach. He is a Presbyterian who continues 795 to worship and view the world within a pattern which characterized the Scots of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.
The doctrine and theology are derived from the teachings of Calvin as interpreted by John Knox and refined by the Covenanters of the seventeenth century. To the original ethical code a strong measure of influence from the English Puritan movement has been added. The guiding principles are still fore-ordination and election. The dominant motivating factor is [785]
asceticism.

One of the outstanding features of the island today is 348
the large number of churches for such a limited population. 795
To serve the 8,600 people there are 21 churches with ministers and 13 mission stations. A hundred years ago, when the [178] population was almost triple the present number, there were only seven ministers on Skye. The present abundance is the out- 795 come of a series of religious schisms of the past century.
There are now four Presbyterian sects. Of all the neighbor- [184]
hoods on Skye, only Glendale is religiously homogeneous.

Portree has three Presbyterian churches and, in addition, an occasionally used Episcopal church and small Catholic chapel for newcomers. Kilmuir has two Presbyterian churches, and the population includes affiliates of three denominations. In contrast to the pattern of schism in the United States and, indeed, in most of the Western World, the schisms on Skye have been due to a strong desire to maintain cultural conservatism. Each time a church has tended to become more lenient in official policy, there has been dissension and disruption. This does not, however, mean that the several sects are dissimilar in practice and outlook. In Scotland the local kirk is governed by the congregation in accordance with the democratic principles laid down at the Reformation. The people call their minister and elect the lay officials of the church.

Religion is of supreme importance for an understanding of the configuration of the local culture. In fact, beyond being a highly integrated and systematized pattern in itself, religion has come to provide a focus for the culture. Through the religious pattern the culture achieved a reintegration and found continuity at a time when the people were faced with the prospect of enduring instability, if not total social and cultural disintegration. Although it has the appearance of being an extremely negative institution, in that much of the former secular life has been circumscribed by clerical censure, religion has sanctioned the fundamental values and patterns of

there was famine. To supplement the diet, the men fished for domestic use. There were no specialists. Each man was a subsistence farmer, who bred a few head of cattle to meet his rent and provide dairy products, grew some grain for his family, and fished.

Trade with the Lowlands was established by the chief and his tacksmen. The droving industry, the overland marches of cattle from the Island to the market centers, provided the chief's only source of income, from which he paid the taxes assessed by the Crown and provided the clansmen with meal in bad years. There was also a less well organized trade in minor local produce and imports carried on with the Lowlands.

The Religion of the Clansmen

Very little is known about the religious aspect of the culture during the days of the clan beyond the knowledge that the people passed through several changes in common with the rest of Scotland.[83] During the years of Norse occupation they worshipped under a tribal religion known as the Culdees Church, a secular order with a married priesthood and hereditary abbots. By the time Skye had become a part of Scotland, and the old Culdees Church had been replaced by Roman Catholicism.[84] In both the Highlands and the Lowlands politics and religion became completely intertwined. In the latter half of the kingdom it began as a support for the crown and a force for peaceful and orderly government, but the church became the prey of self-seeking prelates.[85] On Skye hardly anything was known of the abuses of the Roman Church. There was no scope for two ruling powers in the small communities. The priests, faithful to their heritage and loyal to chief and clan, ministered to the clansmen while their contemporaries elsewhere in Europe were guilty of neglect and corruptness. Nevertheless, the Reformation, 1560, gradually influenced the Sgiathanach. There was an important difference between the acceptance of the reformed kirk in the Lowlands and on Skye. In the Lowlands Presbyterianism, in particular its emphasis on individualism, suited the needs and aspirations of the people, and they welcomed reform. In the Highlands the Catholic faith was extinguished by a lack of priests.[86] Although the old faith was regarded as an amalgam of paganism, a cult of the saints, and meaningless formalism, practically all the reformed kirk could do, in the face of strong opposition, was to expel the priests, or make sure that no new priests found entry.

[83] Cf., e.g., Lauchlan M. Watt, "Religion in the Clachan," in Home Life of the Highlanders, pp. 52-60.

[84] Origines Parochiales Scotiae (2 vols.; Edinburgh: W.H. Lizars, 1854), Vol. II, part I, pp. 340, 343-344, 354, 357.

While the Scots were prepared to fight the Stuart king of Scotland and England in 1638 and on several other occasions, culminating in the Glorious Revolution in 1688, for their existing system of proprietorship. At length, land leagues were formed to give body to the peasants' protest. The movement finally reached Scotland in 1880. By 1883 it had become important on Skye. Significantly, the agents responsible for the Skyemen's agitation were Irishmen.[71] The stimulus for accepting the course of action advocated by these agents was provided by another famine which coincided with the loss of wages from employment on the east coast fishing vessels.[72] The crofters took the law into their own hands. The Kilmuir crofters refused to pay their rent. The Glendale crofters forcibly drove the sheep off their old cattle grazings. Glasgow police and the Royal Marines were dispatched to Skye.[73] Out of this unrest came the appointment of a royal commission of investigation, but their work is our subject for the fourth period. A more pressing problem is what effect did these events have on the religious outlook of the crofter and what influence did religion have on the configuration of the culture.

[85] Notestein, op. cit., pp. 103-114.

[86] Peter Anson, The Catholic Church in Modern Scotland (London: Oates and Washbourne, 1937), pp. 35-44.

While the Revival was underway during the first half of the century, the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland was witnessing a renewed battle over the old question of patronage, the right of the proprietor to select the kirk's minister. Finally, in 1843, the Church was broken by schism

[71] Ferguson, op. cit., pp. 41-43, 121-123.

[72] See Collier, op. cit., pp. 51-52; Hance, The Outer Hebrides in Relation to Highland Depopulation, p. 91.

[73] Detailed accounts of the land raids and resistance to the police can be found in Alexander MacKenzie, The Isle of Skye in 1882-1883 (Inverness: A. and J. MacKenzie, 1884, pp. 7-144. See also Cumming, op. cit., pp. 140-147 and William MacKenzie, op. cit., pp. 24-25.

over this and an associated question, the principle of the spiritual independence of the Church from civil authority. Although the Revival might have created or even renewed a belief in the right of a congregation to call their own minister, it is difficult to see how the principle of spiritual non-intrusion, by courts and parliament, could have mattered much to the people. The significance of the Disruption is that it continued the trend toward conservatism established by the Revival and made it an official policy of the Free Church of Scotland. The overwhelming acceptance of the Free Church manifests a strong correlation with the suggested amount of social and cultural disorganization at the close of the second period. It was no accident that the first Free Church congregation should have been in Bracadale, the first parish to be cleared for sheep. It was not by chance that the people of Kilmuir and Glendale, like so many others, turned to this new source of hope. The ministers left the Church in the true tradition of the Covenanters: "in a state of toil and privation, whether within or without the Established Church, and under persecution if need be."[74] The people followed them because of emotional attachments which they had formed with the seceding ministers during the Revival. Only the seceding ministers were successfully restoring group solidarity. Their emotional and dynamic approach was giving the people the means to maintain cultural continuity. The Old Testament, which they were wont to use, was an additional factor. It told about a people not unlike the crofters, and the prophesies were being fulfilled before the peoples' very eyes. Is it any wonder that thousands gathered on the hillsides to listen to a minister whose dynamic appeals moved them to tears?

[74] Brown, op. cit., p. 1.

As the people turned to the new church and the emotionalism of the large outdoor gatherings, they continued to forsake their old customs and folklore. The songs, except in some cases the waulking songs which provided the tempo for shrinking homespun, and the tales were placed under clerical bann.[75]

The ministers and the "Ken" insisted on the prerequisite of gravity in all aspects of life for salvation.[76] The communion roles were purged. In Bracadale, for example, there had been 258 communicant members. Following the Disruption there were less than ten.[77] The same pattern was repeated elsewhere on the island.[78]

The religious patterns which had evolved were, nevertheless, reinforcing much of the traditional way of life. The "Ken" of Skye had become elders in the Free Church. This status sanctioned their position in the community. Although the age structure of the population had not yet altered

[75] Norman MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 11-12, 14.

[76] Norman MacLeod, op. cit., p. 35; and Daniel Lamont, Strath: In Isle of Skye (Glasgow: A. Sinclair, 1913), pp. 27-30.

[77] Norman MacLean, The Years of Fulfillment (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1953) pp. 112-113.

[78] Norman MacLean, Set Free, pp. 14-15, 18, 203-212. See also his The Former Days (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 40-49, 80.

sufficiently to make age controls an irresistible force, the prestige status of the small number of the "elect," those who had experienced a saving change, and, in particular, the elders gave them complete control over all social and religious activity. In a later chapter I shall have more to say about these facts. The important fact which I want to emphasize now is that the religious patterns provided a framework in which the culture could find continuity and through which the society could achieve a reintegration. The abhorrence of pagan-like customs resulted in a change of content, but there were positive results as well. Above all, there was a change in focus for the culture and society. The decadent belief in clan brotherhood was replaced by a sense of belonging to a known religious brotherhood.

Summary. The third period of the modern phase of Skye's culture history saw the culmination of the process of commercialization of the land. All the influences necessary for the conversion of the subsistence economy, albeit a much deteriorated economy, had begun to function. Sheep farming, on a commercial scale, formed the basis for the new economy. Newcomers with the incentive and ability to introduce improved methods of land utilization were replacing the conservative and impoverished crofters and cottars. As the commercial farmers consolidated their holdings, the communal townships were being obliterated. The concept of individual possession of the land was replacing the customary rights of the small tenants, and a clearly defined social hierarchy, based on

wealth, rose above the indigent crofters and cottars.

These changes had a pronounced effect on the culture and the population. Economic hardship and evictions prompted emigration, forced many men and women to seek seasonal work away from home, and led to a reduction in the marriage rate. Crofting which had already become part-time agriculture now was a spare-time pursuit. The Sgrìobhnach was dependent on money, on the wider economy, for the satisfaction of most of his needs. The croft was providing no more than a few potatoes for the table and some oats for the cattle, the crofter's only export. Still, no landless working force appeared. Portree had grown and there was a woolen mill, but there does not seem to have been any marked movement into the village by the crofters.

While much of what was meaningful to the people was being lost, the religious Revival continued. The conservatism of the "Men" became an official policy of a new church. The emotional approach of the ministers and the "Ken," who were now elders in the church, and the emotionalism of the large outdoor meetings functioned to restore the social disequilibrium. Although the extended family, township, and nuclear family suffered from instability, the people found intelligible roles within the religious sphere of activity. Their religion was reinforcing their way of life. The abhorrence of much of the old culture was accompanied by a strengthening of many traits which reaffirmed the desirable status values. The culture found a new focus in congregational religion and was able to maintain a continuity while the content changed.

In 1951 the population stood at 1,094. There has been a slight shift from the rural areas to the village, but it can hardly be regarded as significant. For one thing, the 1951 figure included an unknown number of workers on the hydro-electric scheme. Then, too, it included children from the Outer Isles who attend school in Portree, not to mention the very large number of newcomers, teachers, government employees, shopkeepers, management personnel in the stores and banks, and tradesmen, to give only a few examples.

The trend toward religious conservatism continued in the fourth period. During the closing years of the preceding period, the Free Church attempted to modify her theology and polity. The old trend toward relaxing the rigor of Presbyterianism, in accordance with the feelings of the other dissenting denominations in Scotland in order to pave the way for union, was renewed by the passing of a Declaratory Act which stated that the Free Church does not teach and does not regard the Confession of Faith as teaching the foreordination of men to death (eternal damnation) irrespective of their sin. Further, that while the Gospel is the ordinary means of salvation, it does not follow that all who die in infancy are lost. The elders, the lay kirk officers, of Skye protested violently.[88] It was popery to make the Church the judge of spiritual affairs. More important, it threatened their prestige status, which had been sanctioned by the interpretation of the religious ethic. In several parishes the elders threatened to withdraw from [88] The Free Presbyterian Church, History of the Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland, 1893-1933 (Glasgow: R. Ashead and Son, 1933), pp. 98-130.

Communion, and when they were backed by a few dissenting ministers, 175X schism gave rise to the Free Presbyterian Church. The first 178X congregation of the new church was a Skye congregation. 771 775 ● 775

In no small way the threatened disorganization of the 175X culture and the suggested social disintegration at the end of 178X
the "Clearances" played a role in the acceptance of the Free 771
Presbyterian Church. This situation, I suggest, created a need 775
to reaffirm the religious sanction of the desirable features of the culture. Since the Church of Scotland minister in Waternish was jailed for inciting the crofters to stand up for their rights,[89] without adding any people to his congregation, the new schism must have been a reaffirmation of the religious focus for the culture.

The acceptance, however, was neither uniform nor immediate. There was, in fact, a religious and social upheaval.[90] In Glendale, a strong Free Church congregation split. Some joined the Church of Scotland, while others remained true to their sect. Although all the churches on the island are similar in outlook and to the uninvolved observer their differences are unimportant, doctrinal differences have remained important to the people. Nevertheless, the common tradition [127] of conservatism, standing in opposition to the increasing impingements of the outside world, has been the paramount factor in reinforcing the values of the people. I repeat, the culture has maintained continuity through religion.

[89] Norman MacLean, Set Free, pp. 52-54.

[90] Ibid., pp. 148-212.

people of the Island must have had a premonition of the calamity 175X that was befalling them when they resisted the coming of 178X Presbyterianism with all their might.[91] For him, the form 771 of religion which splits up communities, divides families, 775
and breaks villages into fragments can scarcely be regarded as Christian. Over the years, however, the battle has been won by one church or the other, as in Glendale where the Free Presbyterian Church is the only kirk, or the battle scars have been forgotten.

Unions of the churches replaced the former tendency toward disruption. In 1901 the Free Church joined the United Presbyterian Church, and in 1929 the United Free Church joined the Church of Scotland. On both occasions there were ministers who refused to become a part of either united church, and people who were reluctant to join new congregations. In Kilmuir, for example, the Free Church congregation split. Some joined the Church of Scotland, while others remained true to their sect. Although all the churches on the island are similar in outlook and to the uninvolved observer their differences are unimportant, doctrinal differences have remained important to the people. Nevertheless, the common tradition [127] of conservatism, standing in opposition to the increasing impingements of the outside world, has been the paramount factor in reinforcing the values of the people. I repeat, the culture has maintained continuity through religion.

[91] Ibid., p. 212.

545 to the aristocracy they are among the foremost citizens of 184 the nation, and two of the local gentry are included among the nation's peerage. Although I doubt if any of these land owners can validate a claim to being direct descendants of the clan chiefs or descendants of the cadets of the clans, several of them are related in one way or another to the central darkring of the old clans.

Occupying the highest status positions, the county families manifest many social and cultural expressions which distinguish them from the remainder of the population. The men are always given the distinction of a military title; they are major, colonel, or general. One can has not seen 545 military service, but he is given a rank anyhow. In indirect 184 speech their title often includes their residence or estate, 574 such as Col. Macleod Dalgrave or Mrs. Macleod Dalgrave. Behind their backs, they may be referred to by their first name, prefixed by the title, but never in direct speech.

546 Religiously, many tend to be Episcopal sympathisers, in 184 contrast to the staunchly Protestant crofters. The men all 574 attend the local kirk of the Church of Scotland and serve as elders of the kirk, but their outlook is quite different from that of their conservative tenants. One family is 546 Catholic. As would be expected, all are property owners. 184 This is not a question of socio-economic status as much as 424 one of social differentiation. The loss of large parts of their estates, under the pressure of debt contracted by their ancestors, has not reduced their prestige.

Founded in 1951 as a single sheet of 200 words it has grown 204 to sixteen pages. It has the distinction of being the only news magazine in Great Britain written in longhand. The 203 shopkeepers also pass along the local kon, as it is called. There is a common belief that the telephone operators are another source. I have known people to drive several miles to make a call from a box in another exchange district because they were sure the people of their neighborhood would have the news before they had hung up the receiver, if they made the call locally. The post office is also said to be a transmitter [27] in the bush telegraph; some say the post mistresses steam open [28] their letters. On shopping days in Portree the women carry home more than the week's groceries. Down at the square at night, they gather in small groups to transmit their tantalizing tidbits of news and, perhaps, scandal.

Two status groups are left out of the normal gossip 203 cycle. These are the county people and the ministers. The 554 former may get a bit of kon from time to time, but much of the 775 ● local news passes without reaching them. The ministers' information is generally limited to questions of health, events in the life cycle, or cases of moral or religious backsliding on the part of their congregations. The degree to which the landed gentry participates in the verbal spread of news and rumor depends to a great extent on personal qualifications. There are one or two who have contacts through whom gossip carries across the lines of cleavage in the social hierarchy. Ministers are probably the least well informed of anybody on the happenings of everyday life. Once when asking a minister

a question about a certain man I was told: "I can't help you 203 on that. Whenever I go into a shop or meet them on the street, 554 they change their conversation." Another told me I should ask 775 ● the doctor, "He's the one who really knows their problems."

Summary

The society of the Sràthbhanach reveals additional evidence 182 for cultural continuity. In family structure, both nuclear 576 and extended, the patrilineal emphasis has been preserved. Even though both suffer from chronic instability and the extended family has become rather amorphous, kinship remains an important regulator of interpersonal relationships. It involves obligations and privileges which few take lightly. Within the 182 social units based on territory, the township and neighborhood 541 status continues to be ascribed on the basis of age, sex, 554 and kinship. Women have remained socially inferior to the men. As the father controls his family, the old men of the township and neighborhood exercise a power over their juniors to force conformity to traditional ways. Fundamentally, all of the same age and sex are equals. This status equality underlies the entire social structure. There is no room for a leader. When essential, the newcomer, normally the teacher or minister, and the landed gentry are expected to assume the role of leadership. In the village the emphasis on ascribed status for the Sràthbhanach is also important. The majority of achieved statuses are left to be filled by newcomers. In the community, as a whole, beyond the polarity of the landed gentry and the

CHAPTER VII

THE ISLANDERS' RELIGION

Synopsis

The strength and vitality of religion on the Isle of 771
Skye, and all along the West Coast of Scotland, has been an 182 outstanding characteristic of the culture for well over a century. It is no less distinctive of the culture today than the crofting system and the socio-economic way of life which crofting embodies. Moreover, the religious patterns not only reflect a continuity of culture in themselves, but the religious aspect has provided the means by which the culture, as an integrated whole, has been able to maintain a genuine continuity. Here on the very fringe [795] ● of Western Europe in one of the few remaining outposts of the Gael, Calvinism, as interpreted by John Knox and Andrew Melville, as refined by the Scottish Covenanters, and as modified by the influence of the English Puritans in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, stands as one of the few examples of marginal intensity in Western Civilization.

Until the nineteenth century religion was an indomitable acculturating influence. A new code of ethics, morals, and behavior was superimposed on the old. As the influence of the traditional leaders declined, the scope of the contemporary scene. Assuming that few of my readers know any 129 more about the nature of the religion of the Sràthbhanach than 121

I did when my wife and I first set foot on Skye, I shall begin with a brief description of formal organization and theology.

Formal Organization and Theology

The Isle of Skye now has four independent Presbyterian 795
Churches, the Church of Scotland which is the official state church, the Free Church of Scotland, the Free Presbyterian Church, and the United Free Church. There are, in addition, a few Catholics, including the one family of the county people who worship by themselves and several government employees in Portree who meet together and hold services in a private chapel. There is also a fairly large number of Episcopals, consisting exclusively of county families and newcomers, who periodically receive a visit from a minister in Fort William but who otherwise attend the services held in the Church of Scotland.

The Presbyterian Churches differ from one another 779
in several fundamental details of their constitution, doctrine, 775 creed, and practice. All claim to be in historic continuity with the Church of Scotland which was reformed in 1560, the liberties of which were ratified in 1592 by the Scottish Parliament, and the security of which was recognized in the Treaty of 1707. All, except the United Free Church, hold to the principle of national recognition of religion, deliverance from sin and worldly misery and entrance into a state of salvation were again offered to man. To become partakers of redemption, the Holy Spirit must work faith in man, uniting him to Christ in "Effectual Calling" which convinces him of his sin and misery, enlightens his mind, and renews his will. He who is "effectually called" partakes of justification, adoption, sanctification, and all their benefits. By justification man's sin is pardoned. By adoption man is received into the "elect" and has a right to all the privileges of Christ. By sanctification man is renewed after the image of God.

Man's duty is obedience to the revealed will of God as given in the Ten Commandments. No mere man, however, can keep them perfectly in word, thought, and deed. Every sin deserves the wrath and curse of God which can only be escaped by faith in Christ, repentence, and diligent use of the ordinances, especially the Word, sacraments, and prayer. These are made effective for salvation to the "elect" (and only the "elect"). The reading and, especially, the preaching of the Word is the effectual means of convincing and converting sinners. The sacraments of Baptism and Communion sensibly represent, seal, and apply the signs of Christ and the new covenant.

Baptism is administered to those within the visible church and their infants. The Lord's Supper is to be received only by the worthy, those who find up self-examination that they are worthy in their faith, repentance, love, and new obedience.

All the churches on Skye are organized in identical fashion on the local or parish level of church administration. According to the democratic principles outlined in the Bible and the Books of Discipline (1561 and 1578), the congregation alone decides who will serve as their spiritual leaders. It will be remembered that patronage was one of the causes for the church schism of 1843. The members call their minister and elect the elders, deacons, and in several churches, a precentor. The elders are the very pinnacle of the lay religious hierarchy. They are chosen from the "elect" to act as the guardians of the moral and religious behavior of the congregation and to lead the congregation in worship on certain occasions which we shall meet with later. The deacons are similarly chosen from the "elect" to look after the financial affairs of the kirk. The precentor is a chanter. He gives out the psalms the people sing line by line. No matter what the official position of the church, expressed by the General Assembly, Synod, or Presbytery--the higher religious courts--the local kirk session composed of the minister and his elders retains decisive power.

Erring members of the congregation are called before these guardians of the people's behavior for judgment and discipline. For the protection of the congregation, the Presbytery, composed of the minister and a selected elder from each church, examines and installs newly called ministers and has the power to censure any minister guilty of a spiritual or moral transgression or infringement of his duty to the congregation.

Scotland and normally inte
upon to enfor
primarily del Edinburgh to have seen, at will on the l
the fundament
in the neighb
higher religi
in the patter
Church of Sco
it is like it has gradually Church or the
To the uninvo
compared to t

Becaus
on man, in p or predomina
permeating i

[4]Cf., Rhinehart an Sociology of
p. 423; and

The Synod and, in the case of the Church of 795 794
the Free Church, the General Assembly do not rfere in local administration. They can be called ce the decisions of the Presbytery, but they are iberative assemblies which meet once a year in discuss over-all church policy. Again, as we tempts of these higher bodies to impose their ocal kirks have led to schism. Thus, since al seat of control is vested in the kirk session, orhood, the interpretations reflected in the ous courts do not necessarily find expression ns of religious behavior on Skye. Indeed, the tland on Skye is more like the other sects than
s parent body elsewhere in Scotland, where it moved toward a position similar to the Anglican Presbyterian churches of the United States.
lved observer, the differences are insignificant
he essential similarities of the local churches.

The Role of Religion on Skye

of the hold of the ramifications of religion 121
articular, man as a member of a folk, peasant, ntly rural community, religion tends to have a nfluence on all significant phases of life.[4]

---

e.g., Robert Lowie, Social Organization (New York: d Co., 1948), pp. 191-192; T. Lynn Smith, The Rural Life (New York: Harper & Bros., 1947), Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 282, 284.

121 Functioning in diverse ways, religion reinforces standards of behavior. As a suprasocial and cultural regulator of social life, it sanctions the way of life of a group and its basic social forces.[5] While the great world conscious religions have been influential in redirecting whole civilizations, their success has been largely due to an ability to function in harmony with local cultural conditions. The symbols and values they extend must be meaningful to the people.

121 Failure to protect certain values brought about the rejection
178 of Catholicism and the acceptance of Calvinism in Scotland.[6]
795 Continued sanctification of values no longer meaningful to the Sgiathanach cost the Church of Scotland its hold over 121 the people. The influence of religion, especially once it has ceased to work for change and has become conservative, as all organized religions are wont to do,[7] is expressed in terms of what particular traits it singles out for sanctioning and, conversely, what traits it refuses to sanction or places under taboo. Obviously, this is but a part of the primary function of religion, its role in bolstering group solidarity.[8]

---

[5]Cf., e.g., Kroeber, loc. cit.; and MacIver, Society, p. 120.

[6]Notestein, The Scot in History, pp. 103-114.

[7]Kroeber, Anthropology, p. 405.

[8]Loomis and Beegle, Rural Social Systems, pp. 395-401.

the nearest kin carry the body from the house. The custom 764
is to carry the coffin until the procession is out of sight of the house. This may mean a few hundred yards or several miles. Once the body was carried all the way to the grave. One skeptic said this is why Skye has lost so many people, "Half of them died carrying the other half to the grave." In Portree the body is carried across the bridge on the far side of the town. All the mourners, except the women who remain at home, and the two nearest kin who walk before and after the coffin, are given an opportunity to carry. They continuously change positions with the carriers, stepping out at the head of the line by sixes and waiting for the coffin. Those who have carried fall in at the rear of the procession. When they [6a2 reach the graveyard, the original carriers, his nearest kin, remove the body from the hearse and lower it into the grave. At the grave the minister delivers a short lecture on the merit [79 of living in the nurture of God. Only the Church of Scotland [79 ministers offer an additional prayer for the family. The other sects believe a prayer at the grave is a prayer for the dead. Following the interment, the bereaved family provides the [273
mourners with a dram of whiskey. Does the minister take a [793
dram? I can only give the reader the answer I received after one funeral. One fellow said, "I guess nobody saw him take his drop, but if he didn't I'd be surprised." On the following day life returns to normal. The equilibrium of interaction has been restored.

pear in the parishes of Bracadale and Snizort. Bracadale
d already seen the beginnings of the final stage in commercialation; Snizort had been sold piecemeal to new landlords.

Evangelical Presbyterianism created a new pattern of cial and religious life on Skye. It gave the culture a new cus to replace the dead clan system. Much of the form of ligious worship and behavior characteristic of the Island day was established during this Revival Movement. The "Men" came the foremost members of the community. An esoteric ligous hierarchy evolved. There were the unfortunate few o were in a state of saving grace and acceptable at Comnion, and the eminent "Men," the aged, venerable spiritual ity.[48]

The Revival, unlike many nativistic movements, neither ld out the promise of cultural regeneration nor offered the eam of prosperity. To the contrary, the attack against the lk culture characteristic of the late seventeenth and early ghteenth centuries was renewed with vigor. While religious thusiasm grew, social life beyond a family level was restricted.
rhaps, the years of destitution and the ever present threat famine had made hospitality a luxury which few could afford.
rhaps, it was no longer possible for the people to provide iskey and food for large numbers at a funeral or a wedding.
e local ministers assert that the changes were due to the tivities of the "Men." It would seem that the "Men" were

---

[48]MacInnes, op. cit., p. 211.

6: Ducey	E-4,5	(1953-1954)	1956	ES10 Highland Skye	Scot ES10

agents for what have been called "rites of intensification."[49] They restored the equilibrium of interaction by creating new behavior patterns. This was probably particularly true during the famine, when the people's relatives and friends were dying and emigrating in large numbers. While the ceilidh, an evening of spinning folk tales, singing, and dancing, was condemned, and the children of parents who would not conform to the dictates of one minister and the "Men" were refused baptism, prayer meetings and other church services were providing emotional outlets.[50]

Like the Welsh,[51] the Skye crofters found the Bible retold much of their own past history and their present difficulties. As the "Men" preached from Scripture and interpreted the meaning, often using allegorical interpretations, of the Word, the people became familiar with a story which was strikingly similar to their own. The present social and economic conditions were but a presage of the coming dissolution. It was all there in the Old Testament, in the books of Judges, Kings, Chronicles, Psalms, and Prophets. The omen was all the more vivid because the transgressors in the Bible lived a life much like the crofters. Both the ancient peoples and the Skyemen had a pastoral economy, a patrilineal family structure,

---

[49]Eliot D. Chapple and Carleton S. Coon, Principles of Anthropology (New York: Henry Holt and Co., 1942), pp. 399-400.

[50]Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticane, Vol. VII, p. 166; and Norman MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 14-15.

[51]Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

commonly referred to as the "Establishment." The main difference is the the Free Church and the Free Presbyterian Church have rejected all Declaratory Acts which have interpreted the meaning of the Westminister Confession of Faith.

The Shorter Catechism, written in 1611, contains the basic religious tenets of all the Scottish churches. Since children are required to have a knowledge of the catechism by the age of eight, if only by rote, and a knowledge of the tenets is indispensible for the baptism of one's children and acceptance as a member of the church, we should be acquainted with them if we are to understand the religion.

Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy him eternally. To achieve this, the directions given in the Old and New Testaments must be accepted as the infallible prescribed means for reproof, enlightenment, correction and instruction in righteousness.

"Foreordination" and "Effectual Calling" are the two guiding principles. God foreordained all that has come to pass. He preserves and governs His creatures, created in His own image, and their actions, but, on condition of perfect obedience, they have been granted freedom of will, by which they have sinned and fallen from their original state of grace. All mankind through the original sin lost communion with God and are under His wrath and curse. They are subjected to all the miseries of life and damnation.

Christ, the Redeemer, revealed the will of God for man's salvation. Everlasting life, a covenant of grace,

331

people of the Free Church are "the Wee Frees." The Free 795 Presbyterians are the "Seceders" or, at least to some of the gentry, the "Split P's." Arguing about religion is [576] considered very bad taste. It is left to the ministers, 793 and they do have their points of difference. One Free 795
Presbyterian minister, for example, told me that no one in 798
the Church of Scotland, including the minister, was worthy
to receive Communion. On many occasions during the year
the ministers of the Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church devote part of their sermon to a criticism of the Church of Scotland, not to mention the avid hostility of all Skyemen toward Catholics.

Adherents of the several sects intermarry with no qualms 582
and without suffering any loss of status. By the time a 795 person gets to be a member, marriage is no longer in his mind. Husband and wife continue to adhere to their respective 593 denominations, those in which they were baptized. The children 795 naturally, are baptized and raised in the church of their [851]
father. Extended families are often divided religiously 596 along sectarian lines. In one family one brother and his 795
wife were Free Presbyterians, another brother and his wife were Free Church, a sister was Church of Scotland. The parents had been Free Church but became Free Presbyterians at the turn of the Century. At least one cousin was United Free Church. This religious schism did not affect their affection for one another. Once a week the sister went to have tea with her Free Church sister-in-law. Periodically brothers and their wives came to visit, and at New Years 596 745 came by with their bottle of wine, whiskey being a man's [273] [562]

k, to toast the New Year.

Excepting Glendale, where church membership and af- 621
ation is synonymous with the neighborhood, the township 795 571 contain affiliates of two or three churches. One small nship contains two Free Church families, two Free
byterian families, and one Church of Scotland family.
In any township, they visit one another and cooperate handling the sheep flocks. Further, the Church of tland family often gets out the truck on the Sabbath drives everyone to Church. This is one of those isolated nships far off the beaten track. Although I certainly e that people who meet together at a church and pray ether get to know each other better because of their igious unity, in this township the families have come know each other better because they go off to their pective churches together. There is a firm, basic belief 795 ng the people that no one should be slighted, even by a 829 798
ister, because he has differing religious sympathies.
e this not so, think of the position in which I would have nd myself. One Free Presbyterian family put it this way, o can tell which church is the right one since they all im to be on top of the pole? Maybe they all are and ryone will get to his final resting place." The "all" later qualified to exclude Catholics. One of the gentry d me an amusing story on this point. One day during the blitz of London he was talking with a crofter's wife, and they 795

got to discussing Hitler. "What a terrible man he is," she 829 798
said, "Why he's worse than...worse than...almost as bad as the Pope." In another township there is a Church of Scotland 795 missionary, a lay preacher. His religious sectarianism does 797
not prevent his interacting with the Free Presbyterians,
who are in the majority. Not infrequently, he visits his neighbors and when they need help on the croft he is prepared to lend a hand. When he pays a call, he establishes the tempo of interaction at mealtime or tea time by saying grace and returning the thanks. This is part of the hospitality 574 of the Sgiathanach. The visitor is always asked to say 782 grace.

What is true of the township on Skye, is also partly 621
true of the neighborhood. Here the members and adherents of 794
the same church do get to know one another better because of a common faith, or their particular interpretation of a faith
common to all. They see each other with greater regularity.
Then, too, since the congregations are small, they feel they belong. At the same time, the patterns of interaction are not exclusive, except in Glendale. The religious cliques are [476] [795] mutual aid groups, doing what they can for the infirm and destitute; they are not opposing factions. Nor does religious homogeniety mean the absence of factions. Glendale has its independents who are set against the disciples of the Department of Agriculture. Anyone who knows Wales may be struck by this 795 difference, for in Wales the people are attached to a particular 171

chapel and its group.[16] On Skye the people can be as much attached to the sect or their minister as the group. The reason for this difference between Skye and Wales may be th recency of the appearance of the several churches on Skye.
As presently constituted, all the churches were formed at the turn of the century or later. The first Free Presbyter congregation was formed in 1896. The present Free Church, often called the Free Church (continuing), dates from 1900.
The Church of Scotland is the result of unions with the Fre
Church in 1900 and the United Church in 1929.

My assertion that attachment is to sect and minister can be substantiated by two events, one in Portree and the other in the neighborhood known as the Braes. In 1900 when the Free Church and the United Presbyterian Church united,
the Free Church minister in Portree led his congregation over to the Church of Scotland in a body.[17] Only three poli men's families, all of them newcomers, refused to follow the minister. For 13 years there was no Free Church congre gation. Our three families attended the Free Presbyterian Church, until the minister at one Sabbath service held forth on the shortcomings of the Free Church. They left and bega holding services in the Court House. In time the congregat grew. A missionary was appointed and later a minister.
More recently, a minister of the Free Presbyterian Church, who was noted for a certain amount of leniency, such as

[16] Rees, Life in a Welsh Countryside, p. 115.

[17] For a similar change in Kilmuir, see Chapter IV.

allowing his flock to attend concerts, had a point of differ- 793
ence with the Synod and was removed. In the Braes which had 795
been as staunchly Free Presbyterian as Glendale, roughly 798
half of the congregation changed their adherence to the Free Church. The remainder have continued true to their own sect under a new minister.

There are numerous Free Presbyterian families far 795
beyond the reach of a minister. All they can hope for is an occasional visit, and there are no missionaries of this sect on the island. Although they attend services at the nearest kirk of the Free Church, doctrinal differences are still important enough in their minds to keep them within the folds of their sect. They were born in it and will die in it. Moreover, despite the lack of a minister in Glendale between 794 1908-1911, 1913-1920, and 1931-1933, the people are as staunch [793]
as ever. At such times one of the elders steps forward to 794
conduct services as he would during the temporary absence 888
of the minister. His ability to fill the role of a spiritual 554 leader fortifies his control and his prestige. This is true in Portree. The elder, even a newcomer, who stands in the pulpit is deeply respected. Identity with, and attachment [796] to the denomination is maintained in the absence of a minister by visiting other churches at the Communion season and by the visits of a minister on the Sabbath and for annual Thanksgiving services following the harvest. So strong is [795]
the sectarianism of the Glendale crofters that the Church of Scotland minister for Duirinish is convinced that "Churchianity

rather than Christianity is the prevailing practice in Glendale." 795
This attachment to a sect is all the more significant in the [796] crofting neighborhoods because there is not one iota of difference in the Gaelic services in any church. The difference is doctrinal.

In the neighborhood the affiliates of the same church 571
have been said to interact with their fellows more regularly 794 than with the remainder of the group. They come together on 795
the Sabbath for a regular service and on Wednesday night 796
for a prayer meeting. On the Sabbath they come as families, [593]
husband, wife and children and they sit together. Normally [562]
the sexes are segregated in public. Indeed, in the home [574] men keep to one side of the fire and women to the other when there are callers. They also leave in family groups. Their interaction is spiritual. There are no gatherings outside the church either before or after the service to gossip, discuss the stock, or even comment on the weather. They will all know who was absent, but they will only greet their fellows with a slight nod. The Wednesday night prayer meeting is different. This is a group situation. Some come by bus and gossip on the way. Others get together before and after the service for a chat. At these prayer meetings [554]
the stature of the "elect" again emerges. They offer the [888] prayers on behalf of the congregation. The prayers, it should [782] be noted, are extempore. No form is followed. The basis for them are passages from Scripture and interpretations of the passages.

There is another aspect to the prayer meetings. They 796
re no longer held in the Church of Scotland in Portree. 795
e ministers of the other sects say this is an indication 774
the low degree of spiritual enlightenment among that 369 ngregation. Further, Wednesday night is picture night in e village. The newcomers taunt the devout with, "off to e pictures?"

It is at these Wednesday night meetings that the people 559
t to know one another. They participate in the worship 571 rough the eminent "Men," who in a society such as Skye 776
ers almost everybody is related on one side of the family 774
the other by some bond of consanguinity or affinity, are 605 e "people" or "friends" of the worshippers. This custom of fering extempore prayers not only augments the prestige of e "elect" but it intensifies the unity of the group and kes them secure in the knowledge that they belong. This eling of unity and the sense of belonging is further engthened in some churches by setting aside a day of tiliation. Services are held during which the congregation 782 a group beseech God for forgiveness for the poor spiritual dition of the world. In their minds the God of this world surely the Prince of Darkness.

But for the interaction of the members of the several 794 ts, the control of the "elect" would not be as strong as 795 is. The elders of one kirk cannot exercise any direct 626 trol over the adherents of another sect. Through what ncy could they express their judicial and authoritarian functions? Certainly not the kirk session. But since they 794

share a common tradition, which is reinforced by interaction 795
and mutual respect, the elders impose more or less common 626 standards. The norms are the by-product of the history of Skye. If there was cleavage, might not the behavior of the people begin to diverge? In Kilmuir there are three sects. 795
Two of them have churches. The Church of Scotland is in the 796
majority. The Free Presbyterians are a definite minority;
I think there is only one family of them. Although several ministers of the Church of Scotland have begun to follow
the example of the national church elsewhere in Scotland and celebrate Christmas, at least on an appropriate Sunday,
there is no Christmas in Kilmuir any more than there is in Glenisle. The custom is said to be "popish." Naturally, if the birth of Christ is not celebrated, his return cannot be commemorated at Easter. All churches, on the other hand, celebrate New Years, which is also the traditional time to exchange gifts among members of the family. It is a time of license. After midnight the people of the townships 796
practice "first footing." Until early in the morning, the 273
people make their rounds exchanging visits and toasting one another and the New Year with whiskey, for the men, and wine, for the women. The people of Kilmuir are noted for their 571
inter-relationships. "You have to watch what you say up 602
there," I was told, "they're all relatives and friends of each other."

The situation in Portree for the Sgiathanach is much the same

is a sin but because of the excessive drinking and immorality 785
which might result from a promiscuous gathering. Organized 795
dances are, in general, not objectionable. Nevertheless, in 535 spite of the attitudes of the people to these secular activities,
the Church of Scotland crofter behaves in much the same way as his neighbor who adheres to another sect. The elders of the 888
other sects have an influence over everyone in the neighborhood. 549
Every man must ask himself, "What will my neighbors say?"

The Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church people 785
condemn any and all social gatherings where songs, stories, 795
or other diversions are admitted. When people visit, they 571
are expected to remain circumspect in behavior. They may 574
discuss their problems and gossip about their neighbors or the wicked newcomers. They may engage in cooperative or individual work. They may eat together in the home. They may not engage 269
in such activities outside the home. Religion on Skye for the majority has centered attention on the home. Let us look at some of the activities which are condemned. There is the Woman's Rural Institute, an organized woman's club dedicated
to stimulating home industries in rural areas and providing educational programs, especially demonstrations and lectures on domestic arts. One meeting, for example, at Uig, not far from Kilmuir, was addressed by a school teacher on the subject of Highland Folklore. He was followed by a knitting contest
and tea. Youth Clubs and Young Farmers Clubs do not exist, except in Kilmuir where the Young Farmers Club is under the Crofters' Club, and, of course, in Portree. Village halls
are dens of iniquity. While we were on Skye one was built at Skeabost. A minister drove by one day and said to the 785

workmen, "Don't you know you're building a house for the Devil?" 795
One of the laborers, a Lowlander, replied, "It's a good thing
we have a place to keep him." The Order of the Eastern Star and the Masons are condemned because, while they are religious,
they are secret orders. Even if the person's religion did not stand in the way of his becoming a Mason, his distrust of mystery probably would. As one young fellow said one night in the bar when being chaffed about the Masons, "I'm not going to join any secret organization until I know what the secret is."

Included among the objectionable activities by these two 785
churches are the traditional Highland Games, held each year 795
at Portree in August, probably about the time of the old Saint's 541 Fair. The day is a school holiday. Aside from New Years, it is the big occasion of the year. People come in from all over the Island. Few of the Skyemen actively take part in the contests of tossing the caber and throwing the stone, or in the piping and dancing competitions, but they look forward to the event. It gives them an opportunity to see their 571
"friends" and join them in the pub for a dram. Although the 743 ministers disapprove, they lack the backing of the "elect," so the games go on each year. I hasten to add that they have lost much of their appeal in recent years, but I am told that this is due to the fact that the clique who runs the Skye
Council of Social Service has, in an effort to attract tourists early in the season, set up Skye Week in May. Included in the Skye Week program are Highland Games. I might also add that the people of Skye, including many of the newcomers, 785 have not been favorably impressed by Skye Week. The consensus 795 is that it is not representative of Skye. For the Sgiathanach 541

the Highland Games are alright, but the concerts, dances and similar festivities only cause ill feelings.

As might be expected social life is more vivid in Portree. 369
Here the members and the adherents of the Church of Scotland 776 partake of a number of recreational activities. In the winter 53
there is badminton twice a week. In the spring and summer 324
there is a little golf and tennis. The limitations are not religious; they are climatic. Then, too, there is shinty.
We have already noted the existence of many clubs. There are 535 regular dances. Moving pictures take place twice a week. 546
All of these activities are run by newcomers; the Skyemen have 147
a more or less passive role. The "elect" of the two smaller 795 sects are, to say the least, very much disturbed by these 794 frivolities. What is worse, the children attend the dances 626 and the concerts and the boys play shinty. They can find 853 enough solidarity among those of their own age grade to out- 52
weigh the threats of their elders. Apparently they find enough security to be unaffected by the stern denunciations of the minister from the pulpit. When they marry, however, they 794 have to recast the pattern of their behavior, for now the 795
elders are in a position to exercise control by withholding 626 baptism from their children. Some may turn to the Church of Scotland.

Standing in marked contrast to Portree, in Glenisle the 888 control by the aged is complete. There is not a single activity 783 that 549

that the clan ceased to provide a focus for the culture almost 178 two centuries ago, the reader may ask how can a culture without 182
a focus find continuity, how can a culture without a central 614 theme, something around which to orient itself, achieve integration? Religion provides the answer. Congregational religion 776 has taken the place of the clan.

The acceptance of the new religious focus curtailed 178
many traits and complexes characteristic of the old culture. 182
This is why the older folktales, songs and superstitions, the 771 festive celebrations held at times of birth, baptism, marriage, and death, the traditional social patterns of visiting, and all frivolous activities were abandoned or modified. In a time of acute distress the Sgiathanach turned to religion as a means of consolation. His religion required circumspect behavior. Perhaps, the sheer impossibility of supporting the traditional forms of social interaction had forced a change in cultural content when the religious leaders placed these forms under censure. I have suggested that religion did no more than sanction poverty. This much is certain: religion provided the means for the culture to maintain its continued distinctiveness.
The Scots of the Presbyterian image of the days of Knox, of 795
the times of the Covenanters, and the year of the Glorious Revolution continue to exert their influence on the Sgiathanach.
While the ministers and the venerable old men of the laity stamped out all practices which they considered pagan or Catholic, as well as modifying the social aspect of the culture, the process was not completely negative. The religious expression including almost all with private flocks, the crofters continue 178 to cooperate. The church has been broken by schism, not once 182 but four times. On Skye, however, the schisms have had as 785 their purpose conservatism, not greater leniency as in Hillton.

Moreover, the schisms have been solidifying factors. The progressively more dynamic world denying sects, after a period of communal strife, have given the people an emotional unity.
The crofters have become dependent on the cross-center village 182 and the wider national markets. Many must seek employment beyond the Island. The interests of the Sgiathanach are not outside the neighborhood, except in so far as events from the outside affect them and, especially, to the extent that ties of kinship and religious brotherhood reach beyond the local group. We are hardly talking about the same situation as Homans. As we continue to explore this condition we may also ask has there been a decline in the frequency of interaction in the internal sphere of activity?

The old ceilidh has disappeared under clerical ban, but 182
it has been replaced by "going to have a crack," going to visit 571 and gossip with one's friends and "people." The people may 778 no longer gather to hear the old men tell stories of clan battles.
They now discuss the latest local gossip and the news of the outside world. The Islander has never been given to formal 675 social organizations; they half distrust such orders as the Masons and Eastern Star. Still there are chapters of both in Portree. In the crofting neighborhoods face to face relationships continue to preserve strong interpersonal sentiments. The 243 postman's van and the grocer's trucks have relieved the people maintain their position by intermarriage, by educating their 182 children in England, and by interacting with people of similar 539

status within the community and beyond. 545

The crofters continue to stand at the opposite pole. They seldom achieve status within their neighborhood. Upward mobility is possible only through outward mobility. Leadership fails to find expression among them in the township or the neighborhood. The rare exception is the crofter's son who becomes a [145] minister and returns to lead his people spiritually. Women the [79] crofters must select a leader, from their own number, the status is accorded to an elder of the church. The elder [79] already has high status because of his advanced age and his position in the kirk. As I have said, the continued operation of primitive democracy means a minimum of authority and a maximum of equality.

The intermediate group in the social hierarchy cannot be 182 profitably used in this discussion. They are primarily newcomers 539 people from the Lowlands or England, who have joined with the 545 relatively few Skyemen who have left the croft. Sufficient time 147 has not elapsed for a class oriented structure to emerge. Then, too, they are not a numerous group. Still, status is important in the village. As in the crofting neighborhood, ministers, doctors, and teachers achieve high status through their occupation.
For the remainder of the population of Portree, status depends more on personal qualities and outside activities, especially in the kirk, than on the way one may make his living.

While we are on the topic of status and ranking, let us 121
554

796

796 ORGANIZED CEREMONIAL--systematization of religious ritual; ceremonial calendar (e.g., fixed and movable religious holidays, rest days, and festivals); detailed description of the ceremonies regularly associated with each (e.g., participants, ceremonial attire and paraphernalia, prescribed succession of rites, accompanying music and dancing, symbolism); church and temple services; religious dramas and spectacles; notions of propitious and unlucky days for ceremonies, etc. See also:

Agricultural ceremonies	24	Spectacles	541
Music, dancing, and drama	52	Weddings	580
War ceremonies	72	Installation of chiefs and kings	643
Specific cult practices	78	Shamanistic performances	755
Annual cycle of economic activities	81	Mortuary ceremonies	784
Household ceremonies	342	Calendar	805
Leisure-time activities	417	Rites of passage	88, 581, 890
Secular holidays, rest days, and festivals	527

293 village locations such as hotels and bothans (see Chapter [154] 6). Drinking situations provide an important opportunity for relatively uninhibited expression by males, and will be discussed further in Chapter 6.

509 The role of clown or "character" is well developed
154 in Hebridean townships. In an environment which encourages 154 quietly watchful and somewhat anxious, conformist behavior, the character is rude, raucous and outrageous, a bite of fire in cold waters. He represents a reversal of normal behavior. The villagers shake their heads, agree that he is impossible, but encourage him to continue, urge him on when he flags, and bring up his escapades for discussion during moments of boredom. There are usually several such characters in a village.

154 Reversal of low-profile and other "normal" behavior
154 is also allowed on particular occasions such as New Year's, this time among all villagers. In the days of horses and 520 carts, boys went around the village on New Year's night [385] stealing carts and hiding them on the moor or down by the shore; today they steal gates. Between Christmas and 594 New Year's, groups of boys visit houses in their neighbor-431 hood, collecting tea, sugar, biscuits, or money to be used for a party in one of the houses. Such boys are called • 796 balaich na bannagan, or boys of the bannag. In some 431 Gaelic-speaking areas, bannag refers to a gift that is 184

• 796 given at Christmas; in Lewis, Christmas is identified 431 with Catholicism, and is an insignificant event in 184 comparison with New Year. To give two examples, a New 527 Year's dance is given, but not a Christmas dance; and 796 the mills continue working on Christmas if it occurs 184 on a week day, but close for at least two days at New Year's. In Shawbost, bannag is defined as a party associated with Hogmanay (New Year's eve).

527 In the recent past, until about ten years ago, 292 the boys dressed in women's clothes or wore masks. They 178 took turns wearing a cow's skin as they went from house to house. In each house, the boy wearing the skin was [539] hit by the others as he chanted the rann na bannag (rhyme of the bannag):

Here I come again renewing Christmas.
(Or, in another version: This is the New Year's night.)
I'll take the bread without the butter,
And the butter without the bread,
And the cheese by itself.
Then we won't be empty-handed.
One thing I refuse is a mangy potato.
It gives a heavy feeling.
It's not healthy.
If you don't give me my bit of butter and my lump of cheese,
Everything you possess will be gotten by the crows on St. Patrick's Day.

527 As the balaich na bannagan left the house in which 43 they had received gifts, they blessed it. All food and 170 money was given to the woman who prepared the bannag.
[788]

Today children tend to receive money more often than food, and use some of the money to buy sweets at the post

293 out and celebrate. There's no other way to express 501 myself."
126
154

"Now that Ruaridh has stopped drinking, he's not very interesting to talk to. He's very dull these days. He doesn't say a thing."

293 During the Communions, a sense of excitement and 501 holiday permeates the village. Among the converted 501 members of the Free Church, this feeling is expressed in 794 vigorous participation in long church services and meetings
• 796 in the homes of the converted. In the rest of the village, the unconverted men don their best suits and head for the hotel, or the bothan opens earlier in the week than usual.
All special occasions such as funk days or the arrival of relatives generate excitement, which is most often expressed, among the unconverted men, by drinking.

293 A man may propose to a woman, and the next day "forget"
501 this rash action with impunity. When a man has been [584] drinking, he is more likely than on other occasions to be openly affectionate to a woman, or to express strong feelings of friendship to his fellows. "It's the only time when you're really happy. You can sing, tell your life story. It's the only time when people are really friendly. But it's a false friendship, because when you meet someone the next day, he's not the same person. He's distant, cold. You feel depressed. You want to recreate the situation, so you start drinking again."

794 2. The Township as Religious Network: The religious 621 sphere has two distinguishable social networks, one of which coincides in personnel with the village network.
Most households within the village feel obligated to "make an appearance" during at least one of the two
• 796 Sunday services. Most children are sent to Sunday school, 851 and all are baptised. In baptism, fathers stand with the children, promise to raise them in the church, and to set a good example for them. Baptism must precede Communion, the ceremony by which a person becomes a full member of the church. Baptism signifies membership in the community, the village-qua-congregation. "Somehow you're not really legal until you've been baptised." Some feel that the child's soul may be endangered if he should die without baptism, although this idea is discouraged by the church.
[199] According to the Calvinistic ideas of predestination, the fate of one's soul has already been decided.

796 The pressure to have children baptised enables the 85 village-as-congregation to exert social control over deviant 626 individuals. If a child is conceived out of wedlock, the 848 parents of the child (if they have gotten married) or the unwed mother alone must stand in front of the congregation and be lectured by the minister before the child may be baptised. A woman who has married a man known not to be the father of her child must also stand by herself. A

• 796 miscarriage occurring before marriage also requires
851 standing even when the child to be baptised was conceive 626 by the couple after marriage. A married man who has 848 impregnated a woman who is not his wife must undergo [837] this ordeal before he can have his own children baptise

It is the responsibility of the entire community t ensure that this punishment is carried out. On one occ
the minister forgot to lecture a couple, and afterwards sent them a note that they would not have to stand; bu they insisted, afraid that people would say that they were getting special treatment.

According to one minister, the manse is a kind of [208] "research center" to which all gossip is reported. Sou
[521] ministers use this information in the pulpit, chiding
[794] people and calling attention to wrong-doings in front the congregation. In contrast, a different attitude e [184] in parts of Stornoway, where villagers have approached [759] doctors in the maternity ward for information regardin miscarriages and premarital births only to be told tha
this information is confidential. The ordeal of stand [178] in church does not exist in Stornoway. In 1971 a pers in Shawbost was accidentally exempted from this ordeal and his exemption was seen by some as providing an opportunity to stop what is considered by many to be a archaic custom.

In many homes breakfast is followed by family worship. 593
father begins with a blessing, a prayer on behalf of his 764
ly, and then leads the family in the singing of a few 782 es of psalm. Next he reads from Scripture, apologizing 788 he visitor because his Bible is not an English version, [512] comments on the meaning of the passage. He concludes with ayer. If the morning worship has been omitted, he holds [512] vening service. Some crofters have family worship both ing and night. When the father is away, his wife or his st son conducts the worship. Religious devotion on Skye, [771]
, is more than Sabbath church attendance and attendance
eekly prayer meetings.

The Role of Religion in Township, Neighborhood, and Village

I did not attempt to devise a socio-metric scale to 795
rmine the affiliation of members and adherents of the ral churches in either Glendale, Kilmuir or Portree. The er disunity and conflicts which divided families, both ear and consanguineal, townships, neighborhoods, and the age stemmed from abandonment of traditional religious liation rather than from attachment to an established sect
h happened to differ from the denomination of one's kinsman eighbor. Today sectarian hostility is no longer prevalent
g the people. The Sgiathanach only chaffs his neighbor riendly sally and repartee, about his only slightly different arian views. They refer to each other's sect by nicknames.
Church of Scotland is the "Established Church." The

1: Parman E-4,5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Shawbost

796 into tiny squares. The ministers and the elders partake
794 first. A final hymn is full of rejoicing, and the minister then exhorts the communicants to return to the world and give witness and to live exemplary lives.

The evening service on Sunday is evangelical, intended for non-believers. After this service the communicants conduct a brief prayer meeting to give thanks.

[829] On Monday, the minister again tells the communicants to go out into the world and declare publically their experiences of the preceding day; and to demonstrate in everything they do and say that they are believers. In [178] the past, only a morning service was given, as most people
[484] had a long journey ahead of them to return home; but now that cars are available, a similar evening service is also conducted.

781 5. The Process of Conversion: The process of conversion
794 may be slow or sudden, but conversion is most common at 796 middle age and among women. One informant wryly observed, [561] "Only recently women were allowed to have souls. But [562] from the looks of the Communion table, mostly women are going to heaven." Many of the women taking Communion are [589] dressed from head to foot in black, a color which indicates [622] their widowed status.

781 The first sign that a person is "following" (leanntail)
794 the church is that he begins to attend the weekly prayer

3: Geddes K-4,5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

CHAPTER VII

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE OF THE COMMUNITY

INTRODUCTION

771 As in every form of religion rooted in communal life,
[221] the sacraments and prayers of the Gael were linked
[796] to labour and to the phases of life's cycle. While some of the 'runes' or prayers were essentially personal and others were breathed only in the closest intimacy, many were shared by a group of families: the tried team of the men or women of a joint farm, the people of a [621] neighbourhood and township or wider group. The communities being so small and isolated, their members depended greatly upon themselves and upon one another.
[794] As in worship in common, so in healing of body or spirit and in the invocation of grace upon youth, now one, now another might lead in praise and prayer. So, too, the leader of a little team would lead in the dedication of their work, and, when it was completed, be 'the consecrator' of its fruit.

771 Where no clergy were at hand, neighbours, perforce,
794 practised the saying of one they called their 'foster-brother': that if no more than "two of you agree on earth about anything you pray for, it will be done for you by my Father in heaven. For where two or three have gathered in my name, I am there among them" (Matt.

3: Geddes K-4,5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

771 a night of black mistiness . . . he waded nearly breast-
539 high" through the dangerous South Ford of Benbecula, "conscious only of the roll and the singing of waters and the rhythm of a poem he had taken down a few hours before"—"The Invocation of the Graces", so nearly lost with him! Much that Carmichael learned was given him under a seal of confidence he never broke, although he mourned the loss this meant. The confidence he inspired—which even those who knew him only in their childhood remember for life—was a source of his quiet, unfailing power.

796 The following begins with the runes and rites of labour,
794 throughout the day, week and year, on land and sea and at home. Turning to the day of rest and to congregational [221] worship, one must enquire as to the presence of the clergy, and question closely how far the people had access to the Bible throughout the centuries: were they really cut off from its riches, from its essence, as the Reformers and the Evangelicals of last century asserted with such vehemence? One can then turn to the runes and rites which opened the phases of life, from birth to maturity, marriage and parenthood, leading at last to life's close.

128 But no social inheritance is without its burden. Having
181 told of the foundations of faith, something must be said
771 in the next chapter of the negative or superstitious side of Island belief, of temptations and evils which the people could face, and of others to which they submitted in [121] ignorance. From the evidence of faith and wisdom, or error, one must attempt some evaluation of attainment by single souls and by the community, and of the power and fullness of life in common.

3: Geddes K-4,5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

782 The care of cattle was accompanied by prayer. As an 235 Eriskay housewife said to me, she would never leave her cow tethered without a murmured, "Saint Columba be herding you" (Buachaille a'Chaluim-cille ort). The curing of animal sickness, as of human ailments, was accompanied by prayers. And prayer was used to avert the evil eye, symbol of suspicions born of unreasoning fear which, psychologists tell us, beset the modern but little less than the ancient! The thought or act of prayer which links a man to his fellow-men links him to the dumb beasts. "The man who is merciful to a soul will not be merciless to a brute" (Am fear a bhitheas trocaireach ri anam, cha bhith e mithrocaireach ri bhruid).

796 Throughout Christendom each task of the annual 171 rhythm was marked, at its start and close, by a day of 779 seasonal festival (Lá Feill). These Christian festivals replaced earlier celebrations and continued some of their features, often in play. Yet concerted seasonal activities could not be related to the supreme festival of the Christian Church, Easter, owing to its movable date. This is one reason for the great importance of other, fixed Festivals to [114] rural community life. This point, not always appreciated by latter-day individualism, is made clear by M. M. Banks in describing British Calendar Customs, vol. i, Scotland
195 (1937). Remembering that the Old Style Calendar dates
198 were ten days later than the New Style (when officially adopted in Scotland in 1600), they may be compared with 796 the annual rhythm of climate and labour (Fig. 9). Until 1600, the New Year began in spring on 25th March. After the Reformation and the abolition of Christmas or Noel, Nollaig, New Year's Day on 1st January took its place as the day which, in the Protestant Highlands and Lowlands, still keeps alive some of the old friendly visiting and

195 'first-footing'. In the past the lads came in bands singing 796 carols, and once admitted—refusal of hospitality being out
198 of the question—any misunderstandings and quarrels of the past year had to be forgiven and forgotten. With individual visits this is no longer possible, for though these maintain friendship, they cannot easily and naturally heal a quarrel.

195 From Lewis three fine carols once sung by youths are 796 recorded, of which the fidelity of Carmichael's translation goes far to render both sense and feeling (Nos. 55-57).[1]
533 In Ness I have sought in vain for the old melodies from [127] the descendants of Angus Gunn. Born about 1800, Gunn had lived for many years as a shepherd on the islet of North Rona, unreached by the burning zeal of the Evangelists, so that his traditional piety survived. Could they be found, these melodies would enrich the remnant of authentic Christian lore in Britain, for even the well-known English carols are mostly of modern reconstruction.

The first Christmas Hail opens, "Ho Ri, Hail to the King, Blessed is He. . . . Blessed be the house and all therein. . . . Lasting . . . and healthy round the hearth be ye. . . ." It goes on, "This night is the eve of the great Nativity, the great Noel [Nochd oidhche Nollaige moire . . .]; Born is the Son. . . ." It closes, "Shone the mountains . . . earth, and land, Heard was the wave upon the strand. . . . Blessed be the King . . . to all ages, to all time." A fragment from Tolsta, Lewis, sung by boys on New Year's Eve as they begged for a Noel bannock from house to house, latterly began and ended with playful nonsense, yet it retained its traditional climax: "[On the first day of the New Year] I saw the Threesome [The Trinity] going to the shore. The land shone, the [113]

[1] No. 59 is set to an Eriskay chant in Songs of the Hebrides, vol. i, p. 159.

175 earth shone, The wave shone on the shore; The deer of
• 796 the mountain steep shone. . . ."[1]

533 "The Christ Child's Lullaby" is a lovely carol narrat-175 ing the Christmas tale. Legend tells that it was sung by 796 'Mary-Mother' herself to an unwanted stepchild lost on 533 the moors, where his stepmother found him in the arms
773 of Mary, who sang as she lulled him. The stepmother cherished this song with the lost child, henceforth loved as her own.[2] The poetry of the Gael, like the odes of Greece and the Psalms of the Hebrews, is luminous with the vision of mountains, land and sea, reflecting a light within that of sun or moon, and sonorous with the rhythm of wave, tide and season which are "of all ages and to all time, [181] gach linn gu brath". Its adoration is full of nature and of humanity, yet it soars above mere nature worship or anthropomorphism.

175 While Christmas, more than any, was a festival of 796 leisure, others were closely linked to labour. The festival dates of Candlemas or Lent, of Saint Bride's, Saint Patrick's or Lady Day, marked the stages of spring's coming and the duties they brought. Summer came in at Beltane—held in May, though the word included other dates connected with spring fire; and on St. John's Day

113 [1] Donald Macdonald, M.A., MS. essay for the Royal Scot. Geog. Society.

[2] A short version is published in the Songs of the Hebrides, vol. i. A translator may choose from its 29 stanzas—though all are true to the Gospel and worth translation. Of the simple choral variant of the air (as published) Fr. Allan Macdonald told Miss Amy Murray his grief that it had superseded the melodic variety given to the Lullaby when sung by one singer at a time (Celtic Review, 1905-6). From three variants noted from oral singing one can arrange a melodic sequence. To pass from a major variant (set to stanzas on Jesus's mother, the shepherds and the 'kings') to minor variants (set to the tale of Herod's evil deeds) restores much of the dramatic intensity of this noble carol. Only deep feeling for the Gospels could create and maintain, without written help, so full a version of the words and variety of associated melody. (The complete words, Taladh Chriosta, are in Fr. Allan Macdonald's collection, p. 7.)

175 at midsummer came joyous departure to the shielings.
• 796 Michaelmas at the end of September was a festival of horsemanship, when the ponies, rested and well fed, could race madly along the machar. As long nights brought in the winter, Hallowe'en came on 31st October, and on the morrow the solemnity of All Hallows (Samhain). On 11th November came St. Martin's Day, and in December Christmas once again.

175 When the Islesmen put out to sea, prayers were chanted 787 to Father, Son and Holy Spirit and to the Disciples, "the Fishers of Men". While some of these might be individual (Carmina, Nos. 117-120), others were chanted by the skipper at the helm, as celebrant, the crew giving the [178] responses (No. 121). As self-sustained community life
[779] weakened and customs were endangered, this prayer was encouraged by a few clergy, Catholic and Protestant. At 175 the start of the season's fishing in Eriskay, Fr. Allan
226 Macdonald went out in the boats and chanted a rune taught to him by elders, the men responding.[1] One of the 'Ocean
788 Blessings' or prayers recorded by Carmichael (No. 119) is found in Bishop Carswell's Liturgy in Gaelic, of 1569, and is quoted by Martin as "a form of prayer used by many of the islanders at sea after the sails are set".[2] Most of Carswell's Liturgy was translated from that of John Knox, but not this prayer, of which the earlier and later-recorded version are the same, except for one revealing difference.

[178] [1] In so doing, 'Father Allan' may have been restoring a pious service of an older school of Gaelic priests trained upon the College of Lismore, an island in Loch Linnhe. Lismore was the birthplace of Carmichael, and in the home of his Protestant parents the young priests were hospitably received.

[2] Foirm nan Urnaighthe (ed. M'Lauchlan), 240, and Martin, 1703 (edition of 1934, pp. 186-189). A new text of Carswell is in preparation by the Scottish Gaelic Texts Society.

538 versions to suggest the significant poetic form of the original.

788 "The Clipping Blessing", being addressed to creatures,
236 is simple in thought and form, and its opening may be rendered:

O come back woolly, though now you're shorn,
By May, may each a lamb have borne,
May lovely Bride you endow,
And Mary fair sustain you now!

[825] It goes on to beg protection from wolf and bear, as well [538] as fox, hoodie crow and eagle, and closes with the opening couplet.

236 From start to finish the work must be true. The wool 461 is from the sheep they reared—it is not got by 'thigging', as a landlord takes 'gifts' from poor tenants; the yarn is sound with no odds of thread from worn-out cloth; the web is their very own, not the clergyman's due (Carmina, 786 110, 113, 109). Only so can the goodwife's web be beauti-
788 ful, and blest. "Thrums nor odds of thread, my hand
[539] never kept nor shall keep. Every hue in the bow-of-the-shower has gone through my fingers beneath the cross."
[593] The weaver, with her household cares and her bairns about her, to be clear in mind must be calm in heart as, thread by • [796] thread, she prepares her warp. To start, she chooses Saint Columba's Day.

[539]

Thursday of blessings
For warping and waulking,
Thrice fifty strands
To number . . .

Ward away the evil eye!
Or evil will, or aught awry,
Consecrate, O Lord on High,
My Loom . . .

175 in whose 'image' mankind was made. As for the number
779 ten, it was simply restored by subdividing the Tenth 788 Commandment into two parts! Thus the letter of the Mosaic Law, be it frankly admitted, is modified! There are also extensions of certain Commandments. Yet, recalling Jesus's insistence upon the unspoken thought which prompts man's conduct, one may feel that the blunt Seventh Commandment, "Thou shalt not commit adultery", is strengthened by the form of its paraphrase: "Avoid all thought, or wish, or deed immoral (mi-bheusach, immodest or vicious)". The Sixth becomes, "Commit no murder nor sin of wrath". And the paraphrase of the Fourth, rendered as "Keep the Lord's Day and each festival", completes the Commandment as it was obeyed by Jesus and His friends at the Passover, and by Celts and Romans at Easter. The memories of the people were impregnated with abiding truths from the Old Testament, and still more with the teaching and spirit of the Gospels.

175 All this was incorporated in their lives. As each 771 symbol of nature was truer to Gaelic worshippers because it was not borrowed but experienced, so their interpretation of the story of the Son of Man was the truer because they looked for Him among themselves. Spiritual fears are imaged from bodily perils they knew in the 'Rough-bounds' and at sea; and spiritual ignorance is seen as a peat bog's 'black morass', not as a waterless desert beyond Jordan or the Dead Sea. Comfort is rarely suggested by the biblical 'shade from heat', but rather by the sun's
• [796] mild healing rays'. When Christmastide, Old Style, brought lengthening days and mantled the Bens with snow, the glow upon their summits in earlier dawns told the [796] Islesmen that the Light of the World was born again. In their thought Jesus shared their communal life with His

771 as the days lengthened during Christmastide, old style, 538 it may be called "The Rune of the World's Light".
788

The world, ere came the Son of God,
was black, a bog forlorn:
539 Void of sun, moon or star,
void of body, heart or form.

'Twas Mary Mother lowly kneeled,
and gave the Inmost Being birth;
Darkness and tears were driven afar,
the guiding star rose over earth.

Light on the land, the deep illumed
from sullen pool to ocean stream;
Grief was laid and joy was raised,
with praise and hail and harping free.

Light on the hills, light on the plains,
light o'er grey-green sea and firth;
Light o'er all the world as one,
the hour God's Son came down to earth.

(D) THE CYCLE OF LIFE

• 796 The stages in life's sequence are marked by noble 852 runes, of baptism, initiation in adolescence, betrothal and 88 marriage, childbirth, and of confession and consolation in 584 trials throughout life and, at its close, of farewell. As might be fitting, the benedictions were given by either man or woman: to a child by a parent or elder; to the young and strong by the wise; and by lovers to one another. And in the past, especially in trial, the 'soul-friend' ministered —an anam-chara, a neighbour chosen from lifelong friendships for steadfastness and understanding.

852 At birth a babe was baptized; and in the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit the nurse placed three drops

796 794 829 in behavior is noticed long before the person takes Communion. Some persons may never take Communion, even though they are generally known as "good living."

A person who shows signs of being "good living" (converted) is carefully watched by all villagers, but especially by the clique of the converted whose strict standards he must satisfy before he is able to gain admission.

A communicant who gets drunk or in other ways falls from grace is not allowed to take Communion again until he goes before the kirk session and attests that his ways have been mended.

796 794 [782] Thursday, the first day of the Communions, is " a day of humiliation and prayer." Friday is Latha na Ceist, the day of questions or catechism, sometimes called "fellowship day" or "men's day." A passage is read from the Bible, which different elders must discuss in the light of their experiences of conversion. The day is also called a day of marks and signs. The elders who speak as a part of the day's rites are from congregations outside the village, which is regarded as "a matter of courtesy, and to bring in new ideas." They are called on by the minister and stand to give testimony or "fellowship," sharing their experiences of conversion with the assembly. These attestations are also spoken of as giving "tokens"

796 794 [829] which signify that they are believers and differentiate them from the non-believers. "Some people may think they're ready to take Communion, but listening to these people helps them to see if they really are. Often their daily actions give the lie to their intentions, and they realize this and decide to wait a while longer." The sermon is propitiatory and includes psalms on such subjects as "Blessed are they that see the light."

After this service, the minister announces that the kirk session is prepared to interview new persons who would like to take Communion. From Friday until Saturday night, individuals "give witness" before the session. After an individual has described his experiences of conversion and has been catechized, he leaves the room and his case is discussed. The elders bring up any items of behavior that would cast doubt on his testimony. Questions about his moral behavior might include, "Has he taken a drink lately? Has he been seen in a dance hall? Is his behavior sufficiently circumspect?" The person is then called back and told the decision of the session by the minister. Occasionally someone is rejected.

Saturday is the day of preparation, the day on which those planning to take Communion are called upon to look at themselves carefully, inspect their faith, and prepare themselves to go to the Lord's table. After the morning

796 794 service, believers remain in the church where they receive tokens given to them by the elder of their street. These are pieces of metal on which is printed the name of the church and village, and a verse from Corinthians, "Do this in remembrance of me." Communicants planning to take Communion in other villages take with them tokens which they have received from their own minister, or ask the local minister for one.

The Communion Services begin on Sunday morning at about 11:30. Persons not taking Communion sit in the back of the church or in the balcony. Communicants give their tokens to the elders who stand in the aisles, and are allowed to sit in seats in the front section of the church, which are marked off from the other seats by white tableclothes. The service lasts for three to four hours. Many communicants also spend a half hour to an hour in informal prayer before the ministers arrive to begin the [178] [184] service. In the past, a prayer meeting was also held at 8:00 in the morning, a custom still practiced in some places, such as the island of Scalpay.

Sunday is the only day of Communion on which standardized selections of Biblical verses are spoken and psalms are sung. On other days the ministers are allowed wide variation in the contents of their services. On Sunday, Psalm 22 is followed by the reading of Isaiah 53, and 796 794 and then by Psalm 69, all of which emphasize the suffering of Christ. The sermon which follows may be based on any text; its intent is to strengthen the believers. It is followed by Psalm 118. The minister then announces that the most sacred part of the day's service will follow, the "fencing of the table" (cuir garadh mu'n a Bhord). He reads from Galatians V, in which those of the flesh [829] are separated from those of the spirit. Those who wish to take Communion are exhorted to leave everything behind, including husbands, wives, parents and children who are non-believers, if they wish to partake of the fruits of the spirit. One man is said to have become converted when he saw his wife going to take Communion for the first time.

Psalm 103, a psalm of blessing, is then sung. Until five years ago, communicants sat with the rest of the congregation and rose to "come to the table" (those seats marked off by white tablecloths or sheets) for different "sittings," as the congregation sang the psalms of blessing.

The minister then asks the elders to bring in "the elements" of wine and bread. The wine is carried in silver pitchers (which are refilled from bottles kept in a trunk beside the pulpit by an elder who turns his back to the congregation while doing this task), and poured into silver wine goblets which are passed down the rows of communicants along with plates filled with bread cut

175 ing was lacking, and the minister of the parish remained
791 in the Establishment, the popular movement inclined 793 unanimously towards the cause of the suffering and protesting Church of Scotland, with the exception of a small handful of people in Stornoway."

794 The part of elder folk in religious life continued to be 796 important, but in new ways. Masculine influence now dominated the family and the congregation. The 'Men' in 178 the Highlands were Elders of the Church who often spoke as lay preachers and who rose to speak on 'Question Day'—that is on the Friday of the Communion Services, which extended, and still do, from Thursday, the Fast Day, to Monday, the Thanksgiving Day. The presiding minister, after opening devotions, invited any Elder of the Parish to rise and propose the Question; the Elder having read a text from Scripture, would say he wished to hear the 'marks' of the true Believer, drawn from the text. After the minister had himself "opened out the text", he would name visiting Elders, calling upon them in turn to speak. One by one, each would rise and give his picture of the real Christian in terms of the qualities suggested by the text. "And so the hour sped under the pleasing and helpful variety of a dozen speakers or more. The 'Men' spoke out of rich experience. . . . 'Question Day' was a self-searching season, when every hearer examined his heart by the 'marks' adduced . . . and as this went on there was a sweet glow on the face of the Congregation as the presiding Minister summed up and closed the holy Convocation." [1]

175 The 'Men' had long been a recognised Order in the 178 Highlands, and their foundation is traced to Thomas Hog,
794 the famous minister of Killearn, "born in Tain in the

[1] Rev. N. C. Macfarlane, The 'Men' in the Lewis (1924).

allowing his flock to attend concerts, had a point of differ- 793
ence with the Synod and was removed. In the Braes which had 795
been as staunchly Free Presbyterian as Glendale, roughly 798
half of the congregation changed their adherence to the Free Church. The remainder have continued true to their own sect under a new minister.

There are numerous Free Presbyterian families far 795
beyond the reach of a minister. All they can hope for is an occasional visit, and there are no missionaries of this sect on the island. Although they attend services at the nearest kirk of the Free Church, doctrinal differences are still important enough in their minds to keep them within the folds of their sect. They were born in it and will die in it. Moreover, despite the lack of a minister in Glendale between 794 1908-1911, 1913-1920, and 1931-1933, the people are as staunch 793
as ever. At such times one of the elders steps forward to 794
conduct services as he would during the temporary absence 888
of the minister. His ability to fill the role of a spiritual 554 leader fortifies his control and his prestige. This is true in Portree. The elder, even a newcomer, who stands in the pulpit is deeply respected. Identity with, and attachment 796
to the denomination is maintained in the absence of a minister by visiting other churches at the Communion season and by the visits of a minister on the Sabbath and for annual Thanksgiving services following the harvest. So strong is 795
the sectarianism of the Glendale crofters that the Church of Scotland minister for Duirinish is convinced that "Churchianity

rather than Christianity i This attachment to a sect
crofting neighbourhoods bec
ence in the Gaelic service
doctrinal.

In the neighbourhood have been said to interact then with the remainder of the Sabbath for a regular for a prayer meeting. On husband, wife and children the sexes are segregated i men keep to one side of th there are callers. They interaction is spiritual.
the church either before o discuss the stock, or even will all know who was abse
fellows with a slight nod.
meeting is different. Thi by bus and gossip on the
and after the service for the stature of the "elect"
prayers on behalf of the
be noted, are extempore.
them are passages from Scr
passages.

s the prevailing practice in Glendale." 795 is all the more significant in the [798]
ause there is not one iota of differs in any church. The difference is the affiliates of the same church 571

with their fellows more regularly 794
the group. They come together on 795 service and on Wednesday night 796
the Sabbath they come as families, [593] and they sit together. Normally [562]
n public. Indeed, in the home [574]
e fire and women to the other when lso leave in family groups. Their There are no gatherings outside r after the service to gossip, comment on the weather. They nt, but they will only greet their
The Wednesday night prayer s is a group situation. Some come
ay. Others get together before a chat. At these prayer meetings [554] again emerges. They offer the [888] congregation. The prayers, it should [782]
o form is followed. The basis for ipture and interpretations of the

There is another aspect to the prayer meetings. They 796
are no longer held in the Church of Scotland in Portree. 795
The ministers of the other sects say this is an indication 794
of the low degree of spiritual enlightenment among that 369 congregation. Further, Wednesday night is picture night in the village. The newcomers taunt the devout with, "off to the pictures?"

It is at these Wednesday night meetings that the people 554
get to know one another. They participate in the worship 571
through the eminent "Men," who in a society such as Skye 796
where almost everybody is related on one side of the family 794
or the other by some bond of consanguinity or affinity, are [802]
the "people" or "friends" of the worshippers. This custom of offering extempore prayers not only augments the prestige of the "elect" but it intensifies the unity of the group and makes them secure in the knowledge that they belong. This feeling of unity and the sense of belonging is further strengthened in some churches by setting aside a day of Humiliation. Services are held during which the congregation [782] as a group beseech God for forgiveness for the poor spiritual condition of the world. In their minds the God of this world is surely the Prince of Darkness.

But for the interaction of the members of the several 794
sects, the control of the "elect" would not be as strong as 795
it is. The elders of one kirk cannot exercise any direct 626 control over the adherents of another sect. Through what agency could they express their judicial and authoritarian functions? Certainly not the kirk session. But since they 794

share a common tradition, which is reinforced by interaction 795
and mutual respect, the elders impose more or less common 626 standards. The norms are the by-product of the history of Skye. If there was cleavage, might not the behavior of the people begin to diverge? In Kilmuir there are three sects. 795
Two of them have churches. The Church of Scotland is in the 796 majority. The Free Presbyterians are a definite minority; I think there is only one family of them. Although several ministers of the Church of Scotland have begun to follow the example of the national church elsewhere in Scotland and celebrate Christmas, at least on an appropriate Sunday, there is no Christmas in Kilmuir any more than there is in Glendale. The custom is said to be "popish." Naturally, if the birth of Christ is not celebrated, his rebirth cannot be commemorated at Easter. All churches, on the other hand, celebrate New Years, which is also the traditional time to exchange gifts among members of the family. It is a time of license. After midnight the people of the townships 796 practice "first footing." Until early in the morning, the [273] people make their rounds exchanging visits and toasting one another and the New Year with whiskey, for the men, and wine, for the women. The people of Kilmuir are noted for their 57
inter-relationships. "You have to watch what you say up 60
there," I was told, "they're all relatives and friends of each other."

The situation in Portree for the Sgiathanach is much the

000 return to their own homes at night. There is now less 796 need for the generalized hospitality of the past, which 794 was given to anyone who came to the door looking for food 829 and shelter. Through these visits some families in 571 different villages have, however, established relation-
574 ships which are kept up by exchanging hospitality at times of Communion and also in other ways. A family in [262] Ness may send to a friendly family in Shawbost some guga,
[251] goalings of solan geese which are captured by Nessmen on the island of Rona once a year and are salted to make a delicacy that is in great demand. Through such contacts a family wanting to purchase a cow may receive word of one that is being offered for sale in the village of a Communion contact.

796 Services of Communion last five days. All services except that held on Sunday evening are intended for the communicants or full members of the church, also called [535] "the believers" and "good livers." During this time, no
[485] dances are held in Shawbost, and in Carloway the hotel is closed.

796 On Communion Sunday, the upper balcony of the church
794 is filled with villagers watching to see if any of the 829 recently converted have decided and have been allowed to take Communion. Because the villagers watch very closely the behavior of everyone else within the village, any change

called on an awful lot to give prayers in church, and it's hard for some of them to get up and speak." The Reverend Macleod notes in his diary that private meetings were initiated on the island in 1826.

A quarterly meeting (coinne raith) is held in Stornowa to which many of the converted from the villages go. The Communions are held twice a year. "Special services," or "small communions," held soon after the Communions, are intended as evangelical services for young people, that is, services enjoining people to convert. These services, which last from Monday through Friday, were started in Ness after the first world war.

4. The Communions (Orduighean): Communions are given twice a year, during autumn and late winter. They are scheduled for different weeks in different parts of the island, and neighboring congregations close their churches when Communions are being held nearby, so that during the Communion season some persons may attend a number of services at different churches.

In the days when transportation was limited, visitors coming from a distance away stayed for an entire weekend. All households prepared food and made ready for any overnight visitors who might arrive without prior warning. Guests often slept on mattresses laid on the floor. After facilities of transportation improved, it became common for people to drive down for the day in private cars and return to their own homes at night.

me as in the crofting areas. When a young girl presented 794 rself for instruction in the significance and meaning of 796
urch membership, preparatory to her acceptance of Communion, 367
e refused to take the final step not because of any personal 626 ligious problem, but rather because such a step would upset
r normal associations. What her Free Church and Free esbyterian friends would say was her main concern. Who was r to become an "elect" member? Here, then, is the answer how the elders of the other sects are able to control havior of the larger group, through the fear of gossip as egative social sanction and, perhaps, rejection.

The semi-annual Communion celebrations are rites of 794
tensification par excellence. Although some churches 796 lebrate only one commemoration of the sacrament, and it y be as early as February or as late as November, the nths from late April until early September, are commonly ferred to as the "Communion Season." The activities of e people during this period cast additional light on the fluence of religion in ordering social relationships. While [573] que membership based on sectarian affiliation is a secondary [571] ctor in determining the patterns of interaction in the extended mily in the local group, it is very important in determining e's wider relationships, the relationships between the ighborhoods and between the Braighnnach and the mainland ghlander.

Within living memory thousands used to come to the 178
mmunion celebrations from all parts of Skye and many nearby 794 796 duty of a wife was to weave her winding sheet. Nor is the cost 764 of burial merely buying a coffin. As at birth and marriage, 454 the people who attend a funeral must have their dram. Just as [829]

they do not want subsidies to begin life, they do not want to be buried with public assistance. They hoard their money, even if it is only a few pounds, to assure themselves of a decent burial. Another thing that disturbs the welfare officers is 763 the determination of the old and infirm to remain on their 186
croft in spite of all efforts to move them to a "Twilight Home." Some of these people may have returned to Skye for no other reason than the feeling, "If I could go back to Skye to die it would be fine." I knew many people who had come to America as young adults and "liked it fine." Why did they return? The answer is always the same, "I was getting old, you know, and began to think of home." This, of course, is another expression of the sentimental attachment for the land and its identity with one's people.

Paradoxically, for a people who are so aware of death 763
and look upon it so significantly, the churches, one and all, 794 have refused to consecrate burial. There are no prayers for [782]
the dead. There is no service for the dying or at the grave as the body is lowered into the soil. The ritual which accompanies this final act of living is better described as a rite of intensification rather than as a passage rite, to adopt the terminology of Chapple and Coon.[15]

Once the individual dies, his status is fixed for all 060

[15]Chapple and Coon, Principles of Anthropology, pp. 398-399.

mainland villages and crofting areas. Ministers from 178
neighboring and even distant churches used to come to take 794
part in conducting the services. There was no church to hold 796
so many people, so the Communion was celebrated outside. Then, of course, the population was much larger and the majority belonged to one church, the Free Church.

The Communion Season is still marked by large gatherings 794
of people at each church in turn. The "elect" from the 796 neighboring churches and the ministers from churches near and far exchange visits. The adherents also participate in the celebration of the Lord's Supper. From Thursday until Monday the homes of the people in the vicinity are open to 794
their relatives and friends who have come to partake of the 796
sacrament or who find the highly emotional atmosphere and 574 gregariousness stimulating. Some, especially the "elect" stay for the five days. Others will spend one or more nights.
During the day and in the evening, whenever they are not attending religious services, they visit their "people" and [571]
"friends" to renew ties which in many cases have been allowed to languish since the last Communion. Thus, we find religion [182] sanctioning the time-honored custom of Highland hospitality.
It is interesting to note that many a woman who depends on [485]
the tourist trade for a good share of her income will not accept paying guests at this time. The local people have a further 794 share in extending hospitality to their visitors. All who 796
are able send food to the manse (parsonage) to lessen the 574
burden on the minister who extends hospitality to the 773
visiting clergy and as many of the laity as he can. This custom is well established. Even war-time restrictions and 794

rationing had little effect on Communion attendance. Skye 796
exiles in the United States and Canada sent food parcels 573
to the ministers and their kinsmen to provide for their 167
visitors. The minister takes in as many as he can. One minister, for example, not very far from Portree has a large manse with seventeen rooms. It is customary for him to have 264
twenty-five or thirty people for lunch and again for high tea (the Skyemen's evening meal) on Friday and the Sabbath.
Many of his guests spend five days with him.

Some idea of the size of the gatherings may be gained 794
from the need for the Free Presbyterian Church in Portree 796
to hold duplicate services. The church, I should think,
holds around 300. During the Communion Season, the congregation takes over the drill hall, normally used by the Territorial Army for training and by the villagers for social affairs, in addition to the kirk. In the drill hall services are held in English; in the kirk, they are in Gaelic.

Such large gatherings of people require a means to establish meaningful contacts and create a feeling of belonging.
Thursday is a fast day. All work stops. The people attend services in the morning, at noon, and again in the evening.
Their minister, assisted by two visiting clergymen conducts
them in a dynamic, highly emotional appraisal of the coming event. All the ministers participate in the sermons, stressing [783]
the confession of sin and the need for humiliation. Many ministers are known for their preaching ability, that is their ability to move their listeners. Friday is a day of self- 794

examination and prayer. A fellowship meeting is held. The 796 senior minister gives the sermon. The local minister follows
the sermon with a few lines of psalm, which the precentor will chant for the congregation to sing, and calls upon one of the "elect" to prepare a question. After the singing has finished, an elder of the host church presents his "question."
The "question" is a line from Scripture which relates to human experience, which relates to their experience as pastoralagriculturalists. The remaining "men," customarily visitors from other kirks, speak to the question, giving "marks" (examples)
which distinguish between those who possess Christian virtues
and those who profess the virtues essential for salvation.
The speakers interpret the meaning of the line, it is only a single verse, often using allegorical interpretations. They are not supposed to tell about their own spiritual experience of conversion. To the contrary, their discussion is intended to have significance for all present. At the end of three or four hours of "speaking to the question," the junior minister sums up what has been said and, infrequently, makes any necessary corrections.

In addition to establishing an emotional atmosphere of [782]
revivalism and the tempo of interaction between the visitors [808]
and the local congregation, the fellowship meeting introduces
the venerable old men of neighboring churches to the local people. Their prestige extends beyond their own neighborhood and congregation. Their ability becomes a topic of conversation

794 thanksgiving service. The visiting ministers, the "elect," 796 and the adherents go their own separate ways. They have spent five days in intense, emotional spiritual communion and they carry away with them definite, vivid remembrances. Many of them will meet again in a few weeks when they will exchange [573] the roles of guests and hosts. The reciprocal nature in all interpersonal activity on Skye is well developed. In many ways, the Communion season parallels the Welsh Song Festivals.[16]

794 We noted earlier in our discussion of the Communion
796 season that there has been a decline in the number who attend 178 the Communions. I should like to add a few general consideration to what I have already said on this point. Aside from the influence of depopulation, there have been several influential factors in operation. The smaller attendance is traceable to some extent to an almost imperceptible movement by the youth away from the more conservative denominations.
The ever-increasing necessity of working for a wage, especially since most employment opportunities are in summer time programs, is another cause. This factor is not, however, important within the local kirk district because most adherents and all the "elect" who work take a vacation in order to attend. It does mean that visitors may only be able to attend on the Sabbath.

178 The custom of visiting has almost disappeared in some 794 churches, including the Church of Scotland in Portree where 796 the fellowship meeting is no longer significant because the 314
574

[16]Rees, op. cit., pp. 129-130.

"elect" are predominantly newcomers and the elders are either 179 members of the landed gentry or newcomers. I was rather 774 amazed one day when a Skyewoman told me, "the 'Free-Frees' 774 and 'Seceders' are no better than the Mohammedans giving 579 gifts to idols," when they sent food to the manse for the 369 minister's guests at the Communion. Over in Breasdale the 748 custom is also losing its importance, except in the Free Presbyterian Church, and the fellowship meeting has been abandoned in the United Free Church because of the reluctance of the members to engage in public displays, either at Communions or at prayer meetings. The custom of visiting has entirely disappeared in Sleat and Strath. One of the ministers ascribed this to the isolation of the two parishes from the rest of the island and from each other. Certainly the Sgiathanach on the south end of the island seldom looks to Portree and the northern crofter hardly ever goes to Sleat, but this does not explain why people from the mainland will go to Breasdale, by-passing Strath.

The vitality of religion can over-ride considerations 771 of family and friendship: if a Sgiathanach deviates from the 626 accepted norm. We may recall the young girl who stole church funds and was ostracized by her "people" and the whole community. Let us consider another example. Marriage vows, as 594 we know, are held to be sacred on Skye. Divorce is all but 771 unknown and separation is uncommon. To be precise there are 626 four known cases of separation. Nevertheless, if a husband or wife were to break a taboo, it is expected that the offender would be cast out. Forgiveness is not compatible with a ascetic ism is fundamental to the peoples' lives. A brief 785

discussion of the Sabbath will serve to conclude my discussion 748
of religion and to indicate some additional difficulties which 628
the Sgiathanach faces in his attempt to preserve his culture.

Sunday does not exist on Skye. There is the "Continental 746 Sunday" and the Sabbath. On any other day of the week, the 576 greeting is, "It's a fine day", or, more often, "It's a wet day." The Sabbath, however, is "no day to be speaking of days." Keeping the Sabbath is almost a fetish among the people. It is a readily observable test of an individual's religious capacity. All unnecessary work, all unnecessary words, and all unnecessary thought is taboo. Only the barest minimum of worldly activities are permissible. This does not mean a day spent in idleness; the time should be spent in public worship at the kirk, private spiritual contemplation and family worship. The Skyeman's estimation of 183 a newcomer may depend on his keeping the Sabbath. One man was very surprised to learn how long a memory the people have when a man deviates from the expected. A visitor asked a crofter what kind of a man a certain newcomer to Kilmuir was, to which the crofter replied, "He's all right, except six years ago he played the pipes on the Sabbath." Most newcomers, including the few Catholics, respect the Sabbath.

No crofter would ever think of doing any work on this 464
day beyond feeding his cattle as an act of mercy. After 238
weeks of rain, the crop of oats or hay may be ready for 746
harvesting on the Sabbath, but he will not touch it. A man 241 may need just one more dry day to finish his harvest. If the 74 next day is the Sabbath, his one dry day may be two or three 241 weeks away and the hay a sodden heap. Nor did the Sgiathanach, or any newcomer with a croft, change during the war despite all the pleas of the government for full agricultural production. This is the one time that the Older Order Amish slogan "And be not conformed to this world" fully applies to the island. Circumspect behavior on this day functions to remind the people of all the negations and all the sanctions which religion has bestowed on the culture. 746

As in the case of Communions, there has been a gradual 178
lessening of the importance of Sabbitarianism, especially 74 since the return of many young men and women from the war. Again, the rather spontaneous relaxation of the rules is 349 most common in Portree. It does not have the encouragement of the ministers of any church nor the elders of any church, 626 except the Church of Scotland. Thirty or forty years ago the ministers and the lay kirk officers had enough influence to stop the running of trains throughout the western Highlands, shipping in the Western Isles, and the Kyle-Kylescku ferry 490 on the Sabbath. Public transportation is still at a stand- 209 still on the first day of the week, but the Sunday papers appear in Portree after the evening services, despite all the efforts of the ministers. They come by car from Inverness, by row boat across the strait, and by car to the village.

Before the war no one in Portree would let their 178
children out of the house, except to go to church with their 857

parents and to Sabbath school, nor would they allow children 178 to play games in the home. Today the children of the Church 74 of Scotland people are allowed to go for a walk, read, or 857 play games. Tourists, frequently, if not always, intolerant 484 of the strict Sabbath, have no doubt contributed to this 178 relaxation of taboos. Although a further development of the 74 tourist industry would be advantageous economically, tourists are a threat not only to the Sabbath but also to the whole religious complex. They set examples which the youth are only too ready to emulate. Before the war every hotel on 485
the Island, including all in Portree, and every boarding 746 house posted notices requesting visitors to refrain from using their cars for touring on the Sabbath. In many of the guest homes the request was the equivalent of a warning of removal. Today the signs are gone. Still not content, the tourist agencies in England and the Lowlands continue to make snide remarks in their literature, suggesting "a little more tolerance is needed in certain quarters." The youth and some 178 adults of Portree now have begun to go off for a drive around 74
the island. One reason why the Sabbath is still strong in 484 Kilmuir and Glendale is that tourists are not accepted in either district.

Strict Sabbath observance distinguishes three broad 74 groups on the Island. Portree is set apart from the crofters 545 by laxity, and the county people are set apart from the 349 crofters by using the day for visiting and having afternoon 571 teas together. The gentry, of course, are not under the control of the "elect" crofters. Tony, are the "elect," 74 and their status is independent of the control of the vener- 545 able old men. 626 584

Summary

Whereas the culture of the Sgiathanach was oriented 771 around the clan system in the remote past and was intelli- 178 gible only by an awareness of the all-pervasive influence of the clan, today congregational religion provides the focus for the culture. If we are to understand the Sgiathanach 421 we must fathom his religion, that is, the interpretation which he has given to Calvinism. Moreover, this highly 182 integrated and systematized aspect of his culture has pro- 771
vided the means for preserving cultural continuity. Economics and social organization aid us in recognizing how cultural continuity has been maintained. Religion puts at our finger tips the how and the why.

The basic status values have held good because religion 771 has sanctioned them. The old men of the neighborhood have 554 been successful in sustaining their statuses and habits 183 through their position in the esoteric religious hierarchy. 626
By holding the father responsible for the spiritual welfare 593 of his family, and judging a man's spiritual enlightenment on his renunciation of mundane pleasures as well as his knowledge of religious tenets, the elders exercise judicial and authoritarian functions. At the same time, the status of the father within the family is strengthened. After a

from the necessity of daily calls at the post office and shop, 182
but the drivers serve the function of passing on the news of the 571
day at each stop. 283

Standing in the place of many of the traditional social 182
outlets which have disappeared or been modified, there are the 774 religious occasions for joining together as a small group. We have found the Sgiathanach to be very religious. Everyone is 748 expected to go to church on the Sabbath, and everyone goes to church. Irregular attendance soon becomes noticed by one's neighbors, the kirk elders, and the minister. Concern over 626 what one's neighbors may think, in itself a strong motivating factor, is reinforced by a forbidding fear of what the venerable old men may do whenever an opportunity presents itself. There are Wednesday night prayer meetings for further social intercourse. Above all, there are the semi-annual Communions which 182 except in Sleat and Strath and one Breasdale sect, bring to- 774 gether the people of the kirk, the members of the same sect from other neighborhoods, and affiliates of the denomination from the mainland. Even the adherent, the individual who has not experienced a saving change because he is not old enough, normally takes his vacation, if he is employed, at the time of the Communions in order to attend.

The decline in interpersonal religious strife does not 182
mean that strong personal sentiments are not present. No one 571
other than the eccentric, is indifferent to his neighbors or 283
others with whom he may have dealings. The crofter and his 648 village cousin may not bother to vote, but they closely watch 466
and freely discuss their representatives. Gossip has retained

797

797 MISSIONS: religious proselyting and evangelism; religious conversions; organized missionary activities (e.g., by sects within the society, by missions from other societies, by foreign missions abroad); mission organizations; mission stations; missionaries or evangelists (e.g., qualifications, selection, prerequisites and disabilities, religious activities), secular activities of missions and missionaries (e.g., education, medicine, technological assistance), etc. See also:

Native mission . . . . . 787 Religious revivalism 788

PREHISTORIC REMAINS

to AD 1000. The base of the missionary work was most probably Iona. The old Celtic Church, with its monastic basis, sent out many who sought the hardship and solitude of life in the islands of the Hebrides as a means of example to the inhabitants. Today, the ancient cell sites, churches, burial-places, are in ruins, no more than a heap of grass-covered stones meriting scarcely a glance. Even on the outlier islands, such as the Shiants in the Minch and the Flannans in the Atlantic, are found these relics of ancient sites where the religious element was strong, overriding enough to be carried to the present day in traditional form.

From time to time archaeological finds are made in various parts of the island. Perhaps the most famous was the discovery of the Uig Chessmen, to be seen today in the Museum of Antiquities in Edinburgh and in the Ivory Room of the British Museum. In the spring of 1831 an exceptionally high tide, with a gale wind, undermined and carried away a considerable portion of a sand-bank at Ardroil, in Uig. A small stone building, like an oven, was exposed at some depth below the surrounding ground level. A crofter who happened to be working nearby saw this and, excited by curiosity, broke into the structure. On seeing what he thought to be an assembly of elves and gnomes, he fled home in great distress. His wife, of a bolder nature, went to see for herself and recovered ninety-two pieces of ivory figures: fourteen draughtsmen, eight kings, eight queens, thirteen bishops, fifteen knights, and twelve footmen or pawns. These chess pieces, carved out of walrus ivory, date from about 1140 to 1160; they are of Norse origin, though probably carved by monastics who knew in detail the dress of the dignitaries which make up the set.

Some details of how the people of the Western Isles lived 3,800 years ago were revealed in an archaeological excavation in Northton in 1966. This site showed evidence of more or less continuous habitation from the late Stone Age onwards; as each succeeding layer of sand was taken away (it was excavated to a depth of some 14 ft), centuries-old stages of habitation were revealed. The higher levels of the site belong to the Iron Age; the earlier levels date back to the late Neolithic/early Bronze Age (about 1800 BC). Such sites as this are extremely rare in Europe, and Northton is the only one of its date in Scotland. Many fragments of the pottery known

RELIGIO

by Captain Dymes. The saint laboured mai
he died in the north of Scotland and was b on the Scottish mainland. Tradition ascribe church to the tenth century by King Olaf o
a more realistic date for its foundation is th
That it occupies, as so many other small chu former cell is quite acceptable. The churc had a 'sanctum sanctorum', so holy in fact ever allowed to enter it.

In Harris, the outstanding religious buil at Rodel, described in Chapter 8. There measured largesse, small ruins of chapels, cell
but only tradition has clothed these tumble of the once-living. A map of the island wil which are well worth a visit if only to spend tion under the island sky beside ancient stone

Other old ruins are to be found on the i (Columba) in Loch Erisort. It is on record came from Iona to convert the islanders religion to Christianity landed on the island
the sixth century. They founded a church w which they dedicated to their master, hen Eaglais, Cladh, agus Eilean Chalum Chille
tions a mill, Muileann-na-manach, but ther on another to indicate its exact site. The old the parish of Lochs for many generations
ago. The people of the island were in medie times profoundly religious; this reverence not carried over into the half-world of supers

Though the tangible remains of religion seen, the recorded history of religious pro developments, is scant. One can only ass Columban Church which first introduced to the Lewis folk. The earlier religion was the new was grafted. The result was an nothing if not strange to those many visito ment on the island scene; for it was neither Yet, again, a strong thread of veneration ra

OUS HISTORY

nly in the Hebrides; 175*
uried at Rosemarkie, 346
s the building of the [173]
f Norway; though a
e fourteenth century.
rches do, the site of a n, so Dymes tells us, [562] that no women were

ding is St Clement's, are, sprinkled like a s, oratories and wells;
d stones with the airs
l show up these sites,
a short time in reflec-
s. sland of Calum Cille
that the monks who [797] from pagan forms of l about the middle of vith its burial ground,
ce the Gaelic names:
. Tradition also men-
e is not one stone left l burial ground served until about a century
val and post-medieval was more often than tition.
n's progress are to be 175*
ogress, its phases and 797 ume that it was the
the new Christianity
the stock on to which amalgam which was ors who came to com-Christian nor heathen.
n through the product

CONTINUED
ON NEXT FICHE

1. Farman

797 573
575

[For information on the curamach (the "cliqu

e of the converted"), see category 794.]

CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING FICHE

which firmly held the folk. The Reformed Church of Scotland did little in the later centuries in Lewis. The Fife Adventurers brought a clergyman with them, a Robert Durie, minister of Anstruther, but it can be taken that his ministrations were for the benefit of the Fifers. The aborigines were left to their own brand of faith, to find grace as and where they could.

The interregnum between the abolition of Romanism and the effective establishment of the Reformed Church in the islands was marked by a decline in the 'Christian-ness' of the people. Former teachings were forgotten, and it is no coincidence that in this interim period social anarchy was rife. The credit for restoring Christian principles to Lewis rests with a Farquhar MacRae, vicar of Gairloch, a young man of about thirty years of age whom Lord Kintail brought to Lewis in 1610. On his arrival he found it necessary to baptise all under forty years of age, and practically to reintroduce the institution of marriage. The first Earl of Seaforth was a religious man; he built St Lennan's church in Stornoway, now non-existent, on North Beach. In 1626 there were two ministers in Lewis (Barvas and Eye), and gradually the influence of religion was restored.

ISLAND REGIMENTS

It is a natural enough step from wielding a sword in the protection of one's home island to bearing arms for King and Country. After the 'natives had been pacified' over a period of a century or so, the national call to arms came north across the Hebrid seas. The warlike character of the clans in the north of Scotland had not escaped the notice of those charged with keeping England and the later Britain busy with overseas interests which required some military backing to maintain and improve. Lewis, in particular, despite its small size, has over the past couple of centuries contributed much of great importance both in regiments and fighting men; its military history is a subject that has escaped many past writers on the island.

There is possibly no British regiment more closely associated with historic deeds of heroism than the Seaforths, the Seaforth Highlanders. At the turn of the eighteenth and nineteenth was made in the Crofters (Scotland) Bill of 1961; this had a mixed reception. In general, today, small crofts predominate in most areas. Out of some 18,000 (the number is decreasing annually) about 15 per cent exceed 20 acres (see Chapter 5). But size has little to do with the type of land; whether arable or rough grazing. In fact, the proportion indicates that some 85 per cent of all crofts in Scotland, and this applies to Harris and Lewis, cannot be considered as full-time now or as potentially full-time.

EDUCATION

In general, the Highlands and Islands of Scotland owe their introduction to letters to the early Christian missionaries. One of the main provisions in the early monastic Church in Ireland and Scotland was for the cultivation of learning and the training of its members in sacred and profane literature. Associated as they were so closely with the common folk on the one hand and the aristocracy on the other, something of this learning and desire for learning rubbed off to advantage on to willing recipients. Literacy however, has had many ups and downs since the dawning of the Christian era in the Hebrides. Though it is impossible to ascertain to what extent the common folk participated in the knowledge imparted by the early Celtic monasteries, there are many references to a class of cleric called 'scolocs', whose learning was accessible to the poorer classes of the emergent Highland society. The 'scoloc' is still retained in Gaelic as 'sgalag', a farm servant, the poor searcher after knowledge who received education in the monasteries in return for services as labourer on the church lands, and who appears in monastic records as late as the fourteenth century.

As late as the sixteenth century, however, after the influence of the Church had diminished, the inhabitants were almost wholly illiterate. When the Fife Adventurers came to Lewis in 1598, they brought a schoolmaster with them; though it can be taken that his services were intended for the improvement of the incomers rather than the islesfolk. Old Roderic MacLeod, doughty chief of the MacLeods of Lewis at the time of the Fifers' arrival, was unable to sign his name. Two of his sons, on the other hand, were

175 visited the chapel of St. Rona. It was fenced, and was 814 swept every day, suggesting daily worship; and the Lord's 771 Prayer, Creed and Ten Commandments were repeated
there every Sunday morning. This led Martin to say that [788] the people had no vices; and indeed the Gael's own prayers insist upon the beauty of virtues rather than on the evil of vices. In Lewis at that time (1695) there were two ministers, at Stornoway and at Barvas; and the Barvas
minister visited Rona yearly. Isolated though they were from their fellow-Lewismen, the Rona folk thus had annual contact with organised religion, such as was lacking even
on the main island during periods of stress in Scotland.
[648] Invasions, repeated destruction and prolonged intrigue by
the Norsemen or the English Kings, led to, and intensified, [798] internal strife. And in Lewis forty years of warring interregnum had followed the 'Reformation'.

175 These and other notes of worship given by Martin,
771 such as those of the Lewismen's devotions when touching
at the Flannan Isles, show that the worshippers relied 798 greatly upon themselves and one another. They did so even after their primitive Christian modes of worship had been blamed and derided by Reformers, and the new modes
in their turn condemned by such ordained priests as secretly
made their way north from Armagh to Uist, Harris and probably to Lewis. How much more stable must their community's faith have been before the tragic upheavals
[797] which began at the Reformation. Some four centuries
earlier, the Roman Church supplanted the institutions
developed by the early Celtic missionaries from regional
and rural growth, by a formal organisation developed upon
an imperial and civic model. Thus they may already have shaken faith by undermining the authority of communal [795] sanctions and traditions. But the break caused by medieval

*175 They were frequently accused of failure to conform to orthodoxy
*178 and of a disinterest in their calling.[19]
773

In time a second trend appeared which was marked by *175 conservatism and an emphasis on doctrinal dogma. Toward the *178 close of the eighteenth century, it became apparent that the 182 population had pressed too hard on the means of subsistence.[20]
161 Commercialization was continuing and sheep flocks were be-[167] ginning to replace men in one parish.[21] The people, many of them destitute, were finding a solution for their plight in migration to the New World, or in seasonal migrations to the Lowlands for work.[22] Those who remained were land hungry.

*175 Gradually, they were losing respect for their ministers and *178 turning to evangelical missionaries who had begun to appear in 182 the Isles.[23] The crucial fact would seem to be that the ministers
773 were upholding values and symbols which no longer contributed [797] to group solidarity. The Island was on the verge of a period [798] of social disintegration and cultural instability. Under the changes that were to follow, the evangelical movement grew into a large scale revival.

---

[19] MacInnes, The Evangelical Movement in the Highlands of Scotland, 1688-1800, pp. 105-115; Roderick MacCowan, The Men of Skye (Glasgow: John MacNeilage, 1902), pp. 30-32; and Buchanan, loc. cit.

[20] OSA, II, 552; III, 247, 248; IV, 132; XVI, 151, 224, 539; XVIII, 184.

[21] James MacDonald, op. cit., pp. 754-755.

[22] OSA, II, 551; and Robert Heron, General View of the Natural Circumstances of the Hebrides (Edinburgh: John Paterson, 1794), p. 32.

[23] MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 15-16, 24-25; and MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 90-91, 98, 99, 151-165.

The process to be observed in the religious facet of the culture during the second period is conservatism. Itinerant missionaries, catechists, and a religious brotherhood known as the "Men" supplemented the regular clergy. As the Revival grew strong, the "Men," as tenacious defenders of the evangelical cause, began to wage an anti-clerical campaign.[44] They usually remained within the Church, opposing any separatist movement, but they drew a sharp distinction between the Church and her ministers. To be a convert of the "Men" meant to dissociate oneself from the death dealing moderate ministers," who were said to have had more interest in their farms than in their congregations.[45] The "Men" conceived their function to be one of delivering powerful testimonies of evangelical truth.[46]
They rebuked and constantly reminded the people of their religious duties. They made Sabbatarianism an observable test of religious obedience, separating the respectable Christians from the godless. Prayer meetings were held at which the "Men" engaged in short, earnest prayers, and exhorted the people to read their Bibles and partake in family worship.

The growing influence of the Revival did not leave the clergy unmoved. At least two arose to recreate the spirit of vital religion and revive emotional enthusiasm in their congregations.[47] It was no accident that these ministers should

*175 *178 786 797 773 182 795 771

---

[44] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 151, 165; MacCowan, op. cit., pp. 53-59.

[45] MacCowan, op. cit., p. 53.

[46] MacInnes, op. cit., pp. 217-215.

[47] Thomas Brown, Annals of the Disruption in 1843 (Edinburgh: Macniven and Wallace, 1884), pp. 7-8.

*175 appear in the parishes of Bracadale and Snizort. Bracadale
*178 had already seen the beginnings of the final stage in commercial-182 ization; Snizort had been sold piecemeal to new landlords.
786
797
773 Evangelical Presbyterianism created a new pattern of 795 social and religious life on Skye. It gave the culture a new 771 focus to replace the dead clan system. Much of the form of religious worship and behavior characteristic of the Island today was established during this Revival Movement. The "Men" became the foremost members of the community. An esoteric religous hierarchy evolved. There were the unfortunate few who were in a state of saving grace and acceptable at Communion, and the eminent "Men," the aged, venerable spiritual laity.[48]

The Revival, unlike many nativistic movements, neither held out the promise of cultural regeneration nor offered the dream of prosperity. To the contrary, the attack against the folk culture characteristic of the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries was renewed with vigor. While religious enthusiasm grew, social life beyond a family level was restricted.
Perhaps, the years of destitution and the ever present threat of famine had made hospitality a luxury which few could afford.
Perhaps, it was no longer possible for the people to provide whiskey and food for large numbers at a funeral or a wedding.
The local ministers assert that the changes were due to the activities of the "Men." It would seem that the "Men" were

---

[48] MacInnes, op. cit., p. 211.

alien to their heritage. There was little local need for roads and steamships, but they were paving the way for the final stage in commercialization, the conversion of the island into sheep farms. 175* 178* 621

The record suggests that the culture was suffering from disorganization and the society had been threatened by disintegration. The Revival, which began at the close of the initial period, became full blown. This movement confirms what the record suggests. A new pattern of social behavior and religious life came into being. The traditional secular patterns of interaction were being replaced by patterns of sacred interaction. New values, new statuses, and new roles were evolving to give religious sanction to the old patterns. The result was an esoteric religious hierarchy. The religious leaders, both the "Men" and the ministers, were coming from the people rather than the old hereditary families who had been closely related to the gentry. Religion replaced the clan as the focus for the culture. The similarity of the story unfolded in the Bible and the past and present conditions of the crofters made the presage of the coming dissolution vivid. By the end of the period, dissension within the Church had become a significant factor and was paving the way for individual secession. The third period of the modern era was to witness more than a social and economic transformation; there was to be religious schism. 175* 178* 182 786 [777] [773] 175* 178* 182 771 786 [798]

blitz of London he was talking with a crofter's wife, and they got to discussing Hitler. "What a terrible man he is," she said, "Why he's worse than...worse than...almost as bad as the Pope." In another township there is a Church of Scotland missionary, a lay preacher. His religious sectarianism does not prevent his interacting with the Free Presbyterians, who are in the majority. Not infrequently, he visits his neighbors and when they need help on the croft he is prepared to lend a hand. When he pays a call, he establishes the tempo of interaction at mealtime or tea time by saying grace and returning the thanks. This is part of the hospitality of the Sgiathanach. The visitor is always asked to say grace. 795 829 778 795 797 594 782

What is true of the township on Skye, is also partly true of the neighborhood. Here the members and adherents of the same church do get to know one another better because of a common faith, or their particular interpretation of a faith common to all. They see each other with greater regularity. Then, too, since the congregations are small, they feel they belong. At the same time, the patterns of interaction are not exclusive, except in Glendale. The religious cliques are mutual aid groups, doing what they can for the infirm and destitute; they are not opposing factions. Nor does religious homogeniety mean the absence of factions. Glendale has its independents who are set against the disciples of the Department of Agriculture. Anyone who knows Wales may be struck by this difference, for in Wales the people are attached to a particular 621 794 [476] [795] 795 171

798

798 RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE--rivalry between sects; religious persecution and intolerance; concept of heretics; suppression of dissenters by established religions (e.g., massacres, inquisitions, discriminatory legislation); martyrdom and martyrs; antireligious proselyting; etc. See also:

Ethnocentrism	186	Civil libertim	641
Stratification	563	Religious skepticism	771
Ingroup antagonisms	678

B. The Bible

771 1. The Free Church: "A man in my great-grandfather's
175 time," said a 65-year-old man, "talked about the great 178 change within his generation, from the days when fanks were held on Sundays to such strict observance on the Sabbath that not even a cow could be tethered."

175 The first evangelical minister on Lewis came to the 793 parish of Uig in 1824. The Rev. Alexander Macleod belonged
795 to the Church of Scotland, but joined the Free Church when it broke away from the Church of Scotland in the "Disruption" of 1843. When he came in 1824, he found "superstition," "spiritual darkness," and "polluted remains of Popery, since it was the religion in this place...the only notion 795 they had of Christianity (Beaton 1925: 7-8)." The southern 829 isles of the Outer Hebrides are still Catholic, but in the 184 Protestant isles of the north, holidays associated with 798 Catholicism are avoided, and stories are still told of the burning of Protestant martyrs by Catholics. Catholics are disliked "because they believe that they can buy their way out of sin," or that the bread and wine of Communion is really the blood and body of Christ. "A Catholic is anointed with oil and left to die without food or water. We are privileged that we are not like them."

175 In the Disruption of 1843, about one-third of the 795 people and 39% of the ministers left the established church

175 visited the chapel of St. Rona. It was fenced, and was 814 swept every day, suggesting daily worship; and the Lord's 771 Prayer, Creed and Ten Commandments were repeated there every Sunday morning. This led Martin to say that [788] the people had no vices; and indeed the Gael's own prayers insist upon the beauty of virtues rather than on the evil of vices. In Lewis at that time (1695) there were two ministers, at Stornoway and at Barvas; and the Barvas minister visited Rona yearly. Isolated though they were from their fellow-Lewismen, the Rona folk thus had annual contact with organised religion, such as was lacking even on the main island during periods of stress in Scotland.
[648] Invasions, repeated destruction and prolonged intrigue by the Norsemen or the English Kings, led to, and intensified, [798] internal strife. And in Lewis forty years of warring interregnum had followed the 'Reformation'.

175 These and other notes of worship given by Martin,
771 such as those of the Lewismen's devotions when touching
798 at the Flannan Isles, show that the worshippers relied greatly upon themselves and one another. They did so even after their primitive Christian modes of worship had been blamed and derided by Reformers, and the new modes in their turn condemned by such ordained priests as secretly made their way north from Armagh to Uist, Harris and probably to Lewis. How much more stable must their community's faith have been before the tragic upheavals [799] which began at the Reformation. Some four centuries earlier, the Roman Church supplanted the institutions developed by the early Celtic missionaries from regional and rural growth, by a formal organisation developed upon an imperial and civic model. Thus they may already have shaken faith by undermining the authority of communal [795] sanctions and traditions. But the break caused by medieval

175 Roman Catholicism was far less complete than that ulti-
771 mately brought about by Protestantism—Episcopalian or
• 798 Calvinist.

795 At least twenty-five churches, chapels and tiny oratories
are named by Martin in Lewis and his list is incomplete
175 (1934, p. 106). Harris and its islets also had their comple-
346 ment of 'temples', in addition to the priory church of [162] Rodel. We may perhaps assume that before the Reformation Lewis had a population of some 4000 persons,
or 1000 families, and contained some thirty chapels or [794] oratories in inhabited areas. If so, then one church or
'temple', on an average served thirty to thirty-five families,
or six or seven farm-groups. Yet only the larger congregations at Eye, Stornoway, Ness or Uig and Rodel would normally be served by clergy; the people of smaller congregations would be without, for weeks and months or even years.

175 When the people were too distant from priests (and 79 later ministers) to hear the Lessons, they handed down
the Word orally. Their power of retaining memorable [153] thought, even in prose, is still remarkable; and verse strengthened memory. For example, 'the Ten Com-
175 mandments' paraphrased in rhyme are recorded in Fr.
788 Allan Macdonald's little collection, "as given by the God
779 of graces to Moses in the wilderness" (Na Faintean,
p. 62). Moses, had he understood Gaelic, would have protested at the omission of the Second Commandment,
but no sculptor of Iona, Rodel or Eye would have felt a need for it, being unafraid that a Christian could bow
down to a golden calf. Believing, with Solomon, that a craftsman's work is his prayer, the artist-monks held that
an 'image' should represent, though never replace, God's creation, and may even quicken our concept of the Creator

CHAPTER VIII

CHANGE IN RELIGION AND SOCIAL CUSTOMS

(A) COMMUNAL CHRISTIANITY, THE ROMAN CHURCH AND THE REFORMATION

175 WHEN the Reformation broke upon Scotland and
• 798 the Church of Rome was driven out, the new 829 Church was slow to replace the priests and [793] conventual clergy by its ministers. More than two hundred years later the minister of Harris wrote, with reason, that in contemplating "the decayed monuments of the piety of our Christian ancestors . . . the pious mind is affected with a mixture of awe and sorrow, while it can hardly admit that the overturning of the ancient church establishment ought to be considered as reformation here". These words were honestly spoken. The minister continued:
"In Harris, where, till within a few years back (from 1790), there has not been since the aera of our reformation from popery, so much as . . . one decent house for public worship; there were of old no less than twelve churches and chapels of which . . . the walls are yet standing, besides others . . . while tradition has preserved their names and dedications".[1] These are those of monastic cella or cill, of parochial or collegiate ecclesia or eagleis,

[1] Old Statistical Account, x, 376. No doubt many churches had lacked a priest for a considerable time before the Reformation; but taking a long view, the minister's conclusion was sound.

175 and of a township's tiny chapel, oratory or teampull.

• 798 In Lewis, as in the Northern Isles, the early years of the [829] Reformation period had been years of invasion by the King's Adventurers, of resistance, bloodshed and ruin.
Hence when Mackenzie brought a Protestant clergyman to minister to the people they flocked to hear him. Naturally the new lord chose one of his important tenants from Kintail, the Rev. Farquhar Macrae. "For forty years prior to the visit (about 1611) no one in Lewis appears to have been baptized or married,"—or rather, no ceremonies had been performed by professional clergy, an important distinction. "'The population', we are told,
'had lapsed into heathenism', but 'Mr. Farquhar's'
mission proved thoroughly successful. 'Large numbers of the people were baptized, some of them being fifty years of age, and many men and women were married who had already lived together for years.' The author also stated that the success of this mission went far to reconcile the inhabitants of Lewis to Lord Kintail's rule. According to a Kintail tradition, 'the number of people that came to be baptized by Mr. Farquhar was so great that, being unable to take them individually, he was obliged to sprinkle the water at random on the crowd with a heather besom'"[1]
—much as it still is on certain festivals in the Roman Church.

[114] The tale of the Rev. Farquhar Macrae shows both the spiritual prestige of one who could read the Scriptures and must understand them, and the people's belief that a lord who brought a Gaelic clergyman must indeed be a Christian and was to be welcomed, or at least accepted.
After the larger churches had been rifled by lairds, 'Pro-

[1] Brand Report, 1902, p. xii; from Alexander Macrae, the History of the Clan Macrae, Dingwall, 1899, p. 57.

175 testant' and perhaps 'Catholic' too, or sacked by the
• 798 King's Adventurers, there seems to have been little effort 114 to build or rebuild the four 'paroche kirkis', one of the terms of the Royal grant or infeftment of the Lews to Kintail (Seaforth). But the evidence in the previous chapter makes one doubt that the maintenance of Celtic Christianity by the people in their thatched 'temples', in their homes and fields, or at sea, was "a lapse into heathenism". The term had been better applied to the acts of certain chiefs, and of the King and his Adventurers.

175 Although imbued with their traditional faith, the people were intensely aware of their isolation from the great 771 world, and humble as to their own oral learning and re-[829] ligious culture. Moreover, since the arrival of Christianity they believed that they belonged to the Church Catholic.
But by the sixteenth century their lords had misappropriated funds, clerical absenteeism was common, and they cannot have been unaware of faults in the Church of Rome.
They were the more eager to welcome any cleric who read the revered Scriptures, whether he came as a Calvinist or Episcopalian from Edinburgh or by perilous journeys from Armagh, Spain or Rome itself.[1] Living far from the worst theological controversies and persecutions inflicted for a century after 1560, the Islesfolk revered a good cleric for his own sake, as they did Macrae and, later, the minister of Barvas (and Martin himself) in lonely North Rona in 1695.

[1] Catholic missions to the Isles in the penal times are described in Compton Mackenzie's The Book of Barra, 1936. Martin (1695) refers to some Harris fishermen recently reconverted by priests, and to the mockery of their 'Protestant' neighbours because in spite of Roman prayers, their fishing had been less successful! Some of the MacKenzie tacksmen and no doubt their tenantry remained Roman Catholics until after the 'Forty-five, notably MacKenzie of Kildun near Stornoway, who gave shelter to Prince Charles in 1746. (W. C. Mackenzie, 1919, pp. 126-130.)

175 The advent of the Reformers to the Island may at first
• 798 have seemed less revolutionary to the people than has 181 generally been suggested by historians of either the new 779 Church or the old. Ministering to one another, the people had not, like the city-dwellers of their time, enjoyed—or suffered—a multiplicity of offices, administered by priests whose ways of living might be a scandal. The Mass heard in Latin was incomprehensible to those of Celtic (or Teutonic) speech without the aid of translation into the vernacular—an aid now universal among literate Roman Catholics. Most of these offices, such as auricular confession to a priest to obtain absolution, with masses for the dead, indulgences and the like, were performed for payments prohibitive to the poor. The Islesfolk, for the most part, lived far both from the orthodox practices of the Latin Church and from the more flagrant abuses against which a minority of the old Church had protested in vain. Hence the transition to early Protestant liturgy would not be too painful. In prolonged isolation, the Gaelic people, perforce, had lived the life of the Lollard and Protestant doctrine of "the Priesthood of all believers".

175 After the Reformation the people were bewildered by 181 the mutual condemnation of Presbyterian, Episcopalian 798 and Jesuit, and torn to the quick when all three parties in turn denounced so much that they themselves held dear.
The more the rival clergy confused and wounded their minds, the harder it was for younger generations to discern ancient Gaelic wisdom and discard superstition; and the easier to fall into credulous and secretive repetition of rhymes and strings of holy names. The scorn of the wealthy for simple rites and of the book-learned for the symbols of old speech would add to confusion rather than aid discrimination. As pious and understanding crofters

175 complained in Carmichael's own time, mockery is hard to 181 withstand. One can only guess, as yet, what were the real
• 798 effects of the decadence of Rome and the impact of the Reformation upon the landward communities of the Lowlands and Northern Isles. But the records of the Western Isles leave no doubt as to the onset of this spiritual tragedy among the Gael, of which Carmichael and others saw the later acts and of which one still finds the epilogue.

175 The grim desperation of the religious and civil wars,
798 and their persecutions—crucifixions made by every side in the name of the Cross—caused faith to be disastrously shaken. Superstition rushed into the widening cracks in older belief, aided by important sects of clergy. In the Highlands, 'witch' torture was never carried to the lengths it reached in the cities, though the last 'witch'-burning in Scotland may have occurred in east Sutherland (P. Hume Brown, History, ii, 1912, p. 451). But the frenzy of witch-hunting by ministers in the Lowlands, during the widespread evictions and social anarchy of the post-Reformation period, suggests that the Adventurers' invasion of the Lews, followed by the arrival of new masters and Presbyterian ministers after 1600, must have aroused morbid, anti-social fears. Lewis certainly suffered from fear of the evil eye as late as the nineteenth, and even this, century.

We have to face the effects on the people of religious strife. To ardent Reformers the Blessed Sacrament of the Roman Church was a 'Jack-in-the-box'; and at the climax of the Mass, the elevation of the Host—the moment of 'transubstantiation' with its literal interpretation of the words, "This is my flesh" (Hoc est corpus meum)—was so much 'hocus-pocus'.[1] Conversely, to Roman Catholics much of Protestantism was a denial of Christianity. Holders of all these forms of Trinitarian belief have united in condemning Unitarianism as heresy, its earlier Arian form having been stamped out in blood. The 'heterodox' are held by the orthodox of many Churches to be awaiting eternal torture. To a thoughtful humanist like Sir James Frazer, on the other hand, the belief that one alone by suffering can atone for the sins of others is of the deepest significance, as being an ancient, widespread and 'pathetic fallacy'. Happily, one finds the greatest tolerance and sympathy where Protestant and Catholic are mixed in the Isles. Elsewhere, too, sympathy and reverent enquiry are taking the place of dogmatic assertion.[1] It is in this spirit that we can best understand Gaelic beliefs at their highest, and so distinguish their lowered use—or misuse for selfish ends—from the highest use of sacrament and prayer by the pure of mind and heart.

[113] [1] J. H. Matthews, The Folklore of the Mass, p. 96, 1903 (Catholic Truth Society).

(B) RELIGION, MAGIC AND SUPERSTITION IN DAILY LIFE

Evil ends might be sought by means of the ancient runes: the power of their poetry and associations could tempt to perverted use. Carmichael tells how in Uist a malefactor, in terror of the law, went to a needy woman, and by appealing to her pity—and in exchange for a small sum—learned from her an "Invocation for Justice". Strengthened by its rhythm and imagery, and by his own associated belief in its magical power as a charm, he stood up boldly in Court, firmly asserted his innocence and got

[1] Cf. the friendly theological arguments between a Bernera Presbyterian and a Roman Catholic from Barra (Bodach Bharraidh—vii, viii), sketched in Gaelic by I. N. Macleoid, Litrichean Alasdair Mhoir, Stornoway, 1932.

ents for what have been called "rites of intensification."[49] 175*
ey restored the equilibrium of interaction by creating new 178* havior patterns. This was probably particularly true during 182
786 797
e famine, when the people's relatives and friends were dying 793 775
d emigrating in large numbers. While the ceilidh, an 771
ening of spinning folk tales, singing, and dancing, was [798]
ndemned, and the children of parents who would not conform
the dictates of one minister and the "Men" were refused ptism, prayer meetings and other church services were oviding emotional outlets.[50]

Like the Welsh,[51] the Skye crofters found the Bible re- 175*
ld much of their own past history and their present diffi- 178* lties. As the "Men" preached from Scripture and interpreted 182 779
e meaning, often using allegorical interpretations, of the 786
rd, the people became familiar with a story which was striking- 797 similar to their own. The present social and economic nditions were but a presage of the coming dissolution. It s all there in the Old Testament, in the books of Judges, gs, Chronicles, Psalms, and Prophets. The omen was all the re vivid because the transgressors in the Bible lived a fe much like the crofters. Both the ancient peoples and the yemen had a pastoral economy, a patrilineal family structure,

---

[49]Eliot D. Chapple and Carleton S. Coon, Principles of thropology (New York: Henry Holt and Co., 1942), pp. 399-400.

[50]Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticane, Vol. VII, p. 166; and rman MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), 14-15.

[51]Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

ruled by elders, and a heritage which had never admitted compact, non-rural population centers. These basic cultural values and patterns were given religious sanction.

Year by year throughout this period the following and the influence of the "Men" increased. As the ministers were moved, especially as the old hereditary families of ministers closely related to the old gentry were replaced by ministers from the people,[52] the "Men" became influential in the Church as elders. Now they could not only exhort the people but also judge them, by determining who was worthy of communion and whose children might be baptized. The strength of their control, however, did not require holding office. In Duirinish where an old moderate minister remained, Communion had not been celebrated for eleven years in 1840, and there were 200 unbaptized children.[53] Many preferred to walk miles to worship under an evangelical minister rather than put themselves in peril by hearing the local moderate minister. Dissension was becoming a significant factor and was paving the way for personal secession from the Church. As the official Church was weakened, the stage was set for the Disruption, but we shall leave that for the following period.

Summary. The second period of the modern epoch saw the continuation of the trends established in the initial period. The process of commercialization was carried one step further. The old runrig system was replaced by the crofting system.

---

[52] Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

[53] NSA, pp. 354-355.

led by elders, and a heritage which had never admitted 175*
178*
mpact, non-rural population centers. These basic cultural 182
lues and patterns were given religious sanction. 779 786
797

Year by year throughout this period the following and e influence of the "Men" increased. As the ministers were 175*
178*
ved, especially as the old hereditary families of ministers 182 osely related to the old gentry were replaced by ministers 786 om the people,[52] the "Men" became influential in the Church 797 elders. Now they could not only exhort the people but 793 798
so judge them, by determining who was worthy of communion
d whose children might be baptized. The strength of their ntrol, however, did not require holding office. In Duirinish ere an old moderate minister remained, Communion had not en celebrated for eleven years in 1840, and there were 200 baptized children.[53] Many preferred to walk miles to worship der an evangelical minister rather than put themselves in ril by hearing the local moderate minister. Dissension was coming a significant factor and was paving the way for rsonal secession from the Church. As the official Church was akened, the stage was set for the Disruption, but we shall ave that for the following period.

mmary. The second period of the modern epoch saw the con- 175*
nuation of the trends established in the initial period. 178*
e process of commercialization was carried one step further. 182
e old runrig system was replaced by the crofting system. 427

---

[52] Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

[53] NSA, pp. 354-355.

802

802 NUMERATION--words for numerals (e.g., cardinal, ordinal); numerical signs and gestures; written numerals (e.g., Roman, Arabic); numerical system (e.g., quinary, decimal, vigesimal); methods of counting (e.g., on digits); aids to numeration (e.g., tallies, counters, abacus); upper limit of numerical reckoning; fractions and decimals; tabulations; etc. See also:

Demographic enumeration . . . . . 18 Wiring 519
Vocabulary . . . . . 181 Accounting 681
Gestures and signs . . . . . 353 Census taking 689

CH. V FAMILY, FARM GROUP AND TOWNSHIP

175 couple advancing one on either side of it—many other 476 tasks were definitely team-work. Such was peat-cutting.
"When they are making peats, five people are employed.
175 One cuts the peat, another places it on the brink of the 476 ditch where it is dug; a third spreads it on the field, a 314 fourth pares and cleans the moss; and a fifth man is resting, [162] ready to relieve the man that cuts. The women are seldom at this work, but the men help one another alternately;
sometimes they must rest satisfied with fewer hands; but the above is the full complement of men required to per-[127] form the work, according to their tastes." Buchanan's [178] description was written 160 years ago (1793); it remained true till recently and generally it is so still. There was thus a normal team practice for work—even a maffo rest was not [538] forgotten! As the Gaelic proverb puts it: "They won't make power (add strength) without a threesome and they'll limp without a foursome!" (Cha deanar treine gun trinir, • [202] 's bidh iad crubach gun chealtrar). In Gaelic, as in Scots, one speaks of a team according to its number, as "a pair,
a threesome, foursome" and so on, up to a tensome (deichean). In Lewis the farm-team was usually a foursome or foresome.

175 Only in exceptional cases was land worked and held 423 singly—as when a smith was kept busy at his anvil in 241 ploughing-time and harvest. Thus in 1715 one or two [320] rural smiths had single holdings of average value or more (£1), and one artificer or tin-smith (caird) a holding of minimum value (5s.); and in the burgh all the small plots [286] were held singly. As the women wove, at home mostly, [412] no male rural weaver held a single plot; his weaving could be done at slack times, so long as there was light; at busy times he worked on the land with the rest of his team.
∞∞ On the mainland, both Lowland and Highland, an

804

804 WEIGHTS AND MEASURES--methods of measurement (e.g., comparison with parts of the body, use of measuring tools, use of weighing and measuring machines); customary and standardized units (e.g., of length, area, volume, weight, heat, angles, electrical energy); complex techniques of measurement (e.g., surveying); governmental supervision of weights and measures; etc. See also:

Environmental dysfunctionality . . . . . 341 Money 638
Weighing and measuring machines . . . . . 466 Cost, products, and geographical margin 654
Measuring tools . . . . . 615 Conception of space 815

out in Lewis, and the Harris Tweed Association was ineffective in enforcing its standards. In 1934, weavers were allowed to use yarn spun in island mills,
and production increased; but no weaving was allowed to be done in the mills. All looms were removed from those mills which had tried to centralize this stage of production. The actual process of weaving remained, by legal definition, decentralized, although the word
"crofter" was changed to "islander," thus widening the category of persons who could weave "Harris Tweed," and paving the way for centralization of weavers in the town of Stornoway.

Any person can purchase his own yarn, weave his own tweeds, and sell them to tailors or summer tourists; but before a weaver can weave for the mills, he must be registered with the Weavers Union. The Weavers Union is a branch of the Transport and General Workers Union, which includes mill employees, hospital workers, lorry drivers, and others. It is an anomaly of the Harris Tweed industry that workers classed as self-employed should join a union of employees and is another indication of the centralization of control and power in the mills, with whom the weavers, along with the mill workers, bargain for higher wages. Weavers receive a basic sum of over £10 for each length of tweed, which is usually 38 weaver's

805

445 yards (a weaver's yard is equal to 8 feet, a measure
445 which derives from the size of the frame once used • [204] to wind hanks of yarn). Payment varies according to the number of colors used in the pattern. A weaver 289 may average 2½ tweeds per week when the work is available, 425 thus earning more than mill workers. A female mill [542] worker earns about £11 or £12, and her male counterpart about £3 more.

289 Because weavers are classed as self-employed, they 295 do not qualify for unemployment benefit. They may apply 657 for social security, but must submit to a "means" test, and the possession of bank savings or other assets disqualifies them from receiving such aid. All British workers must pay a weekly sum for "insurance stamps," a certain number of which makes the workers eligible for small payments from the government during periods of illness. Self-employed persons must pay for their own insurance stamps, whereas employers pay for the stamps of their workers. A weaver who does not keep up with his payments of over one pound a week for insurance stamps must pay the accumulated debt at a later time.

Weavers face other costs. They buy looms and bobbin-401 winding machines, and pay for lighting, heating, and the 238 maintenance of all equipment. The preservation of this 289 anomalous status of "self-employed" is related to the 425
436

805 ORDERING OF TIME--sense of time; conception of a minimal unit of time (e.g., a moment); divisions of the day and night (e.g., hours); divisions of the year (e.g., weeks, months, seasons); longer time spans; solar, lunar, and stellar reckoning of time; methods of dating; calendar and calendrical knowledge; use of aids to measure the passage of time (e.g., sundials, clocks); etc. See also:

Annual cycle of economic activities . . . . . 150 Holidays, holidays, and anniversaries 227
Clocks and watches . . . . . 416 Age levels and age terms 501 Routine activities of a typical day . . . . . 512 Ceremonial calendar 708 Conception of time 815

51 the cattle
233 new their own sheilings; sometimes
215 they came back before milking time and stuck their heads [139] inside. They stood outside the sheiling at night, and that's how you can tell where a sheiling once was, even though the walls have fallen, by the rich green grass.
Calves were born during the summer. A hollow was scooped 233 out in the peat, and lined with turf and moss. People [423] had as many as four or five cows. It was like Switzerland, only we didn't have the bells on the cows. There was lots [672] of milk, fresh thick cream and crowtie (clotted sour [294] milk); the old people knew how to make cheese.

"The moor was very eerie at night, with the sound of 233 the birds. There were only a few hours of darkness
[513] anyway, and I'm sure we didn't get much sleep, but somehow we were always fresh. It was the air, the moor air is more health-giving. The air is different there. Ill people benefited from the change. Sometimes a person with TB would stay out there all summer. The air is heavy by the sea.

• 305 "There was no sense of time the way there is today.
233 If you got lost in the snow or fog, you followed the cows
221 home. You had all summer to take home the peats, to work 813 the croft, to harvest the corn. There wasn't a world, [78] there was only ourselves. That has changed since the war.

814

814 HUMANISTIC STUDIES--historiography; archaeology; biography; linguistic studies; research in literature and the fine arts; degree of interest, activity, and specialization in humanistic studies; etc. See also:

Ideas on history and anthropology . . . . . 27 Ethnomusicology 97
Scholarly language . . . . . 18 Anthropology 301
Fine arts . . . . . 19 Esthetic ideals, appreciation, and taste 517
Collections of the fine arts . . . . . 95 Public lectures 544

175 year in which John Bunyan was born ". Archbishop Sharp
178 " banished him to the dungeons of the Bass Rock for 794 twenty-eight years, and it was during his imprisonment that the meetings of communicants were kept going by a parishioner,—a reformed tinker and a gifted and consecrated lieutenant ". This tradition of the 'Men' renewed itself and spread with each wave of 'Revival'. It sprang up in the Islands more than a century ago, as it had on the north-western mainland during the later eighteenth century, and in 'Easter' Ross two hundred years before.

[798] The spiritual crises of the Reformation and of the Cromwellian and Covenanting age are still profoundly influential; yet they seem hard for those from the Lowlands and England to understand because they occurred so long ago. But in Lewis, Macfarlane writes of the 'Men' whom he knew and admired, in order to keep their memory green. Once more, life in the Isles throws fresh light on the past, revealing its significance.

(D) EVANGELISM AND ERASTIANISM, WRATH AND WOE

175 The Disruption[1] gave a powerful urge to the move-
668 ment for freedom, in many ways. Throughout Scotland
[795] the people were made to feel that both landlordism and the

[1] The issues of Disruption, for the sake of freedom from the choice of a minister by the landlord's patronage and from State control, were reviewed by the Rev. Prof. G. D. Henderson, in Heritage of the Disruption, 1943 (published at the centenary, and nearly half a generation after the Union of 1929). While the Free Church still maintains a strong hold in the Island—and among a small minority elsewhere who feel that even the terms of the Union could not secure full moral freedom—it is claimed by the Church of Scotland that its constitution now goes far to solve " the age-long antinomy of establishment and freedom ", a view widely held abroad, both in Germany and in the smaller lands of North-west Europe occupied by the invader, at the time of the centenary.

agents for what have been called "rites of intensification."[49] They restored the equilibrium of interaction by creating new behavior patterns. This was probably particularly true during the famine, when the people's relatives and friends were dying and emigrating in large numbers. While the ceilidh, an evening of spinning folk tales, singing, and dancing, was condemned, and the children of parents who would not conform to the dictates of one minister and the "Men" were refused baptism, prayer meetings and other church services were providing emotional outlets.[50]

Like the Welsh,[51] the Skye crofters found the Bible retold much of their own past history and their present difficulties. As the "Men" preached from Scripture and interpreted the meaning, often using allegorical interpretations, of the Word, the people became familiar with a story which was strikingly similar to their own. The present social and economic conditions were but a presage of the coming dissolution. It was all there in the Old Testament, in the books of Judges, Kings, Chronicles, Psalms, and Prophets. The omen was all the more vivid because the transgressors in the Bible lived a life much like the crofters. Both the ancient peoples and the Skyemen had a pastoral economy, a patrilineal family structure,

---

[49]Eliot D. Chapple and Carleton S. Coon, Principles of Anthropology (New York: Henry Holt and Co., 1942), pp. 399-400.

[50]Scott, Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticane, Vol. VII, p. 166; and Norman MacLean, Set Free (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1949), pp. 14-15.

[51]Scott, op. cit., Vol. VII, pp. 166-182.

175 visited the chapel of St. Rona. It was fenced, and was 814 swept every day, suggesting daily worship; and the Lord's 771 Prayer, Creed and Ten Commandments were repeated
there every Sunday morning. This led Martin to say that [788] the people had no vices; and indeed the Gael's own prayers insist upon the beauty of virtues rather than on the evil of vices. In Lewis at that time (1695) there were two ministers, at Stornoway and at Barvas; and the Barvas
minister visited Rona yearly. Isolated though they were from their fellow-Lewismen, the Rona folk thus had annual contact with organised religion, such as was lacking even
on the main island during periods of stress in Scotland.
[648] Invasions, repeated destruction and prolonged intrigue by
the Norsemen or the English Kings, led to, and intensified, [798] internal strife. And in Lewis forty years of warring interregnum had followed the 'Reformation'.

175 These and other notes of worship given by Martin,
771 such as those of the Lewismen's devotions when touching
at the Flannan Isles, show that the worshippers relied 798 greatly upon themselves and one another. They did so even after their primitive Christian modes of worship had been blamed and derided by Reformers, and the new modes
in their turn condemned by such ordained priests as secretly
made their way north from Armagh to Uist, Harris and probably to Lewis. How much more stable must their community's faith have been before the tragic upheavals
[797] which began at the Reformation. Some four centuries
earlier, the Roman Church supplanted the institutions
developed by the early Celtic missionaries from regional
and rural growth, by a formal organisation developed upon
an imperial and civic model. Thus they may already have shaken faith by undermining the authority of communal [795] sanctions and traditions. But the break caused by medieval

852 of water on the child's forehead, successively invoking wisdom, peace and purity. Lay baptism, recognised by Greek, Latin, Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches, may be partly of pre-Christian communal origin. It retained special significance in isolated communities. Where a clergyman might come within eight days, a temporary name was given at birth: 'Tonsured of the Lord' (Maol-domhnaich) if a male child, and Gertrude (Griadach) if a female. Her immediate duties over after a safe delivery, the midwife forthwith became the celebrant or (as it were) lay priestess, and her neighbourly helpers, her acolytes.
As the midwife intoned her part they gave the responses.
"By the Book itself," said a reciter in Uist, for many years a skilled midwife, "ear has never heard music more beautiful than the music of the watching women when they are consecrating the seed of man and committing him to the great God of life." Those who care to ponder the thoughts then spoken may believe her word. (Carmina, Nos. 50
and 217-219.)

86 Initiation grew as understanding dawned and the babe passed on in childhood to be an older helper. Gaelic child-lore gives many a stimulus to an infant's intelligent apprehension of life about him, and to poetic appreciation.
These may lead by natural steps to deeper things in adolescence. Homely teaching which led to a first communion, remained an intimate part of life in home and township.

814 From many parts of the Highlands and Isles, Car-
869 michael and his friends gathered variants of verse prayers
538 invoking graces in the young: Invocations of the Graces, 867 Orachan Buadha (Buadh, victory, achievement or grace; Nos. 3 and 278-281). In Tiree, of which the thoughtful minister had sent a fragment of verses to Carmichael,

814 the invocation was addressed to boys and girls, in Uist to 869 youths and maidens. The loveliest version of all had been 538 spoken by an old, evicted woman and learned from her by 869 a lad who, as a poor crofter in old age, passed it down for record, for ever. Of this invocation Carmichael wrote, "Probably it was composed to a maiden on her marriage. The phrase 'eala dhonn', brown swan, would indicate that the girl was young—not yet a white swan", a tender and delicate recognition of youth still to attain perfection.
869 Not a thought jars, each stanza building up the rising move-
538 ment of the whole. In the hundred lines of this poem, metre and assonance are regular except where growing intensity creates new rhythm and design; and the last vowel-rhyme of each stanza leads on to those of the next one, to form an unbroken ascent to the climax.[1]

869 The Invocation begins, "I bathe thy palms. . . . And 539 I place the nine pure choice graces in thy fair fond face.
The grace of form . . . of fortune . . . of goodness . . .
867 of wisdom . . . of charity . . . of choice maidenliness

[114] [1] Certain critics, struck with the variety of the poem but missing its thought-sequence and unity of form, took Carmichael's note of 'many fragments' to imply that the poem was a composite version, piously restored by the editor—in spite of his statement that it was taken down from a single reciter (one Duncan Maclellan). Carmichael's spiritual power of evoking treasures from the reciters was inseparable from his utter honesty. And the publication, forty years later, of four Invocations and of scores of fragments (cf. No. 277) has added (to the internal evidence cited) further proof that the poem was no editorial assemblage. Without doubt, the poem has grown from the inspired meditation of generations of poet-worshippers in a hundred glens and isles. But the English reader should realise what the Gaelic ear may hear: this poem forms an organic unity; though many petalled it is a single flower. Readers familiar with medieval or earlier chants know that the enumeration of attributes is a feature common to all, whether in Church Latin or other tongues, as in the English medieval hymn beginning, "God in my head, and in my understanding". In Gaelic, however, the richness and freedom of the vowel-pattern and rhythms carries the thought onward, wave on wave to its climax. A foremost poet of France, Pierre Emmanuel, to whom I introduced this poem, exclaimed, "This is a Christian Song of Songs!"

178 intuitive and traditional, of the people, and their love for (181) the good and beautiful. Song collectors from outside the Island have found little and assumed that song had been
(114) swept away. Discretion is certainly needed for song col-
(533) lection! Years ago in Bernera I had been told of a pretty love lament I had not heard. Calling with my hosts to 125 invite him to their house that evening, we found the singer, 533 a burly crofter of fifty or so. We had been about to 183 mention the word 'song', when the word was checked on our lips by a swift, warning glance. The singer lived with his old mother and she must not be told that her son went 533 out on such an errand! Nevertheless, Islanders them-178 selves are collecting many unpublished songs, where strangers failed. The Laxdale School choir wins prizes at
(814) many a national gathering or Mod, for their spirited singing of songs, many of them unpublished. Owing in part to their very isolation, these songs have remained as pure in form as in the Catholic Isles, whether in time and rhythm or in scale and mode. Thus the sub-intervals or 'quarter-tones' of the modal scale add subtlety to the melodic line of an air, as in the melodies of Wales or of distant India.[1] These intervals are rarely heard on concert platforms, being unrecognised by many 'Mod medallists'. They are rarely known to professional musicians trained to the mechanical scale of the piano, and who are asked, as adjudicators, to award praise or criticism by alien standards.

181 Courtesy and modesty are noticeable among the young

[1] M. Kennedy-Fraser, Preface, Songs of the Hebrides, vol. i. Cf. Glyn-Williams, Welsh Song and Dance (Curwen, 1936). For India see A. H. Fox Strangways, The Music of Hindustan (1914), pp. 104 ff., and H. A. Popley, The Music of India (1921); cf. A. Geddes in A. Karpelès (ed.), L'Inde et son âme, Paris, 1927. While published phonographic records of Indian singing normally illustrate these intervals, those of Gaelic Hebridean singers rarely do, as they are accustomed to alter to suit a piano.

512 The cattle 52
233 knew their own sheilings; sometimes
825 they came back before milking time and stuck their heads [234] inside. They stood outside the sheiling at night, and that's how you can tell where a sheiling once was, even though the walls have fallen, by the rich green grass.
Calves were born during the summer. A hollow was scooped 233 out in the peat, and lined with turf and moss. People
[422] had as many as four or five cows. It was like Switzerland, only we didn't have the bells on the cows. There was lots [292] of milk, fresh thick cream and crowdie (clotted sour [294] milk); the old people knew how to make cheese.

233 "The moor was very eerie at night, with the sound of
• 821 the birds. There were only a few hours of darkness
751 anyway, and I'm sure we didn't get much sleep, but somehow [513] we were always fresh. It was the air, the moor air is more health-giving. The air is different there. Ill
people benefited from the change. Sometimes a person with TB would stay out there all summer. The air is heavy
by the sea.

"There was no sense of time the way there is today.
805 If you got lost in the snow or fog, you followed the cows
233 home. You had all summer to take home the peats, to work
221 the croft, to harvest the corn. There wasn't a world, 829 there was only ourselves. That has changed since the war.
[178]

• 82| Two sayings sum up the lag of the seasons in the West
824 and its effect on crops. The first runs, "Winter comes 241 not till after New Year, nor Spring till after St. Patrick's [538] Day" (Cha tig Geamhradh gu cul Calluinn, no Earrach gu cul Fheill Paruig). St. Patrick's Day is the 17th of March, but old-style reckoning put both dates later still. The [538] other runs, "A frosty winter, a misty spring, a chequered summer, and a bright, sunny autumn, never left dearth in Scotland" (Geamhradh reodhtanach, Earrach ceothanach, Samhradh breac riabhach, us Foghar geal grianach, cha d'fhag gort riamh an Alba). The retort is that though western summers may often be chequered with sun and showers well suited for growing grass and grain, the autumns are not really sunny, but rainy. Hence 'dearth'
—of grain—must result from spoiled harvests. Not so for grass, unharmed by a wet autumn. Hay, if ensilage is not possible, can usually be gathered unharmed in sunny spells [132] of summer if cut in good time. Agriculturally, the climate favours 'grass' rather than grain.

132 Plentiful rainfall and coolness throughout the year do
137 not allow of complete neutral decomposition of vegetable [134] matter in the presence of air. Hence, year by year, a residuum of acid humus accumulates as peat on the ill-drained surface. Prehistorically, more favourable phases of climate permitted the growth of pines. Knowledge of present temperature and rainfall alone would suggest the growth of broad-leaved deciduous trees, but these are absent except in the sheltered policies of Stornoway Castle.
About 1695 Martin noted 'hazel and birch' occurring on the south side of Loch Stornoway, but nowhere else on the Island. Even there trees are stunted as if pruned by the wind.

132 The further inhibitive influence is indeed the wind

822

822 ETHNOPHYSICS--popular conceptions of matter, energy, and their properties; notions about space, time, and gravitation; ideas about form, color, and sound (e.g., color symbolism, patterned use of color); beliefs about shadows, reflections, and echoes; notions about electricity, magnetism, chemical properties (e.g., alchemy); etc. See also:

Telephone, telegraph, radio, and television . . . 20
Ideas about heat, light, and fire 37
Art and music 53
Data on sensation and perception 181
Photography 218
Metallurgy 325
Civil engineering 331
Chemical engineering 381
Mechanics 401
Optical instruments 416
Ideas about the soul 776
Mensuration 804
Development of scientific physics and chemistry 815

796 into tiny squares. The ministers and the elders partake 794 first. A final hymn is full of rejoicing, and the minister then exhorts the communicants to return to the world and give witness and to live exemplary lives.

The evening service on Sunday is evangelical, intended for non-believers. After this service the communicants
conduct a brief prayer meeting to give thanks.

[829] On Monday, the minister again tells the communicants
to go out into the world and declare publically their experiences of the preceding day; and to demonstrate in everything they do and say that they are believers. In [178] the past, only a morning service was given, as most people
[484] had a long journey ahead of them to return home; but now that cars are available, a similar evening service is also conducted.

781 5. The Process of Conversion: The process of conversion
794 may be slow or sudden, but conversion is most common at 796 middle age and among women. One informant wryly observed, [561] "Only recently women were allowed to have souls. But [562] from the looks of the Communion table, mostly women are going to heaven." Many of the women taking Communion are [587] • [822] dressed from head to foot in black, a color which indicates their widowed status.

781 The first sign that a person is "following" (leanntail)
794 the church is that he begins to attend the weekly prayer

823

823 ETHNOGEOGRAPHY--notions about water; ideas about hydrographic phenomena (e.g., oceans and seas, waves and tides, currents and whirlpools, rivers and streams, lakes and springs, floods); ideas about topographic phenomena (e.g., hills and mountains, canyons and valleys, caves and grottoes, striking natural formations, volcanoes and earthquakes); notions about minerals, metals, and precious stones; geographical and geological lore; directions (e.g., upstream and downstream, cardinal points); ideas about the beauty of nature; associated behavior patterns (e.g., attempts to quell earthquakes); etc. See also:

Geographical environment 13
Settlements 39
Place names 103
Land use 311
Water supply 312
Routes and maps 487
Disaster relief 731
Flood myths and mythical cataclysms . . . 773
Nature spirits and monsters 776
Surveying 804
Development of scientific geology and geography 815

166 The image of the island
484 as spiritual home is fostered by The Stornoway Gazette,
• 823 and by nostalgic songs, most of which were written by 204 islanders who emigrated to Canada in the first quarter [533] of the century.

632 The crofting township as a strongly bounded network
241 continues to exist, although crofting as a socioeconomic pattern which evolved in a situation of limited social and geographical mobility, low cash reserves, and the restriction of a large population to a region of limited resources, is very different from crofting as defined by an office in Inverness. As far as the crofter is concerned, to be defined as a crofter by the Crofters Commission and other government agencies is to have access to resources which affect the environment in which he makes his choices.

241 The individual is faced with the semi-security of 288 crofting and weaving, in contrast with the exciting but risk-laden opportunities offered by the dominant urban-[654] industrial mainland. Crofting and Harris Tweed have been protected by government legislation. Various subsidies
(745) and loans are available. In times of unemployment, social security is available. Extremely important as contributers 621 to boundedness are the non-economic incentives: the 156 individual has a place in a human community; he is given

CH. I ENVIRONMENT AND LANDSCAPE

101 Britain, on the horizon, the eye may descry the coasts of 133 Scandinavia, the Low Countries, France and Iberia. This far-flung regional grouping within the British Isles—which extends for 800 miles from the Shetland to the Scilly Isles—may be called 'the North and West'.

Four border-lines may be drawn to bound these regions: the hill-foot 'Highland Line', the Scottish Border, the border of Wales with the Pennine-and-Moorland-foot, and lastly, for the whole, a line drawn from the Severn to the Tees. Of these four lines (or border-tracts), the last, which divides the British Isles into two different types of landscape and life, is not the least significant. On one side lies the whole of 'the North and West', with its isles and headlands, its mountains and hills, hewn in old rock, and its firthlands, straths and marginal, hill-foot lowlands, all sculptured markedly both by rivers and ice, and heaped with glacial drift. On the other lies the 'Plain' of south-eastern England, or simply 'the South-east', of which the low scarplands of younger rocks slope smoothly down to mainly river-sculptured vales, and are bounded by smoother coasts.[1]

133 Geographically, this succession is one of complexes with 131 recurrent features of height and hollow, land and sea, rather than of sharply defined blocks; its marches are tracts of transition rather than boundary lines. But essential characters of the two zones are revealed by the main boundary

• [823] [1] Strictly, the alternation of vales with wolds and downs, which characterises England south-east of the Pennines, would justify the term 'lowland'; but with our Scottish and Highland perspective, the English 'lowland' appears a 'plain', and for simplicity, the 'Plain', or simply 'the South-east', is used throughout this book. The physical and geological maps of the British Isles in an atlas may serve to illustrate this perspective; they should be viewed from the north-west by turning the map with the north-west islands towards one, and the plains of England and the Continent furthest away.

CH. I ENVIRONMENT AND LANDSCAPE

241 Scotland had begun to lag since her pioneering effort from 134 1750 to 1880.
178 Fortunately, Scotland is now recognising that in peat
(654) reclamation, on the one hand, and the improvement of rough grazing, or at least its maintenance, on the other,
[185] there lies a problem of national importance. More than 311 half the land surface of the country consists of mountain and heath land used for grazing, not including 'deer forests' from which sheep had been altogether excluded. The arable land of Scotland is less than one-sixth of the whole, with about one-twelfth in addition under permanent grass. Moreover, since most of the enclosed land is distant from the area of rough grazing, the latter is partly wasted. The difficulties of soil and sea and of the whole economic situation are great, and must be understood.

(B) THE ISLAND LANDSCAPE, LAND-FORMS AND GEOLOGY

1. Aspects of the Isle

131 Lewis-and-Harris, the most northerly isle of the Outer Hebrides, and the largest, is roughly lozenge-shaped. Although only thirty miles in width, it is over sixty miles in length. Attached to Harris parish is the little isle of [103] Berneray, half a dozen miles farther south. It puzzles the stranger that, while the archipelago of the Outer
• [823] Hebrides is best known to the inhabitants as "The Long Island", Lewis (or the Lews) and Harris, which actually form one island, are spoken of as separate islands.[1] Yet nothing could be more natural. Before the making of [113] [1] "The Long Island", Gaelic An Eilean Fada, as a name for the Outer Hebrides has the sanction of traditional usage, as Alexander Carmichael noted in his Introduction to Carmina Gadelica (vol. i, 1900; and 1928).

ISLAND, WORK AND PEOPLE PT. I

131 Before the making of roads, it was ease of sailing which united island peoples 174 and their territories. One can wade or drive, at low tide, [491] over the fords that unite the Isle of Benbecula with the two Uists, North and South: in fact, a bridge now connects [505] Benbecula with South Uist. But only the roughest of [491] hill tracks led through the hills of North Harris from the 'Tarbert' or Isthmus of Harris to the nearest habitation at the head of Loch Seaforth or Loch Erisort, in the Lews. This is a distance of some twenty miles, or a fair day's tramp for an unloaded man, and far too much for a return
• [823] journey in one day. Hence separation of territory and name was natural. This separation no longer exists as 131 there is now a good 'bus service from Rodel via Tarbert 178 to Stornoway which links Harris with the daily Kyle to 823 Stornoway steamer. In this book, the Island, or the 494 Islanders, refers to Lewis-and-Harris with its people, as one.

101 Lewis is included in Ross-shire (of which the county town is Dingwall, north of Inverness) and Harris in 131 Inverness-shire, together with the rest of the 'Long 634 Island'. The county boundary cuts across the six-mile isthmus north of the hills of North Harris, from the in-reaching Loch Seaforth WNW. to Loch Resort (Fig. 8). All the Outer Hebrides are now included in the Parliamentary constituency of the Western Isles. Proposals to unite the Island under one District Council, or the Outer Hebrides under one County Council, are more favourably viewed in Stornoway than in Harris or the 632 Southern Isles. Harris forms one civil parish, while Lewis is divided into four: Stornoway, Barvas, Uig and Lochs.
[133] The Lewis parish boundaries traversing the moors are inset [131] in Fig. 8 so that their trends can be readily grasped, and the inhabited portions of the parishes quickly located (p. 50).

175 COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT.
693 On the mainland, both Lowland and Highland, an outlying reclaimable patch of arable, lying near distant, little 473 used pasture, frequently gave a single family the chance
(241) of a living. Such a site meant solitary toil for the ma [311] and his family; but there might be advantages such [184] an occasional deer from the forest, or a post as huntin
[224] 'forester' such as was held by many a Gaelic hunte
• [823] bard. In the Eastern Highlands such a high-lying croft w known as Ruigh (anglicised to Ry-). Traditions of pover with individuality in isolation were handed down, f 175 example, from one of my forebears who held such a ruig
361 Rycorrach, one of several strung out along the 1250-fe contour in a small, high valley off Strath Spey; the la [511] of them was abandoned only recently. Such a ruigh m have originally been a summer shieling, only occupi
when shortage of corn-land below, coupled with ne possibilities of a little profit from sheep-shearing, led settlement there.

178 At the fringe of the Island's deer 'forests' of Nor 361 Harris and Park, stalkers are still found in lonely lodg 224 and dwellings, individuals often of character and worth, 233 they need to be; and a few isolated shepherds, such one finds on mainland sheep farms, dwell on small isle
But in the Isles, isolated, high-lying spots for single cro 361 are rare. And the clearest distinction must be dra
621 between the true solitude of a single, isolated cottage 184 croft and the sociability of a group of four or five, or ev two or three, crofts, such as those of lobster fishers;
even a few families form the germ of a community, in wo and in leisure.

175 The potentialities of co-operative practice were ove 178 looked by agricultural reformers, excusably enough.
when new methods were required, run-rig kept back 654 pace to that of the slowest, virtually arresting reform. So 496
241
473

3: Geddes K-4, 5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

121 by help of oral tradition and of the living witness of con-
174 tinuing usage, we can reconstitute Gaelic life from the 178 view-points of both people and chief. Elsewhere, even in Scotland, only fragments of early life are recorded, in 175 parchments written by the lawyers of landlord and king, and almost always from the privileged side. History is 814 indebted to modern lawyers who have deciphered and 127 published the faded documents of their predecessors. But the very training as solicitor-factors which fitted them for this specialised task, in no way prepared them to view life as seen, experienced and felt by the men and women of the past, or even by the elders or youth of the townships today, with whom they have rarely laboured and whose mother tongue they rarely understand.

(A) THE LABOURS OF MAN AND WIFE, AND THE REWARD

621 We have seen that until the nineteenth century the 632 township in the main was self-contained. Its people grew,
175 reared or caught their food, and also found the raw materials [433] for their clothing; they built their own shelter, and cut their own firing. As a result, both men and women had 174 each to develop "a wide range of simple skills", in the 175 apt phrase of a Lewisman, Mr. Donald MacLean, M.A. Beyond the co-operative effort within a family, a farm
462 group, or a body of 'fellow-townsmen'—in which each was competent to take a share according to sex and age—aptitude and family tradition initiated some local division [463] of labour. The resident smith and the 'caird' (usually a wandering craftsman or tinker) appear in the oldest tales and in the first rent-rolls. In addition there were honorary [759] tasks. The smith might act as the village surgeon, ready

172 of the Isles, and in which the people met, though far from 178 any clergy. On the southern mainland most trace of 346 shrines and chapels seems to have been lost, so small are [771] the rings of unhewn stone that marked their sites. Little was recorded by salaried clergy about the services conducted 175 there; those who approved tended to let well alone. Hence • 814 written accounts have come down chiefly from those who were out of touch with rural needs or ignorant of the language spoken in intimacy, and whose alien training had [217] removed them from sympathy.[1] As for those whose private interests, stipend or subservience to patrons bound them to prelate, lord or king, they roundly condemned free congregations.

175 Nevertheless, fragmentary records have come down, 814 such as those of Martin, who visited St. Kilda in 1697 and described the little church where the people still kept a 771 fine brass crucifix and worshipped together, without the [184] presence of a clergyman. Naturally, the curiosity stimulated by St. Kilda's fabulous isolation led Martin to describe its little community more fully than any other; but he mentions similar worship elsewhere. Thus in lonely North Rona, inhabited by only five families, Martin had

[133] [1] The difficulty of initiation to intimate usages of language is exemplified in a scholarly and patriotic work, the Dictionary of the Gaelic Language (Gaelic-English, and English-Gaelic) by Malcolm Maclennan, D.D., 1925.
[192] This standard work incorporates all the words of three previous dictionaries, with many additions. Yet key words of the people's religious heritage, of immemorial age, of living usage, and recorded a generation or so before in the collections cited here, are either absent, or are given the more prosaic or debased of two shades of meaning (not the higher). See "caim, a case, sheath" or shrine; "tionnsgann, a beginning" (a dedication); earna, Hail or salutation; "ora, orra, or ortha, a charm . . . amulet . . . or imposture of any kind . . . Irish . . . prayer in verse—from Latin, oratio" (why prayer in 'Irish' only?); and other vital words. According to this scholarly dictionary, the title of the supreme Scottish collection of Gaelic religious tradition, Carmichael's Ortha nan Gaidheal (Latin, Carmina Gadelica), is to be translated, not Prayers, but "Charms . . . or Impostures . . . of the Gael"!

Campbell wrote, " My reception by those who are called 'professors' ", the lay leaders who 'professed' the Evangelical doctrines, " was trying to the last. Holding that Christ died for all seemed to them so fundamental an error as to poison all my teaching." Thereafter, Campbell retired, in Glasgow, to read, preach to a few, and write, keeping in touch with Norman Macleod and Erskine in Scotland, and in England with J. F. D. Maurice (1805–72). After Christ, the Bread of Life, Campbell wrote The Nature of the Atonement (1856). Readers felt not only that he was one of the most lovable of men, but a profound theologian, a view reinforced today. " Of all books that have ever been written on the Atonement ", wrote Dr. Denney, " McLeod Campbell's is probably that which is most completely inspired by the spirit of the truth with which it deals. Its originality is spiritual as well as intellectual. In speculative power he cannot be compared to Schleiermacher, nor in historical learning to Ritschl; but he walks in the light all the time, and everything he touches lives."

Here then was a man who seemed to have been born " in advance of his time ", yet who came of a community of deeply traditional cast. His life's thought was attuned to that of his forebears, and expressed itself most intimately perhaps in their own tongue. Campbell was born and reared in Lorne, Argyllshire, which had first received Protestantism through Carswell, who, in translating Knox's " Liturgy " into Gaelic, incorporated the old Gaelic labour prayer of the fishermen (Chapter VII (a)). The gentler form of Protestantism brought in by Carswell may have allowed the spirit of Celtic Christianity to survive among the people of ' Mid-Argyll ' and Lorne, down to Campbell's boyhood. It may thus have contributed to the making of " a Scottish crippling losses suffered after 1914–18. A beginning has certainly been made. The Herring Industry Board's scheme for 'Queen of Scots' kippers will help the Minch fishing. It will not necessarily help the ports of Stornoway or Tarbert, because herring can be landed at mainland ports and treated there or else taken by road to the Moray Firth, kippered there, and still qualify under the scheme. The Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society has aided the marketing of lobsters to good purpose.

(iv) Other Sources of Income earned in the Island

It is to be hoped that members of the Lewis Association may ascertain these, perhaps in collaboration with University research workers. This, in turn, might instructively be collated with the imports and exports of the Island, which are recorded and ascertainable with a precision impossible for a similar area on the mainland. Thus the facts would throw light on the economy of other crofting districts.

(v) Allowances, Pensions, Unemployment Assistance and Remittances

With regard to money received by the crofting communities of Lewis from other than ' productive ' sources, figures have kindly been made available regarding three sources, namely, (a) Allowances made to members of the Forces and their dependents, and Pensions, (b) Unemployment payments, and (c) Money Orders and Postal Orders. The yearly periods for which figures are available are close enough to permit of reasonable comparisons. Among other sources, Bank Drafts form an insignificant fraction of monies received by crofters from outside the Island. It is impossible to say how much cash is brought home by men paid off from the Merchant Service and other employment, or how much may be sent through the post in the form of notes, whether registered or unregistered. The amount is known to be large, however, and an estimate based on the number of insured employed, and other figures, would be of value. A token figure is suggested in a note to the concluding Table.

[Kershader] [Garyvard]
182 common grazings - at present approximately correctly stocked - and cannot therefore provide 241 much employment. Hence it is the standard of agriculture that must be improved. Since the [219] land does not permit striking extension or improvement of the cultivated area, development must be directed towards improving pasture, with more re-seeding and controlled grazing 400 similar to that already described. All this, however, is of little avail if prices for cattle, sheep and wool remain low, or at least lower than prices prevailing on the mainland. The first priority, therefore, in the establishment of a prosperous agriculture is a guaranteed market-price. Given this, it might become worthwhile to take steps to increase the carrying capacity of the crofts. It may be assumed that this would involve an all-round improvement which could give a firm basis to the economic existence of the community; until this is achieved, stability and continuity are out of the question.

GARYVARD

Gwenyth R. Page, B. A.

131 The landscape of the south-east coast of Loch Erisort is a sombre and rugged one. The 133 Quaternary ice sheets left in their wake troughs now filled by the sea loch, innumerable lochs covered in water lilies, a massive area of indeterminate drainage and expanses of bare gneiss.

Garyvard is set on the fringe of this landscape on a 20 to 25° slope with the crofts aligned [551] from the moor to the sea, on a mantle of drift. Here is the home of the MacLeods, the Mackinnons
221 and the Montgomerys. Life beats out its regular pattern of existence during the winter months
231 on the croft, followed by an increasing tempo and variety of work during the rest of the year. In January and February the animals must be fed on hay or lose the battle to survive. In February 241 there are preparations for the year's tasks, making repairs and improvements to the croft. Next month will find the crofter on the land, making or clearing drains and putting fences and dykes in order. The tempo of life quickens with the year; April sees the first sheep dipping, the land turned over, potatoes and oats sown. From mid-May, the sheep leave the crofts to fend [144] for themselves on the common grazing. The following three or four months are times of tremendous activity on the moors when the peats are cut, to be stacked later, first in fours, then in eights, so that the wind may dry them, till eventually bee-hive-shaped stacks - some four feet high - can be seen near the peat banks in August. Then begins the wearisome task of carrying the peats home, all too frequently in creels carried on the back, since the peat workings of Garyvard are on the moors up to half a mile from road. Altogether some two miles of roads are needed to prevent the villagers patronising the coal merchants of Stornoway. Two crofters, however, cut peat on their crofts, whilst others have permission to cut from Cromore or Caversta common grazings close to the road. All the while croft work continues, varying from hoeing, weeding and cutting hay to the gathering of sheep for shearing. As there are no fences between the various commons, crofters must travel from one township fank to another, seeking their own. In August the lambs are weaned. Hay making generally ends in August and is immediately followed by the oat harvest in September. By the time both oats and hay have been gathered in, the potatoes are lifted and the sheep are brought in from the common grazing about October 12th. The last sheep dipping takes place in November and is followed by tupping.

241 There are eleven crofts altogether, though one is divided, each portion having a legal tenant 423 who has a half share in the common grazing. Two crofts are 12 acres in extent, the half crofts 2.75 acres only, though the acre cultivated on the common grazing by one of the latter crofters since 1923, has recently been officially recognised. Most crofts are in strips running from the sea-shore up the slope some 500 yards to the township dyke, and are clearly demarcated by fences erected just after the last war. Three crofts have additional strips whilst one croft was [75] an extra strip belonging to another croft. The additional strips date back about 100 years to a time when the township grew rapidly as a result of evictions in southern Park. One croft is divided and worked in three separate parts so in effect there are fourteen operative units in Garyvard.

821

821 ETHNOMETEOROLOGY--ideas about night and day, dawn and twilight, rising and setting of the sun, phases of the moon, eclipses, solstices and equinoxes, and the succession of seasons; notions about heavenly bodies (e.g., sun, moon, stars, constellations, planets, comets, meteorites); ideas about meteorological phenomena (e.g., clouds and fog, frosts and drought, rain and snow, ice hail and sleet, winds and whirlwinds, storms, thunder and lightning, rainbow, parhelion and aurora); associated behavior patterns (e.g., greeting the dawn, dispelling an eclipse); etc. See also:

Climate	132	Cosmology	772
Navigation	602	Nature spirits and gods	776
Reaction to disasters	731	Omens and astrology	787
Magical weather control	789	Development of scientific astronomy and meteorology	815
Ordering of time	805	Association of lunation with menstruation	841

178 but not as often as in 501 were in danger of being 228 and winds that gained e [493] harbor; but today, bec
[504] the boats can be shelte
of Carloway, five miles [434] of Shawbost. Despite t in income since World W
people to buy boats, th

175 In the past certai 821 "knowing the wind and t
coming from different d kinds of weather; a li bad weather in a few da
"My father and grandfat coming. They needed to radio and television to signs, too, if I had li

175 Not only was there
228 to hire themselves as c
464 Several nicknames refle 551 known by the nickname "
who lived on the east c boat the head of the Sh

the past. In the past boats smashed by the strong seas
asy access to the Shawbost ause so many cars are available,
red in the more protected bays
up the coast to the southwest his protection and the increase ar II which would enable more e number of boats remains small.
n people were esteemed for he sea." The sound of the turf irections presaged different ne of white across the bay meant
ys. A fifty-year-old man says, her could tell when a storm was know, and they didn't have tell them. I would know the stened to them."
local fishing, but the men used rew on other fishing boats.
ct this history. One family is Strachan," the surname of a man oast of Scotland and on whose awbost family had once worked as 824

THNOBOTANY--notions about plants in general; ideas about particular plants
.g., mistletoe); cultural uses of plants; native terms for plants;
owledge of poisonous plants; associated behavior patterns; etc.

e also:

Agriculture 24
Textile uses of plant fibers 28
Native flora 137
Collecting 722
Fish poisons 226
Food taboos 262
Materia medica and pharmacology 278
Lumbering and forestry science 313
Forest products 314
Arrow poisons 411
Development of scientific botany. 815

175 [161] Around this time, various factors had encouraged an increase in population. After Scotland's union with England in 1707, the prohibition on the import of cattle into England was lifted, and trade in cattle became economically more important (Day 1918: 26). The numerous wars of this period caused the price of cattle to double between 1736 and 1766 (Day 1918: 180). Clan warfare diminished; the potato was introduced; and vaccine for smallpox became available.

175 161 [166] The increase in population led to an extreme crowding of land in some areas, which made agricultural reform difficult. Many landlords tried to encourage tenants of their estates to emigrate. The appearance of a market for kelp, which lasted from the middle of the 18th century to about 1815, discouraged landlords from implementing policies of depopulation that would diminish their labor force. An alkaline extract of kelp was used in a variety of manufactured goods, such as soap and glass. The seaweed was gathered by men, women and children living along the coasts, and burned in rough open kilns. Tenants who worked at this occupation received L3-4, and the landlords L18-20, per ton (Mackinlay 1878: vii); the landlord received as high an income as L10,000 to L20,000 a year from the burning of kelp (Gray 1957: 42).

175 824 323 388 [465]

288 105 developed from the concentration of power in the hands
141 of the merchants. In the early days of the industry, 284 all the processes involved in the production of a 282 finished length of tweed were carried out by individual 138 175 families. A man used wool from his own flock, and with the 175 aid of other family members, dyed it with vegetable dyes,
(386) carded and spun it by hand, wove it, washed and shrunk
284 it, and found his own buyer. Dyeing wool, spinning yarn, 282 and washing ("waulking") the finished length of tweed
175 462 was usually done by women. In Harris, the entire process of producing a tweed was carried out by women, but in Lewis the weaving was done largely by men.

175 A woman in her 80's recalls the process of weaving
286 when she was young. Hand-spinning had died out by this time, although the question of whether tweeds woven with such yarn could legitimately be called Harris Tweed was not resolved until 1934.

"About 1916 or so it took about two weeks to a month 175 143 to do a tweed. You bought the wool from the Agricultural
(435) Board. Sixteen bags of wool, costing about £20, would
(433) do four tweeds. You needed four one-stone bags per tweed. Then you would spend a day gathering a bag of
(384) 138 crotal (lichen scraped from rocks and used for dye). One
(324) bag per one bag of wool was required for the dye. After

233 costly, that the Common Market will soon drive up milk
434 prices, and that income from the weaving has become too 430 uncertain.
248

Many tools and techniques associated with crofting
412 have disappeared: the flail for threshing oats (two 178 pieces of wood joined with leather); the sheepskin stretched over wood with holes burned into it, to separate chaff and grain; rope made of plaited heather and straw.

241 Each spring the byre was cleaned of its accumulated dung
(224) and urine, and this was turned into the ground along
(224) with seaweed. Such tools and techniques remain among
(324) the older villagers as a "memory culture" which may be
173 mobilized under changed conditions, as when alternatives
(387) to crofting are no longer available or are too costly. However, the longer crofting is neglected, the less it will provide an alternative strategy. "The artificial 241 fertilisers are ruining the land; that's why the
(224) turnips are full of maggots and the potatoes turn to
(233) water." As the rushes grow and clog the drains and streams—rushes that used to be eaten by the horses and cattle and which are now left untouched by the sheep—the land becomes unfit even for grazing. "I'd rather work the land than the blinkin' loom, but we tried the potatoes, turnips and cabbage last year, and lost them all to the maggots. You lose heart after that."

INTRODUCTION

136 coasts there is a wonderful richness—one might well spend an
(413) hour or so with J. A. Harvie-Brown's A Fauna of the Outer Hebrides. The Hebrides area is one of the twelve faunal regions of Scotland, and is becoming increasingly the spotting-ground for amateur and professional ornithologists. They see birds such as the skua and red-necked phalarope, breeding at the southernmost limits of their range. The golden eagle, corncrake and red-throated diver, though found in other parts of Scotland, are more plentiful in the region because of the low incidence of human interference; buzzard, merlin and peregrine falcon are also found. Many birds are peculiar to the area: there are Hebridean subspecies of twite, dunnock, song-thrush and wren. Since 1962 the blue tit has begun to colonise the Stornoway woods. And 1960 saw the first arrival of the collared dove, an incomer which, like many a human, has taken to the island life, and settled down to establish its flourishing community. On Gallows Hill, a low rising overlooking Stornoway, is a large rookery; rooks first reached the island in 1893. Jackdaws arrived at the turn of the century and are now quite numerous. As might be expected, the adjacent harbour and foreshore of Stornoway provide a suitable area for purple sandpipers, turnstone, heron and redshank. Gulls abound. The estuary area just north of Stornoway is the haunt of widgeon, shelduck and teal, among many other birds; a ruff was seen there in 1956. Melbost beach has the largest ternery in the islands, with arctic, common and little terns sharing life together.

The birds on the shore line are mostly waders, divers, ducks and seabirds. Cormorant, shag, gannet, fulmar, arctic skua, terns, gulls of all kinds and oyster-catcher can be found. The full variety of the island's bird life can be seen by visiting not only those skipping lands to the sea, but the cliff-tops, which often have their own numerous bird colonies. The sea's edge, with the push-pull tides, is indeed another area with abundant life of all kinds. Bladder-
(137) wrack (fucus vesiculosus) and knotted wrack (ascophyllum nodo-
(824) num) are there in great quantity, the latter now a significant factor
(241) in seaweed-processing activities (Chapter 6). From time immemorial, seaweeds have been a natural resource in the island's economy, used as manure to supply the necessary element of organic matter to keep the land in good heart. Keeping the sea-

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

286 womenfolk, giving a ratio of only one male weaver to fifty-five 462 families. In Lewis, male weavers were more common: one to *175 every twenty-five families. The making of whisky was introduced 433 about the seventeenth century. This was in addition to the old drink of home-brewed beer or ale (lionn), and much of it was made to pay rents; it must have consumed a considerable quantity of valuable foodstuff. However, the spread of distillation as a legitimate home industry by which the rent could be paid, in kind 273 or by sale, was followed by legislation prohibiting all but very 433 large stills; illegal distilling of course went on in a small way.

*195 It was, then, by a very narrow margin that subsistence was won 511 in the island some two centuries ago. Many times famine showed how close was the wolf to the island doors. The introduction of the potato, and the interest in the fishing industry led to an increase in the population, though as discussed in Chapter 3 this in turn brought more problems. Basically, the island economy had never been organised on a sound foundation, with the result that winds of change blew where they would with little or no control.

*195 A new factor in the island economy was introduced after 1750.
* 924 This was kelp-making, the cutting and burning of seaweed on the 323 shore for subsequent use in the manufacture of alkali for the glass 388 and soap industries. The first tentative move in the island was 433 made by MacLeod of Harris in 1748, when he allowed some Irish labourers to make kelp on his shores; so little was the product's value realised at the time that he only charged them 2s per ton manufactured. As the burning of kelp came to be understood, and the marketable value of the product ascertained, the native population set to. Between 1772 and 1864, about 50 tons were produced in Lewis each year, compared with some 800 tons per annum in the Uists; the Harris figure was 500-600 tons. The growth of the industry began to snowball, and the Minister of Locha, writing in the Old Statistical Account, states that at the time (1796) some 50 tons were being produced in that parish
(221) per annum. In Stornoway parish, though no figure is available, the minister reports that kelp-burning was the principal manufacture, and that everyone able to fill a creel, or carry one, was employed at it for about three months of the year. Little of it seems to have been done in Barvas parish. The price of kelp varied

CROFTER INDUSTRIES

according to the amount of barilla (its great competitor, a carbon-175* ate of soda made from plant ashes) which found its way into the 224 British market. When the American war interfered with the im-323 ports the kelp price was as high as £22 per ton. Prices began to 388 decline about 1810, and from 1822 successive reductions in duties 433 on salt and barilla resulted in the decline and demise of the kelp industry. As a consequence, great distress appeared in those districts which had founded their whole economy on seaweed.

The weeds of most value to the industry, because they yielded (137) most salts, included laminaria digitale, laminaria bulbosa, asco-phyllum nodosum and fucus vesiculosus. One ton of kelp yielded an average of 8 lb of iodine, with certain quantities of chloride of sodium, chloride of potassium, and carbonate of soda. When subjected to special treatment and distillation, 2-3 cwts of sulphate of ammonia, and several gallons of naphtha, paraffin oil, and volatile oil were also derived.

The fishing industry, discussed in the previous chapter, took 175* over where the kelp-making industry left off and became another 228 king-pin in the island economy. By the end of the last century it seemed set fair for continuing prosperity. In 1900, harbours were
(503) being planned and built with State aid in Uig, at Carloway, Ness
(553) and Tarbert. Then 1914 came, and with it sweeping changes in international trade. Island fishermen were left workless with
(511) wrecked and rotting fishing boats. In twenty years the number of Scotland's fishermen was halved; the remainder were all but ruined. The islanders' fate mirrored this pattern.

Yet another significant source of income for island families for 175* almost 200 years came from the men in military service, who 201 either sent money home or returned home with their gratuities 434 and pay. In the wars of the last century many enlisted in the Highland regiments, the Navy and the Merchant Marine. Even today, the income from this external activity is not insignificant.

EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY ECONOMY

Information and statistics about the economy of the island in the 175* middle of the eighteenth century are to be found in Walker's
113 Economical History of the Hebrides or Western Islands of Scotland; his MS is in the British Museum.

(above) An island industry, small but totally significant: the seaweed processing factory at Kerse, Loch Erisort, Lewis

(p. 126)

(below) Feeding wet seaweed into the factory's drying plant. The dried product is milled and exported by pallet for subsequent processing

248
133
324

142
824
241
402

LORD LEVERHULME'S FISHERIES

When he pulled out of Lewis to go south to Harris, 159 he offered—such was the character of the man—as thanks for 175* the '98 per cent support' he got from the people of Lewis, to each 423 Lewis crofter his own croft as a free gift, and the Lews Castle, 731 together with all his property in Stornoway, to the people of the town.

In 1919, Leverhulme became proprietor of Harris, and con-159 centrated his efforts in Obbe, now called Leverburgh, in South 175* Harris. The harbour at Obbe lacked the natural advantage which Stornoway had, so he spent large sums on making it navigable.
(503) Rocky obstacles were blasted away; harbour quays and breakwaters
(228) were set up to guide vessels into harbour; new quays were built; and kippering sheds, and other buildings necessary for packing and curing herring were erected. Among his other undertakings
(288) in Harris were the provision of a mill for making tweeds, and he
(491) bore half the cost of the 54 miles of road between Leverburgh and Finsbay. In 1925, after a visit to the Congo, he died in Brussels. His Harris schemes came to an abrupt end. And the remains of industrial history are still to be seen in the quietness of the little township named after one of the most stormy of business petrels that Britain has ever seen.

Tourism

484 Tourism has always been a perfunctory and casual affair, until
(521) the introduction of the fast ferries which now link the mainland
(565) (via Skye) with the Outer Isles. Some 10,000 cars cross each year from Skye to the Hebrides. In 1913, the Stornoway Tourist Association had a struggle to increase the number of visitors to the town, to establish it as a tourist resort. It is much the same today with the Western Isles Tourist Association, which is having difficulty in integrating tourist facilities with crofting activities. In Lewis, the Stornoway Trust has assisted in establishing pony-trekking, a venture which has the potential to mirror the success of a similar one in the Isle of Skye.

PRESENT INDUSTRY

Almost an echo of the kelp-burning industry is the alginate in-824 * dustry. It provides employment for only small numbers, but is a 381

824 useful crofting ancillary which, unlike many others, is soundly 38 based on a definite commercial demand. Various industries use the extracted acid for some 150 products. The Scottish alginate industry, the second largest in the world, is based on the process of E. C. Stanford, who discovered alginic acid in 1883, though today modern methods are used. For raw materials it has turned to the old kelping shores of the Hebrides and Northern Isles. On the island it has a factory at Keose on Loch Erisort, a site chosen for the easy access afforded to puffers; the factory receives the weed, dries, mills and bags it, and the boats then carry 200-ton loads to Girvan. The factory itself involved some £30,000 of 433 capital layout and has a capacity of 120 wet tons per week—4 wet tons producing 1 dry milled ton. About a dozen Harris and 137 Lewis crofters gather the seaweed crop, the most useful type being bladderwrack or rockweed (ascophyllum nodosum), from the shores at Loch Erisort, East Loch Roag and Bernera in Lewis, 493 Husinish and Scarp in Harris, and Loch Seaforth. Where there is road access the weed is cut by sickle and loaded into a lorry, but more often it is cut at low water to be floated with the incoming tide and rafted to Keose, hauled by motor boat.

247 A product of the land not readily associated with the Hebrides is bulbs. Bulb-growing deserves a mention, however, if only be-803 cause the experiment to see whether it could become a commercial possibility in Lewis was carried out by the children of Lionel (Ness) Junior Secondary School. The MacAulay (Rhodesia) Trust made an investment of £150 to cover initial expenses, and success followed. When the original project was completed it was extended, sales bringing the school a useful sum. But an attack of disease brought production to a standstill in 1966.

312 Another small industry is the aerated-water plant at Ness, which is operating with reasonable success, and could do better if 228 imports of aerated waters from abroad were reduced. A number of recent surveys made in the island have found great interest in such activities as shell-fish processing in Harris to produce semi-286 preserves, using mostly cockles and mussels. Local knitting already has a name for its products and a potential for extension on a commercial scale; this latter began in late 1966. Some forty years
* 195 ago knitting specialists went to Lewis to investigate the possibilities

82 Two sayings sum up the lag of the seasons in the West
824 and its effect on crops. The first runs, "Winter comes 241 not till after New Year, nor Spring till after St. Patrick's 538 Day" (Cha tig Geamhradh gu cul Calluinn, no Earrach gu 538 cul Fheill Pàraig). St. Patrick's Day is the 17th of March, but old-style reckoning put both dates later still. The other runs, "A frosty winter, a misty spring, a chequered
summer, and a bright, sunny autumn, never left dearth in Scotland" (Geamhradh reodhtanach, Earrach ceothanach, Samhradh breac riabhach, us Foghar geal grianach, tha d'fhag gort riamh an Albа). The retort is that though western summers may often be chequered with sun and
showers well suited for growing grass and grain, the
autumns are not really sunny, but rainy. Hence 'dearth'
—of grain—must result from spoiled harvests. Not so for grass, unharmed by a wet autumn. Hay, if ensilage is not possible, can usually be gathered unharmed in sunny spells 132 of summer if cut in good time. Agriculturally, the climate favours 'grass' rather than grain.

132 Plentiful rainfall and coolness throughout the year do
137 not allow of complete neutral decomposition of vegetable 134 matter in the presence of air. Hence, year by year, a residuum of acid humus accumulates as peat on the ill-
drained surface. Prehistorically, more favourable phases
of climate permitted the growth of pines. Knowledge of present temperature and rainfall data would suggest the growth of broad-leaved deciduous trees, but these are absent except in the sheltered policies of Stornoway Castle.
About 1695 Martin noted 'hazel and birch' occurring on the south side of Loch Stornoway, but nowhere else on the Island. Even there trees are stunted as if pruned by the 132 wind.

The further inhibitive influence is indeed the wind

175 reclamation, which Dean Munro has described as he saw it.
311 Technique and economic return must be balanced against 185 the factors of nature. Although natural conditions are 182 difficult, they may not form a complete explanation of the relative arrest of reclamation in the nineteenth century;
for here separation from the agricultural advances of the Lowlands by barriers of mountain and sea caused the retention of unprogressive methods until the wave of agricultural improvement had spent itself by the middle of 198 last century. To this cause must be added other influences 171 contrasted to those leading to peasant advance in the rest of Western Europe: the political history of the Gaeldom after 1745, the revolution in land tenure and in the social life of the upper classes, the commercial, industrial and imperial development of Great Britain. All these factors help to explain the contrast offered to the Lews by western Denmark and western Norway, lands in which the soil and climate are comparable to those of the Island. Yet reclamation is proceeding, as on skinned land at Ness, where plots of ground have been steadily broken in by 226 hoe and by spade or plough.

226 Settlement and agricultural land are placed around 341 the coasts with their fishing grounds. In spite of what was often said—that the Lewisman is and has always been 311 primarily a fisherman—fishing alone is not enough to 241 account for this distribution, for the agricultural conditions on the whole are also best along the coasts, or were so for early settlers. As Stevens remarked, the light sandy 'machar' lands are there, and the fringe of partially improved soil close by; drainage is, on the whole, better, while shell-sand and sea-ware are to be had for manure.
241 The sea-ware also serves still as fodder, while one or two 824 sorts are sometimes cooked for human food; carragheen

241 (Chondrus), for example, is used as a thickener of milk to 824 make a cheese-like mould. Dulse is also plucked.[1]

272 The type of coastal form and vegetation alters the 182 relative importance of crofting and fishing—and the balance chosen is significant. (1) Where the coastline is smooth, 241 and leads inland from sandy machar with its clover to 226 sand-ameliorated 'black land' of smooth topography lending itself to ploughing, and the whole is backed by extensive pastures, the tract is relatively well-off for crofting but may be ill-placed for fishing. (2) Where the coast is either indented or salient with rocky loch-sides or steep promontory cliffs, a rolling or rocky topography, little shell sand, and (on the promontories) a shortage of pasture, it is ill-placed for crofting; but it is favourable to fishing either by virtue of sheltered sea lochs or of salient promontories, one or other side of which tends to give relative shelter to the fishing ground (chosen according to the direction of the wind, to avoid being blown on to a dangerous, lee shore).
Hence the site of a settlement has had much to do with the choice and opportunities for a communal vocation, from prehistory to the present time, as we shall see.

103 Significant local characteristics emerge in the names of 634 the ancient districts (inset with the Map of Settlement, Fig. 8). In the north is Ness (Norse, 'nose' or cape); 175 along the west is Cladach (Gaelic, a stony beach); while in South Harris the western shore is dominated with the eastern 'Bays'. 'Park', a sheep-run in the early nineteenth century, was the Norse 'East-fell'. In contrast, the parishes of Lewis centre on four churches, linked to 149 the road-system. This radiates from Stornoway in five directions: east, NE., NW., SW., and south to Tarbert,

173 [1] Pulling dulse (Rhodymenia) is one of the 'delights' of Iona as told in a poem long attributed to Saint Columba!

198 found in a Lewis village; but in the ten to twenty years
462 before 1939, the so-called 'Harris' tweed industry spread 283 enormously in Lewis, accompanied by the construction of 286 large spinning mills in Stornoway which supply yarn to 167 other weaving. One further activity, kelp-making, was 824 important for a time, although—not being strictly a traditional task—it is not represented in the upper graph, 198 nor yet in the lower one, having declined after 1825 and disappeared (in the Island) long before the present century.
Such was the annual rhythm of seasonal labour prevalent
during the last generation, and a hundred years before.

7. Rural Changes in Diet, Dress and Inter-marriage, and as Mobility: 1919–39

198 Many outward changes occurred in the twenty years
262 after the close of the First World War. Till the Island 146 was able to benefit from the commercial advances of the mainland, it had no adequate relief from the famines of early times; in recent years the quantity of food has been 198 rather more adequate. With the import of new foods, the consumption of vitamins at first declined: there was greater consumption of white bread from Glasgow and less of fresh vegetables (as ruined garden walls bear witness), and less, too, of cod-liver oil with the cessation of cod-244 fishing. Latterly, fenced gardens with vegetables and lettuce are providing vitamins, and fresh fruit (unobtainable even after 1919) is commonly on sale all the year round, so that a more rational dieting, when it can be afforded, is tending to recover lost ground and perhaps more.[1]

[1] E. P. Cathcart (et al.), Studies in Nutrition: an Enquiry into the Diet of Families in the Highlands and Isles: III, Lewis (Medical Research Council, Special Report, Series 241. H.M.S.O.), London, 1940.

000 landlords to improve passenger regulations at that time.

175 Wars brought enlistment in the Highland regiments, the Navy and Merchant Marine. Owing to migrations of 162 all kinds, males came to be outnumbered by females, then 902 as later (100 males to 114 females, 1931).[1] In Lewis in 167 1795 the proportion was 100 to 111, and in Harris 100 to
124. From this period onwards the 'export of men' con-175 tinued, modified by the reserve for war. Men were trained 162 for the Naval Reserve and Militia; and in 1900 for instance 202 800 men were training at Fort George and 2500 sailors were in the Reserve. The maintenance of a reserve for the Navy was one of the strongest pleas for the framing of the Crofters Act.

175 A new resource, important to the Islanders after 1750, 824 was kelp-making, the cutting and burning of seaweed upon 323 the shore, for use in the manufacture of alkali in the glass 388 and soap industries. From 1770 onwards the price rose, heightened first by an import duty, then by the Napoleonic 175 Wars. Estimating from the high prices, averaging over 824 £10 per ton from 1800 to 1823, Sir John Sinclair put the 435 value of the annual produce (20,000 tons) at £200,000. "It may appear surprising", he remarks, "how that sum could be of such importance to 80,000 people"; but he goes on to point out that this gave the additional cash needed to supplement their subsistence. But even when Sinclair wrote in 1825, the industry was in peril. Failure and loss occurred almost immediately after, with disastrous effect.

175 It is complained in the New Statistical Account that 133 owing to the summer-time work of kelp-making up to 1830, the people could give little attention to the crofts, so 511 that their extension must almost have ceased. Nor could

[1] In 1951 the ratio in Lewis was 100 males to 112 females, and in Harris, 100 to 110.

139 Alluvial soils have developed along the lower reaches of Ammnion Thoraghair and the Eristo river.

There are no trees apart from an occasional stunted rowan or willow - willows for general making grow still in some old garden enclosures. Hedges, too, are rare as, although 160 individual houses are often carefully sited, there is little need for cover and the townships are a whole are very exposed to westerly gales. The natural vegetation developed on the machair is of fine closely matted grasses with a good deal of natural clover - very similar to that found on chalk downland. On the peaty moorland the usual moor grasses mosses and heather are dominant, though little encroachment by bracken was noticed.

In Crowlista the strip layout of the crofts dates from a letting about 1850. (Figure 14) 361 in the new townships. laid out about 1841 (Figure 15) the majority of the crofts are less strip-like and do not run to the shore. Indeed in Ardroil and Timsgarry only five 127 out of twenty-two croft the shore and the rocky headlands with their machair are valuable parts of the common pasture. The six crofts in Carnish run from the shore at the foot of the saker up the flank towards the southwest and almost to its summit. They also have one or two small plots each on the machair.

Crofts in Ardroil are in one piece. An old cattle road forms the north west boundary 133 from this they rise, steeply in places, to undulating moorland just over 200' high. Numbers
5 - 8 Timsgarry are strips across the Eristo valley, rising eastwards to just over 170'.
2, 3 and 4 are allotted to make use of arable land on the lower slopes of Reach Valaiste.
The houses at Ardroil are crofts No. 1 Timsgarry and No. 1 Ardroil are the former farmhouses.

511 In Crowlista most of the crofts remain intact but in Carnish and Timsgarry all are fenced and many of the fences were being repaired or replaced in 1959. They are not open for common grazing during the winter. Patches of sown hay are fenced within each croft.

There are six recognized croft-holdings in Carnish; one is sub-let so that there are 142 only five "operative" units; two of these are not worked. One has been resumed by the proprietors and is being quarried as an extension of the main quarry between the township dyke and main road. In Ardroil each of the fourteen crofts is worked as a unit - though two carry sheep; in Timsgarry eight crofts are worked as seven units.

In contrast to the above, the old settlement of Crowlista has twenty-five recognized crofts but, by amalgamation and sub-letting these are worked as fourteen units. The Crowlista crofts are small - fourteen are 6.5 acres or less and of these only one is worked as a unit. Crofts as small as 1.5 acres and with a room of sight sheep can never have been intended to support a family: they are the result of sub-division in earlier generations; the remains of two piers and a curing house point to the importance of fishing in the past. Twenty-one men were employed in fishing boats about 1914. Sub-160 letting usually takes place between relatives; of some of the fourteen operative units are quite complicated. One example will suffice (croft numbers are here replaced by letters to prevent publication of personal matters):-

Crofts a, b, c and d are worked as a unit (although they are not adjacent). The tenant of a and b sub-lets c and d for grazing; he also helps with the work on yet a fifth croft. The present b is half of an original croft. West of the road the original croft is held in fixed tenancy between h and another croft, one part of this multiple "working" unit east of the road it has been divided into separate strips. The tenant lives on h.

361 Many of the original houses are ruined or used as byres. Figure 14 shows that new 491 houses have been built near the sites of the old ones but sometimes nearer the road - all 487 but four houses have easy access to the road. Crowlista is linked to the main road by 493 two miles of rough gravel side-road, and by a footpath and ford via Timsgarry. Vans call 205 but there is no Post Office, store nor bus service. At present water supplies are poor - 368 two wells only are in use.
494
312

Carnish is served by a short unmetalled road and all houses have good access to this. Water supply is good; water may be stored on the high part of the crofts and piped into the houses. The roads serving Timsgarry too, are unmetalled, but the main road is less than a mile away. This 'main road' from western Uig to Stornoway runs through Ardroil and all 366 except one of the houses not near to it have good drives suitable for lorries. Ardroil has 205 a store and Timsgarry a Post Office. One butcher's and two grocers' vans call weekly 453 and the travelling bank fortnightly. The thrice-weekly bus service to Stornoway (return 494 fare almost £1) ceased in 1960 because of competition from privately owned vans and cars.
491

241 The cultivated land is in strips usually large enough for horse or tractor work; the 231 smaller potato patches are hand dug. Few horses are kept now, Timsgarry, Ardroil, and 407 Carnish have one each and Crowlista none. Crofters hire these horses or tractors from Brenish or Enaclete. Oats and potatoes are the only crops grown in quantity, small patches of turnips are found and most crofters grow root vegetables. Kale was seen growing on one Ardroil croft; this was an experiment and seemed to be very successful. Bere and rye are no longer grown. Grass mixtures are sown in order to qualify for cultivation grants. Oats are undersown, or grass seed may be sown after the oat harvest, and left for hay for several years - some sown twelve years age was said still to be giving very good hay, but on the whole very little grass is sown in Crowlista. The acreage of natural grass cut for hay varies a good deal with the weather and the time and labour available. Crofters find this difficult to estimate as well, as often small irregularly shaped pieces are cut, and the figures, therefore, may not be accurate. (Appendix A).

One excellent garden showed that a rich variety of vegetables, fruit and flowers can be grown if adequate shelter is provided and the time for cultivation is available, but few crofters have the necessary knowledge or interest.

242 Lime, dung and artificial manure are widely used, though on some Crowlista crofts 134 the compound fertilisers were in use for the first time in 1959. Shell sand is used on the 824 crofts which have peaty soil. Although it is agreed that seaweed and dung are the ideal fertilisers for potatoes, seaweed is only occasionally used. It is becoming difficult to obtain locally and much heavy work is involved.

231 Each of the thirty-five operative units which carry any stock at all has a cow for domestic milk supply and manure. If the family is large or many visiting relations stay on the croft during the summer the calf has to be sold early; otherwise it will be reared until the cattle sales in September or May. Only eight crofters had two cows; fifty years ago four were commonly kept. Only thirteen of the units had young cattle other than calves. One crofter was rearing a kid for milk.

The bull supplied for these townships and Mangersta is an Aberdeen Angus which is wintered on the Ardroil machair.

233 It was sometimes difficult to obtain factual information about sheep and it is difficult to generalise. Operative units without sheep were those where no suitable labour was available. In a few cases crofters considered that sheep were 'not worth the trouble' - but others were building up their sheep stocks. Individual flocks ranged from ten to two

133 The 1,700 acres of common pasture stretch to the east and west of the crofts, across 231 the peninsula which terminates in Gallan Head, extending to those of Crowlista and Valtos 654 in the south. The whole coast is broken and rocky, the land inland is peaty, and Aird lacks the advantages of the machair land found further west. To the north of the village there is now an R.A.F. radar station on Rudha Caol, built on what was part of the common pasture. It dominates the landscape and makes a considerable difference to the life of the inhabitants.

361 The township, though isolated, is reached by a good road which leaves the main road
491 at the western end of Glen Valtos. Grocery vans call on Wednesday and Friday, a 493 butcher's van on Saturday, and the local people are also allowed to shop at the N.A.A.F.I. within the Camp. The road through the village approximately follows the line of the 100 ft. contour and all the houses are built directly on to the road, with byres, weaving sheds and other buildings behind, whilst in most cases hens are kept on the steeper slopes below 205 the road. Thus the settlement has far more of the appearance of an English village than 342 have most crofting townships, but there is no shop or post office. The majority of the houses are stone with slate roofs and fairly large, though some of them have been built for 354 more than fifty years. All have electric light and their own water supply and several have 312 modern byres.

427 There are ten crofts, as the enlargement of one of the original nine was subsequently 311 split off to make a separate croft. Of these, one tenant is an absentee and another an 491 elderly woman who does no cultivation. In both these cases, grazing is let to others so that there are actually eight operative units. The crofts are fenced in their upper portions, but in most cases the fencing does not extend down to the river and there is free access to the single concrete footbridge which spans the stream.

241 The only crops now grown are oats and potatoes and a few vegetables, with some sown grass; natural grass provides most of the hay crop. Lime and shell sand and artificial fertilisers are used; the two former particularly on the ground near the river where the cultivation is in narrow strips separated by drainage ditches and ploughing is done by horse.
407 Most of the cultivated land is on the gentler slopes behind the houses, where the use of a 242 tractor is possible. Before 1914 most of the land within the original turf dyke was culti-824 vated; bere was grown and ground at the mill for meal for barley bread. Seaweed was 231 extensively used as a fertiliser and most of the families kept eight or nine cows, so that there was a more plentiful supply of manure. Now, six of the families each keep one cow for domestic milk supply (two of the others each keep a goat). The township possesses no bull, but make use of those at Valtos or Ardroil.

233 On the other hand, the sheep soum is generally exceeded; instead of the entitlement of about 200, the total flocks grazed on the township pastures are approximately 500. The lambs are weaned early in August and put on Rudha Caol (Air Force use has not prevented this) and weddors are usually sold at the age of two or three years in Stornoway - many in October to reduce the numbers that must be pastured during the winter.

162 The total resident population of Aird consists of fifteen males and sixteen females.
Of these, twelve are over 65, six are aged 45 - 64, 11 are in the 15 - 44 age-group (there are only three married couples) and there are two children under 15. Nevertheless, most of them are complete families; only one person lives alone; no members are reported as 166 periodically working away, no men and only two women are permanently away. Neither has there been much emigration since 1939 - five women only have married out of the parish. The tenants of seven of the crofts are over the age of 65, the only one in the 15 - 44 age-group is a new-comer to the district and does little croft work.

Num

241
632

	Artifi
Breaclete	10
Croir	7
Hacklete	18
Kirkibost	25
Tobson	14
Earshader	6
Cruilivig	6
Lundale	5
Linshader	8
DISTRICT TOTAL	99

241 The fertilisers used in the 237 bladderwrack, and the tough
824 from the beach, though in the it was actually cut and towed rigid allocation of the rights of shore and possibly in Toba one. The actual gathering in application of sea-ware seem no careful selection of differe was merely gathered, mixed after sowing. It is reckoned Earshader and Lundale.

TABLE 30

Bernera District

ber of crofts using various fertilisers, etc.

cial	Dung	Lime	Seaweed	Shell sand	None
	10	4	1	-	-
	6	4	3	-	-
	18	12	14	-	1
	28	17	12	1	1
	16	10	4	1	3
	5	3	1	-	-
	5	5	5	-	-
	4	3	4	1	1
	7	-	4	-	-
	99	58	48	3	10

past were dung and sea-ware. The sea-ware, mainly tems of our weed, was, wherever possible, simply gathered more sheltered areas, particularly along Bernera Shore, n rafts to the crofts. There seems to have been little n sea-ware. In Breaclete each croft had its own stretch on, but elsewhere there seems to have been plenty for every-March was a long, strenuous and unpleasant task. The to have been rather rough and ready; certainly there was nt types for different crops and purposes: presumably it with dung to facilitate the rotting, and spread on the arable now that about 160 creels are necessary to the acre in 24/ Table 30 shews the present use of fertilisers and manure. It will be seen that [237] dung is still widely used but seaware is used in a minority of cases, particularly in Breaclete and Earshader. The first at least may be related to the various troubles [824] that have afflicted the township, and to the fact that several holdings are in effect very small with but plots of cultivation. This also relates to the large number in [134] Breaclete who use no form of fertiliser at all. Shell sand is neglected for reasons of inaccessibility: it is present on Little Bernera, and more particularly and of excellent quality, at Bosta. It is difficult to get from within the Island the large quantities of sand needed to qualify for the lime subsidy; it would be possible to get it from Bosta sands, there is a township road to within about a hundred yards of the beach, but the township is unwilling to open it to the wear and tear of lorry transport.

[654] Artificial fertilisers are increasingly used. The first consideration at the present is undoubtedly that certain amounts have to be applied in order to qualify for the ploughing subsidies. This has overcome a reluctance engendered by early over-enthusiastic applications of sulphate of ammonia. Lime, in the powdered form or as nitro-chalk, is commonly applied. There is undoubtedly considerable ignorance in the application and use of artificials: they are often used only because of subsidy conditions, and the crofter is surprised, though gratified, when they have any practical effect. Certainly most crofters have no programme of their own of regular balanced applications to crop land.
They need further advice.

The best balanced fertiliser policies are followed on the reseeded pastures, mainly because the crofters are careful to follow the directions they receive. They will follow advice in these matters when they can get it. In 1959 reseeding had been undertaken by 16 individuals, (20 acres) and by one township (Breaclete). Reseeding has definitely "caught on" as a means of improving the stock carrying capacity of a croft, with comparatively little outlay in labour or machinery.(1) It is, however, a new project: one may wonder whether the crofters will have sufficient pertinacity and funds to continue indefinitely. Reseeding is not cheap; it may cost £18 to £28 an acre and it is reckoned to cost £3 per annum to maintain. A considerable increase in output will have to be evident to make it worth the crofters' while to continue.

The methods of cultivation still include much spade digging, and some crofts depend [231] entirely upon this. Horse and plough, though basically unsuited to the cultivation of lazy [140] beds, can generally be used on most but the smallest beds, but the problem now is to get hold of a horse for ploughing. Hence - as in at least one instance at Croir - where it is impossible to hire a horse and the land is unsuited to tractor operation - the choice may well be between spade cultivation or no cultivation at all. The situation is not eased by the difficulty of hiring any one of the three tractors in the area at a time when the land is in the best condition. This is all doubly unfortunate because of the universality of the lazy bed; this might be regarded as a symbol of a backward or even a primitive agricultural system, but is, in fact, an excellent adaptation to natural conditions of climate and soil - so long as there is plenty of hand labour. It is only when labour becomes expensive, or difficult to obtain, that the lazy bed becomes uneconomical. This is, of cours, another way of saying that the lazy bed was the concomitant of a designedly self-sufficient agricultural system; if it is well kept up, the lazy bed is a good means of conserving soil vitality and maintaining adequate drainage. In the past the hollows between the beds were cleared every year or two and the soil spread on top. Thus lazy beds, particularly those on slopes, need a good deal of hand labour as well as heavy fertilization.

It is very difficult to see the answer to the cultivation problem now labour is no longer freely available: there could certainly be more small tractors and cultivators, but even they lead to the throwing together of lazy beds, and - except in places such as Croir where drains may be laid below the loam on clay, or in certain favoured sites like part of 4 Crulivig where the peaty soil overlies a firm gravel substratum - it is impossible both to throw the lazy beds together and maintain drainage. One is faced with all the difficulties of drainage of peat in an area of heavy precipitation. The hill lazy beds, though they are better drained, all too often have too little depth of soil to make cultivation by tractor a practical proposition.

(1) Editorial note: This remark has been borne out by events; in 1960 township schemes totalling 88 acres were thus improved.

24/ are usually all the potatoes. Between the road and Loch a' Bhaile and between the unmade road and Loch Shader on crofts 22 to 25 the land is probably more intensively cultivated than ever before, but strips now overgrown with rushes and coarse grasses, especially near the cemetery give an idea of the former extent of cultivation. The working of strips nearer the sea is no longer worth the labour involved. Crofts 22 to 25 are further divided by the small Loch Shader; no. 28 however makes good use of a small alluvial flat at the head of Loch a' Bhaile.

[237] Artificial fertilisers are in general use together with lime and dung. However some crofts were using seaweed, in particular nos. 1A, 1B, 1C, 4, 5, and 25 - i.e. those [824] crofts with easiest access to the sea. The seaweed is gathered in the New Year and trodden into the ground in the spring and apparently gives excellent results, but too much [423] labour is involved in carrying it to crofts in the centre of the township. Forty years ago each croft had rights to the "red" and "black" seaweed along the coast.

The crop acreages for the whole township will be found detailed in Appendix C (1)
The area of oats for each croft varied between 0.25 and 2.50 acres whilst the maximum for sown grass was 1.5 acres. The excellent crops of hay from sown grass would suggest its further extension, but unfortunately most of the land suitable for cultivation is already under oats and potatoes. The practice of undersowing oats was not particular widespread whilst only two small strips of oats-rye mixture were found. One crofter had also obtained good results in a small patch with seven different vegetables, whilst soft fruits are to be planted next year. The two sets of 'run-rig' crofts practise a fixed run-rig with the usual rotation of oats and grass on the strips.

231 In cattle stock (Appendix C) the township has 28 three year-old beasts, 2 one year-olds, and 24 calves. Only 6 registered occupied crofts have no cow, two crofters [178] have two cows each, and one crofter has two cows and two calves. The township has no bull however and the nearest is at Carloway or Callanish. With a much smaller numbe of cattle than that of thirty years ago there is now no need to make the annual summer visit to the shielings, a practice which died out in Tolsta Chaolais between 1920 and 1930 Pastures could however carry three times the present amount of cattle. The scuming 233 of 1 cow and 6 sheep per £1 rent is now apparently ignored. The approximate total of sheep for the township is 1,500 whilst for 1958 it was about 1,470. The total of lambs was approximately 520 but most crofters found it difficult to give an accurate figure since some might have been lost on the moor during the summer. The highest number of breeding ewes for any one croft was 112, of lambs was 34, and of other sheep was 26; five crofters, however have no sheep at all. Before 1939 a shepherd was employed by the township when the sheep were sent to the moor. The shepherd was usually a young boy just left school and was paid by each crofter according to the number of sheep the latter [231] sent to the moor. This has been discontinued but a levy, of 5s. per croft and 2½d. per head of sheep, is made for the upkeep of the township fence. Finally, almost every crofter keeps at least a dozen poultry.

221 The movement of stock over the grazing areas is summarised as follows:
231
233

(1) From November 13th to May 1st. cattle are usually in the byre, depending on the weather, and sheep can wander anywhere. Crofts should be open to commo grazing unless all the crofter's stock remains within his own croft boundary.

(2) From May 1st. to May 20th. sheep are in the outer park.

(3) On May 20th. sheep are sent to the moor.

(4) Throughout the summer cattle are in both the inner and the outer parks.

(5) On October 1st. the sheep are brought into the outer park.

(6) On November 13th. the sheep are brought into the inner park.

464 Details of population and employment will be found in Appendix D. It is a very [463] striking comment on the state of crofting in this township that only four persons are

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

POPULATION AND EMPLOYMENT

H. A. Moisley

rowth and decline.

In its demography as in so many other aspects the parish of Uig is characteristic of e Hebrides in general rather than of Lewis in particular. Throughout the Hebrides the te eighteenth century saw a rapid rise in population followed, in the early nineteenth entury, by clearances, emigration and decline (Fig. 44). The growing population, stained by the newly-introduced potato, found employment in kelp-making. Lewis made ttle kelp compared with the Uists and such as was made came largely from Uig, i.e. om Loch Roag; consequently, whilst the population of Barvas only increased by 15% etween 1755 and 1801, that of Uig increased by 58%, (c.f. North Uist 60%, South Uist 5%). Clearances and emigration reversed this trend in population after 1821 (Mull and orth Uist), after 1831 (Islay), and after 1841 (Skye, Harris, North Uist and Barra), a eversal which was not experienced in Lewis except in Uig (see Part I, Figure 8). hereafter, in the outer, but not in the inner Hebrides, growth was resumed, to reach ew maxima in 1881 (the Uists) and 1911 (Lewis, Harris and Barra); Uig, alone of Lewis arishes, reached its maximum population in 1891. Subsequent loss of population has een particularly severe, as may be seen from Table 46 and Figures 8 and 45.

TABLE 46

Loss of population, since maximum, to 1951

	Date of maximum	Loss as percentage of maximum
Uig	1891	41.2%
Lochs	1911	34.4%
Barvas	1911	26.5%
Stornoway	1911	18.6%

(Stornoway Burgh is excluded)

The early on-set of decline makes Uig somewhat comparable with the Uists, where inal decline set in after 1881, rather than with Barra and Harris, where growth continued until 1911. This may be connected with the vicissitudes of fishing, particularly in outh Uig where, by the 1890's, the annual Fishery Reports comment repeatedly on the ecay of great line fishing and of the dried white fish trade. Re-settlement of crofters on arm land in Uig in the present century again affords a parallel with the southern Outer ebrides rather than with the rest of Lewis; as elsewhere, it failed to arrest the decline lthough it did bring about a re-distribution which afforded welcome relief in the more vercrowded townships. But decline still continues; the loss appears to have been around 0 per annum in the 1950's (table 47) compared with 30 in the 1930's where there was some

[TEXT CONTINUED ON PAGE 140]

[Entire]

Both to found near the shore and hope round the three hills nearly up to the road, pre-historic and medieval to Norse and more recent settlements have been found in the area of each. At one time,here was grown on the hoary hill. There is poor accumulation on the soil and the rock is exposed on the hill. Sheep and Highland cattle are reared on the hill and there are some cultivations on the straggling hamlet. Some of the houses are of very ancient date and vulgar predominates on rough land. Though there are many hard-beds seen down to course of the hamlet. Some of the houses are predominate.

Culzean is the about township in Park. In 1841 Blackhouse came from Blackhouse and Culzean. In 1841 there were 12 in the township, 1881 there were 12 in the township, 1891 there were 12, in 1901 there were 12, in 1911 there were 12, in 1921 there were 12, in 1931 there were 12, in 1951 there were 12, in 1961 there were 12. In 1951 there were 12 in the township. In 1961 there were 12. In 1951 there were 12 in the township. In 1961 there were 12. In 1951 there were 12 in the township. In 763 relived and shared. The person's exact age and the 764 identity of his closest kin are discussed. A wan is 765 immediately dispatched to bring benches from the church, 766 which are set up throughout the house of the deceased, and over the next few days a constant stream of visitors 767 fills the benches. The visitors bring tea, sugar, biscuits and other provisions for the days and nights of communal trial. The high chairs, "house of watching," as this wake is called, continues until the day of the funeral.

In the past, persons sat up all night with the body.
768 "It took so long to get a coffin. You didn't want to 769 go in and find half the face eaten away by rats." This custom is dying out, but lights are usually left on in the room in which the coffin is placed. When an all-night wake occurs, the atmosphere is one of relaxed story-telling and the and laughter of reminiscence.

At least two nights of "waking" usually precede the 770 funeral. During this time, groups of willagers attend 771 the high chairs. Grief is expressed throughout the 772 network in which the dead person was enmeshed. On rare occasions when a single night precedes burial, the house is filled to overflowing.

Throughout the day and evening, waves of newcomers enter, and other sitters slip quietly away. Kinsmen of

ST KILDA

and to show their friends at home, that they had braved the 773 hazardous Atlantic seas to visit St Kilda on the very edge of the 774 world. The tours were charitable, but this brought a psycho-775 logical evil in its wake. In 1886, Robert Connel wrote: "One 776 cannot be long on the island without discovering the great moral injury that tourists and sentimentalists and yachtsmen, with pocketful of money, are working upon a kindly and simple people." It was estimated that the islanders collectively derived a profit of 5s from each of the 200 or more tourists who arrived during the short summer.

The new influx of cash into a community which required money as an exchange commodity because the original native produce was insufficient to sustain life, hastened the decline of kin-to be self-supporting. The numbers of seabirds slaughtered steadily fell; parafin oil replaced the traditional bird oil in St Kildan lamps. The need for daily work, to toil in fellowship with others, was dissipated; the islanders could purchase most of the food they required, provided communications with the mainland were maintained. The population was in any case dwindling, and St Kildans became more aware of 'the other life' available on the mainland of Britain.

Finally, on a misty summer's day in August 1930, at a cost to the nation of little under £1,000, St Kilda was left to be cars and keeping of the changeless Atlantic. It is now preserved by the National Trust for Scotland as a crumbling monument to a small human kingdom, a kind that has been repeated, and will be repeated, in other small communities who cannot argue out the case for their survival in terms of economic viability. The island is now occupied by military personnel in connection with the Hebridean rocket range on South Uist.

St Kildan were described by Dean Monro, in 1549, as 'simple, poor folk, scarcer learned in any religion'. In 1698, Martin Martin published A Late Voyage to St Kilda. He went there in the company of a minister who had been summoned to the island to denounce a certain false prophet who had risen among the 180 inhabitants claiming he was an emissary of St John the Baptist. Martin found, as did later visitors, that the island economy and the quality of its life were closely dependent upon its birds

THE OTHER ISLANDS

even to the extent that the St Kildans used their observations of the flights of birds both as compass and as omen for good or evil.
Martin spoke of the islands with amusement and admiration.
indicates that the community was backward in some ways: they were illiterate, and wondered naively at the newcomers and their manners. 'The inhabitants of St Kilda are much happier than the generality of mankind, as being the almost only people in the world who feed the sweetness of true liberty.'

In 1841, when the local tourist trade had hardly started, HMS Flirt sailed from Greenock with food to relieve hardship
among the St Kildans, and an officer of the Highland & Island Agricultural Society on board reported that 'Tobacco was what they invariably asked for.' The ordinary diet of the island consisted of, for breakfast, porridge and milk; for dinner, potatoes and the flesh of fulmar, or mutton and, occasionally, fish; for supper, porridge when meal was plentiful. Supplies from Uist from March onwards, also formed a staple food. Tea was taken once or twice a week and the islanders were reported to be 'rather fond of it'. There were eighteen inhabited houses, sixteen of which had tiles roofs, two being thatched huts. The sixteen new cottages had been erected about 1863, and are certainly much superior to the inhabitations of the same class of tenants anywhere in the Western Isles'. All the cottages furnished, peat was used for fuel and there were two watches and one clock on the island. There were some seventy-five islanders; most of the men were old, and only two of them married, with twelve spinsters and twelve bachelors from. All read the Gaelic Bible. The men were mostly tailors, shoe-makers and weavers; every house had a loom. They made all their own clothing, the men also making the women's dresses, and a good deal of blanketing and tweed cloth was made and sold. Nearly every house had a spinning wheel and a large pot in which the yarn was dyed. The women were expert knitters. Each deer-stalker, and other employees at shooting lodges for at the rate of 9d per head; these charges were usually paid in kind.

Feathers of the sea fowl formed the principal export of the island. The factor paid 6s per stone of 24 lb for black feathers; and 5s per stone for grey. For these he received, in Edinburgh or 311 indication of their worth. As above, the period is c. 1937-312 1938. The Island's increased sheep stock is shown in Appendix II (ii) (a) to 1953.

The Lewis and Harris pastures carry on an average about one ewe to 9 or 10 acres, that is, one ewe or hogg to 4 acres in June (the month of the agricultural returns).
A good mainland grazing like Glen Shiel carries one ewe to 6 acres, while poorer grazings like Kintail and Fare carry one ewe to 10 or 14 acres respectively. Nowhere, however, can the rough grazing support the newly weaned ewe lambs (or hoggs) throughout the winter. Lambs have either to be brought to the enclosed 'low ground' (of which there is never enough to supply both grass and arable fields) or sent to the Lowlands in summer and brought back in spring, at a total cost of about 10s. each before 1939. In Lewis, for lack of grass, there is considerable loss in winter among the crofters' ewe-stocks. Constructive measures for the future must be based on an increased supply of winter feed.

The gure consist of red deer, grouse and hares, while salmon and trout are fished in stream and loch. The deer range over Harris, Park and the Uig hills, but are seldom seen south of Achmore. They are of small stature and size, and before 1939 the average number of heads for the year totalled about 190 stags and 80 hinds. It is not known when they were introduced. In the south there may be a certain amount of 'deer stealing', as in most deer forests surrounded by crofts, in spite of a score of keepers and deer-stalkers, and other employees at shooting lodges.
Grouse are relatively scarce compared with those on drier mainland moors. Mountain hares have multiplied since their introduction in 1853, when, it is said, the first hare, seen near a village towards evening with its white winter coat, was thought to be supernatural.

versions to suggest the significant poetic form of the original.

"The Clipping Blessing", being addressed to creatures,
is simple in thought and form, and its opening may be rendered:

O come back woolly, though now you're shorn,
By May, may each a lamb have borne,
May lovely Bride you endow,
And Mary fair sustain you now!

It goes on to beg protection from wolf and bear, as well as fox, hoodie crow and eagle, and closes with the opening couplet.

From start to finish the work must be true. The wool is from the sheep they reared—it is not got by 'thigging', as a landlord takes 'gifts' from poor tenants; the yarn is sound with no odds of thread from worn-out cloth; the web is their very own, not the clergyman's due (Carmina, 110, 113, 19). Only so can the goodwife's web be beautiful, and blest. Thrums nor odds of thread, my hand never kept nor shall keep. Every hue in the bow-of-the-shower has gone through my fingers beneath the cross.
The weaver, with her household carts and her barns shown her, to be clear in mind must be calm in heart as, thread by thread, she prepares her warp. To start, she chooses Saint Columba's Day.

Thursday of blessings
For warping and washing.
Thursday of blessings
To number . . .

Ward away the evil eye!
Or evil will, or ought away.
Consecrate, O Lord on High,
My Loom . . .

F. The Decline in Self-Sufficiency

Until the second world war, when weavers began to earn larger sums of money for their weaving, the township was relatively self-sufficient. The land was more thoroughly cultivated, and the village boasted a number of local specialists. These specializations were linked with particular family lines. Certain families were blacksmiths; others were shoemakers, joiners, cobblers, or midwives. As generations succeeded one another, occupations were not thrown open in the competitive, individualistic way of the mobile city.
Certain occupations were seen to be "naturally" linked with particular families. Sometimes it was said that persons of a particular family (which might include quite a number of collateral lines) had inherited characteristics which suited them for particular occupations.

"Tagg was an expert bone-setter. He wasn't a doctor at all, but he could set bones better than any doctor.
And he used to let blood, when people were dizzy with threatening strokes, or had pneumonia. It was in the people. He was a direct descendant, through his mother, of the Murrays of South Shawbott, the people who had the mill and were the blacksmiths for generations. He got that ability from them."

Whatever the rationalization, cobbler fathers begot cobbler sons. The present postmaster's grandfather was the first postmaster in Shawbott, and when help is needed in delivering the mail it is the postmaster's first sons who are likely to help out. As late as the 1950's, the township still had its own undertaker, a man who had learned from his father the art of laying out and dressing the body but who didn't like the job very much and was happy enough to turn it over to an undertaker who trevelled from Stornoway.

The island has had a veterinarian, based in Stornoway, for the past 30 years or so. Earlier, certain blacksmiths and farmers treated ailing livestock when the crofters needed them. For human ailments, there were herbs cures by plant and spell.

The man who was the last village blacksmith died about long ago. His smithy was in the center of the village.
The house and smithy were surrounded by buildings with corrugated iron roofs that were once estate houses for the men who worked the experimental farm established by Sir James Matheson in what is now New Shawbott. The blacksmith was also a shopkeeper and butcher. As a blacksmith, his work was principally shoeing horses and making harrows and peat-cutters, which he did with the aid of men and sometimes two apprentices. One of his used on different occasions, for example, to discourage deviant behavior or certain marital alliances. Any sign of physical or emotional disability in someone planned to get married invites an attempt by other villagers to discourage an alliance. According to a Gaelic proverb,

"If you want to be praised, die; if you want to be criticized, marry (in the strong or whole). Inside the village, the villagers consider not only the behavior of the person but of his ancestors. The individual is perceived as belonging to a family unit which through many generations has manifes certain physical and behavioral traits. Traits of behav
such as shyness, heavy drinking, stealing and tightfisteedness are interpreted as hereditary traits. "It's the blood (Tha e 'n t-sròl)" people say. Members of particular occupations are also associated with families Stornoway, which is not so "urban" as to have a constant turnover of population, contains many examples of occupations passed down through generations.

In Chapter 3 I mentioned the development of several groups in the crofting township which seem to be in conf with the township as a strongly bounded unit. Those who keep only sheep have come to blows with those who ke both sheep and cattle; and a distinction between crofte
and non-crofters may be seen. Many persons have prefere

Table III reveals that there are 177 agricultural units with a souming; ten units are crofts in Glengravir without a souming and the remainder of the 219 unit's have no grazing rights. From this Table, it is clear that full stocking and overstocking increase with the size of the croft: the units of ten acres and over, on the basis of stock carry, would appear to be the most intensively worked. In all, just over half of the units take up their full souming. Table IV gives an analysis of employment ancillary to croft work for 141 of the 219 units and it would appear that neither ancillary employment nor age is significantly related to the intensity of croft working. Table V points to the fact that more full-time crofters are to be found on the larger units but that less than one in four of the younger and more active men are full-time crofters. Tables III, IV and V underline the fact that the larger units are also the more successful and it is significant that the larger units are almost all on the better land in the agricultural townships. The average size of holding in the agricultural townships is nine acres, compared with less than eight acres in the fishing townships, where the land is much poorer and the cultivable area much more restricted.

The trends in agriculture are illustrated by Tables VI and VII. The Crofters' Commission made a survey of the crofts through the medium of Estate Factors in 1883; from Table VI it is evident that the number of cattle was much higher at that time and that the cattle-sheep ratio in the selected townships was 1:3 as compared with 1:25 in 1958. Table VII gives agricultural statistics for the parish of Lochs as a whole; separate figures for Park are not available. Since 1913, radical changes in the crop and stock patterns have taken place; bere (Hordeum vulgare) has disappeared as a crop, and sown grass and permanent grass for hay have since 1947 become the leading crops. Horses have all but disappeared, and the cattle-sheep ratio has risen from less than 1:4 to 1:39 for the whole parish. Since 1938, cultivation in Lochs Parish has declined by 36 per cent. Large areas of lazy-beds, no longer cultivated, are visible landscape signs of these changes; seaweed, the sine quae non for lazybed cultivation, is no longer carried to the upper parts of the crofts. In fact, many of the crofts no longer use seaweed as a fertiliser.

From the foregoing account, it is clear that there are two major agricultural problems in Park, the lack of sufficiently large crofts with good arable land and an insufficiency of common grazing; these deficiences bring in their train the problem of overstocking, and the existence of uneconomic holdings.

The more progressive crofters, significantly resident on the better crofts of the agricultural townships, have shown how croft land can be improved by re-seeding and sowing down to grass, practices which could be fruitfully extended throughout Park. In addition, several townships by co-operative effort, have reseeded small areas of the commons grazings with splendid results.

However it is clear that it is not possible for 219 viable agricultural units to be maintained on the present crofting area. The optimum size of croft which could maintain a family is a moot point, for the location and situation of a croft and the quality of the land and common pasture would all have to be taken into account in making an assessment.

This problem was referred to a practical agriculturalist who was asked to state what size of croft and number of stock would be required to provide an annual income of £300, excluding croft benefit (milk, eggs and potatoes consumed on the croft) and any costing for labour. To fulfil these conditions, one of the fishing townships was carefully analysed, and the expert came to the following approximations, assuming that the rules of good husbandry were in force after the croft had been brought up to a good standard of cultivation and re-seeding had been carried out where possible on the outrun and Common Pasture, and provided there was no overstocking, and that present favourable subsidies and prices continue:-

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

185 Leverhulme grasped the problem in this fresh way, comple-
311 menting his first policy of the sea for the seamen by one 433 of the land for the landsmen, he could cheerfully have allowed the Government to honour their promise to divide 159 the farms, and thus he would have brought peace to all.
In giving up the farms he would merely have had to reconcile himself to additional imports of fresh milk from Easter Ross, at an extra cost of a penny or two per pint. To do Leverhulme justice, experiments on peat were begun (about 1920) upon a small scale, partly, it is understood, as a result of Hardy's report. Yet in failing to make this reclamation an integral part of his plans, in refusing to adapt himself to promises given and to agree to the wishes of many applicants, Leverhulme of the Lews allowed peace to be wrecked. Why he should have stopped work in Lewis in order to remove to Harris, is not clear. There is nothing to show that crofter-fishermen in the creeks of Lochs and other fishing tracts of Lewis believed less firmly in fishing than their fellows in ' the Bays ' of South Harris.[1] Nor was there extensive land for dairying in Harris. To make a second attempt to found a centre, involving fresh expense, at Obbe (on the exposed south-west coast), a much less favourable point on the Island than Stornoway, was to court disaster, not to pilot his way through the difficulties of falling markets to success.

185 Leverhulme, it is true, had seen one side of the ' all-311 round ' policy required : the need for a plot of land for the (114) Lewis fisherman and his family. In Hardy's words, " A man's choice of the sea should not prevent his having ' a

[1] In his father's biography, the second Viscount suggests that there was
(828) a difference of character between the (unreasonable) men of Lewis and the (reasonable) men of Harris. The assertion is unsupported by the facts.
(829) There were raids in Harris, too, comparable to any in similar tracts of Lewis, but in neither were they important.

829

829 ETHNOSOCIOLOGY--social philosophy; interpretations of the society's charter; native ideas about social relationships and social structure; concepts of society (e.g., social contract); notions about culture and cultural change; economics and political behavior (e.g., mercantilism), racial inequality; etc. See also:

Population policy	168	Criminology	674
Sociocultural trends	178	Penology	681
National character	181	Welfare policies	746
Social planning	185	Theological systems	779
Development of nationalism	619	Missionary programs	797
Constitution	642	Philosophical systems	812
Principles of taxation	651	Development of scientific anthropology, sociology, and economics	815
Policies of government regulation	656	Educational policies	871
Political movements	668
Jurisprudence	671

22

195 Hamelts or clachans
241 (small clustered settlements) were broken up, and 361 houses were isolated on strips of land in linear,
198 single-street villages.

114 Gray (1952, 1957) argues that the main factor
198 behind the reorganization of land use in the Highlands was the progressive, individualistic, laissez-faire ideology of the 18th century. Grant (1930: 97) attributes the reorganization to the high demand for cereals which existed during the Napoleonic wars.
177 Highland landlords, who were very much in contact 241 with the society of the Scottish Lowlands, were influenced by agricultural practices there. The trend to change run-rig, which had once dominated the whole of Scotland, to fixed, compact holdings began in the Lowlands.

According to the "progressive" ideology of the 423 time, the giving of land to individual farmers in much 425 larger pieces than they had previously held would • 829 serve to stimulate agricultural development and give rise to a class of capitalist farmers. To give land to a relatively few people, however, meant the removal of a large number of tenants who had hitherto been able to survive under the system of run-rig.

38

178 "The cattle give too much trouble." A smaller scheme
311 is grazed only by sheep. On the schemes where mixed 232 grazing is practiced, a number of conflicts arise between 233 those who have only sheep, and those who have cattle as (578) well. To accommodate different demands, one township scheme was divided with a fence; cattle were put in for a month in one part, and then shifted to the second part. The sheep were then brought into the first half.
All stock had to be removed from the scheme a month before the lambs were weaned, so that all worm eggs and other harmful elements in the dung of animals previously present would have time to die. What was once used for a single purpose by everyone now has to be divided.

"I paid one pound a head to put cattle on the
(435) reseeding," says a man named Iain. "Now I have to move
(578) them off already. Those sheep people want it for themselves. I won't use it if they're going to be like that.
Next year I'll have the use of two crofts and my apportionment. And now that I have my own tractor I (409) can put a load of sand at the bottom of the croft to
(242) make the grazing better."

According to another person, who also keeps cattle
311 on the reseeding, "Some people want to move their live-233 stock on and off the schemes when it suits them, like Iain, 232
• 829

39

311 who wanted to keep his bullock on the reseeding for 233 another week because he wasn't ready to sell it; but 232 he should have known the rules. Some people want to • 829 keep both cattle and sheep on at the same time, although the agricultural advisor says cattle should go on first, because sheep go for shorter grass.
Other people want to put on twice as many sheep as those who have both cattle and sheep. When they stop keeping cattle, they think they're not getting a proper share of the reseedings.

"The Crofters Commission wanted communal township schemes. But people have different demands. It's better to go for an apportionment. You can do what you want with your own land."

The number of township members participating in 178 the communal schemes is diminishing to the point where 311 it is less expensive, and much less subject to conflict 423 arising over differences in stock-keeping, to invest in 476 individual holdings of land rather than try to sustain communal practices.

173 "Then the tweeds got 217 going and the barley took too much trouble; so they had 829 no use for the mill."

173 A 60-year-old woman remembers, "They depended on the 242 potato and fished a lot. I was raised on oatcakes, barley bannocks, and salt herring. There were no vans and no school canteens when I was young; you had to carry your [264] own 'piece' to school. We had porridge with fresh milk for breakfast, oatcakes and butter for lunch. Dinner was at 4:00, of potatoes and fish and milk. We had meat maybe once a week. My father poached a lot. We ate the heads [251] and the roe of the salmon fresh, and salted the rest."
Once among the cleanest, Hebridean teeth now vie with 164 British cities in extent of decay. It is not uncommon for 759 a child in his first year of school to have six teeth pulled by the travelling dentist.

261 Various customs associated with food which exist today 272 reflect the days when fare was meager. Tea-drinking is [171] omnipresent in Britain, but in the islands it has 272 special significance. The taking of tea constitutes 574 the denouement of a visit, and almost always occurs when someone steps over someone else's threshold. To refuse [574] tea has some of the connotations of an insult; and to take only tea, without food, is to have a copan falamh (empty cup).

512 The cattle
233 knew their own sheilings; sometimes
825 they came back before milking time and stuck their heads [234] inside. They stood outside the sheiling at night, and that's how you can tell where a sheiling once was, even though the walls have fallen, by the rich green grass.
Calves were born during the summer. A hollow was scooped 233 out in the peat, and lined with turf and moss. People
[422] had as many as four or five cows. It was like Switzerland, only we didn't have the bells on the cows. There was lots [292] of milk, fresh thick cream and crowdie (clotted sour [242] [234] milk); the old people knew how to make cheese.

233 "The moor was very eerie at night, with the sound of 321 the birds. There were only a few hours of darkness
[513] anyway, and I'm sure we didn't get much sleep, but somehow
we were always fresh. It was the air, the moor air is more health-giving. The air is different there. Ill
people benefited from the change. Sometimes a person with TB would stay out there all summer. The air is heavy
by the sea.

805 "There was no sense of time the way there is today.
233 If you got lost in the snow or fog, you followed the cows
221 home. You had all summer to take home the peats, to work
829 the croft, to harvest the corn. There wasn't a world, [178] there was only ourselves. That has changed since the war.

233 "You got away from village life when you went to 829 the sheiling. The youngsters ran wild. Everyone talked more freely somehow. It didn't feel like a Sunday out 233 there—the minister couldn't see that far. Only the 883 young men and women in their late teens or 20's were out at the weekends. They would send the younger ones home.
They came out in their good clothes, from Saturday night to Monday morning. Groups of young people walked out and back together, the girls in one group and the boys in [533] another, joking and teasing. They sang the old songs and learned new ones from each other. Some were good at making up songs. You wouldn't believe how many people could sleep together in a single sheiling. It was a [829] heaven on earth. Everybody was one family. The hills were filled with the sound of voices."

233 Not every family in the village went to the sheilings.
Some families had enough land within the township to graze their cattle. But they usually went out at the weekends, for the fun and company.

237 One of the most important products of the cow was 241 not milk but dung, which was used to keep the poor land productive. Because people did not have the enriched 231 animal feeds available today, a cow might not have a calf, 234 and thus did not give milk, for four or five years.

284 Despite these aids and incentives, parents do not 288 encourage their children to weave. The weavers them-
443 selves describe the job as dull, offering no security
868 and no possibilities for advancement.
593
828 [461] Referring to her young son, a mother says, "By the time he's old enough to weave, the tweeds will have failed." Another mother says, "I want him to learn some trade, if he's intelligent enough. I don't want him to stay here. The tweed is so uncertain." "There's no future in it," says the father of another young boy,
"I definitely wouldn't want him to be a weaver. It would be good if he went in for engineering."

463 The histories of the weavers reveal many examples
464 of shifting occupations. Weaving often alternates with 286 work in the local mill, which is also relatively unspecialized. The Shawbost mill must tolerate this unstable labor force, as labor is difficult to find.
[166] Eldest sons tend to leave the island for more stable, [593] permanent jobs, leaving the croft and the loom to their younger siblings. Table V[1] shows the number of male weavers in each age group.

288 The fact that Shawbost has the same age structure
461 as the rest of rural Lewis (see Table II)[2] and less 162 unemployment signifies that weaving has not served as 166 an adequate incentive to keep young people on the island.

[1] [See p. xi--Analyst]
[2] [See p.xiii--Analyst]

241 grazing land and he could not transfer such property in 175 a will. Similarly a crofter had no right to his buaile, 423 and could not formally protest if another crofter sought to apportion this land for his own use (see Chapter 2 [629] for a discussion of apportionments). But in both situations, informal understandings superseded legal rights.

241 Various legislative acts which followed the 1886
657 act focussed attention on the crofter. Various matters
175 associated with crofting are handled by a Crofters Commission. Crofters have access to grants and loans [554] to improve land and build fences and homes. They may [498] buy goods at low prices in a nearby cooperative store.
As crofts were fenced, land around the townships became scarce and non-crofters found it difficult to keep large numbers of cattle and sheep.

241 Within recent years it has become possible for non-178 crofters to gain title to the small plots of land on 422 which their houses are built. Some loans are available [142] to them for building houses. Non-crofters have access [554] to the various subsidies available to all agriculturalists such as the subsidies for raising hill sheep and beef 829 cattle. There is still the feeling, however, that crofters have rights which non-crofters do not have
and that in conflicts over scarce goods crofters have

241 178 423 829 the edge over non-crofters. "Squatters can do what they like, cut peats, put sheep and cattle on the common grazing, but this is a privilege, not a right."

The clerk of a grazings committee says, "When it comes to an argument between a crofter and a squatter, the crofter always wins. A squatter has rights only with the grazing committee's permission. If one crofter disagrees, the squatter is out."

241 423 578 A squatter muses bitterly, "I wanted crofting status because I wanted to get a Department of Agriculture grant to build a house. I work on the peat road; I go to all the fanks. But at a township meeting, they didn't want me to get crofting status. They were afraid I would start grabbing peat banks or apportionments in the common grazing or something. There's your brotherly love for you."

311 654 4. Subsidies: In the section entitled "Changing Land Use" I suggested that the availability of subsidies has encouraged a more specialized investment in agricultural activites.

654 829 241 The villagers are keenly aware of outside institutions which give money. They speak to each other about forms which they receive from the Department of Agriculture and the Crofters Commission, in much the same way as they are curious about the number of tweeds which another

654 829 241 person has. The gigantic bureaucracy of government agencies is mysterious and unpredictable. One can never be certain when or for what reason another economic increment may come. "I used to throw away a form from the Department of Agriculture until I found out from somebody that you could get money with it. You say you're planting so much of your land in oats, and later you fill out another form saying you didn't get a very good return, and they send you a deficiency payment."

241 242 654 178 For some crofters, the requirements of the subsidies have affected the extent and techniques of agricultural activity. For example, one man used to work his land in the way that his ancestors learned would bring best results: lazybeds were aligned in strips that would drain well and catch the sun, and stones were left in the soil to capture the sun's warmth and thereby facilitate the growth of potatoes. Now he has merged the separate strips, cleared the stones, and divided the land into units that allow him easily to calculate how much he has used for what crops, because to be eligible for a particular grant, a certain percentage of arable land must be ploughed with grass seed and rotated with other crops.

241 654 The Department of Agriculture and the Crofters Commission often overlap in their subsidy-giving functions.

654 241 Subsidies for fertilizer and for lime to neutralize acidic soil also originated during wartime, when the government was trying to control scarce materials. Agricultural subsidies in the form of cropping grants and improvement grants are available both to crofters (from the Crofters Commission) and to others of the same economic status as crofters (from the Department of Agriculture). Most of the improvement grants are for fencing (rather than drainage or other improvements). To receive a cropping grant, a farmer must sow one-third of all tilled acres in grass, and apply three hundred-weights of fertilizer to each acre planted with oats, barley or wheat. Lewis is in the third or poorest category of agricultural land designated by the Department of Agriculture, and receives the highest rate of subsidy (L11 per acre, as opposed to L5 per acre for good land).

For some people, even the incentive of subsidies is not sufficient to stimulate them to farm or keep live-stock. "It's too expensive to work the croft. There's not enough return to make it worth it. The Department of Agriculture gives you a subsidy for fertilizer, but it still costs you something if you're not doing much of anything else with the land. The croft is a sideline; it helps you keep busy; you grow some of your own food. But you've got to make a living some other way."

654 241 829

233 One crofter who gets subsidies says that he keeps 241 sheep and ploughs the land to feed them only as a "hobby."
654 He uses the word "hobby" because, in comparison with the 523 income he gets from working regularly in the mill, he 434 does not get a good return for his investment.

233 A crofter who has been weaving all his life says
288 that the income he receives from his cattle and sheep
434 does not compare with the income he receives from weaving.
654 Subsidies are counted as an important part of the income he receives for the livestock. "Last year I got L28 for a heifer—not a very good price, but then I got an L11 829 subsidy as well." He does not believe that anyone could 434 make a living from crofting alone. "You say some of the 241 people in Uist are able to make a living at it? They might be getting social security as well, they're that aly. Anyway, members of the family are probably sending money home from sea or from the mainland. You need a weekly wage. If the tweeds disappear, the only thing a man could do would be to go to sea." (See Appendix C for an example of the balance sheet of a croft.)

233 A few families work seriously at rearing cattle for 463 sale in local or town markets. These are usually composed of several male adults, of which one or more work in the mill or do weaving and someone is largely responsible for croft work. Most of these people look

233 Most of these people look 829 askance at the idea of Britain joining the European 648 Economic Community. "If the Common Market comes, that 654 means no more subsidy for livestock. That'll mean the end of crofting. They'll get good prices for their beef, but feeding stuff will be very expensive."

"I don't know much about the Common Market, but I'm against it. They'll do away with the subsidies.
If it weren't for the subsidies, most people just wouldn't bother with cattle and sheep; it wouldn't be worth their while, the feeding stuff is getting so [246] expensive. The people here used to take in a hundred bags or so of potatoes to feed the stock. But the climate is so bad you don't know what kind of a return you're going to get, and the work is so hard it just isn't worth the bother, so people prefer to buy feeding stuff. And if you spend more on feeding your animals than you get for them, what's the use? Of course we've been here all our lives. It would be hard to leave. But if the weaving goes—"

"I was talking to my cousin in Glasgow. He says the cattle are going to be the big thing with the Common Market. The price of beef is going to go up. I don't think people here can keep cattle if they don't get the subsidy. They can't keep enough cattle, and they can't be sure of a good price every year."

181
621 People prefer to give money 10
178 in exchange for car rides or other help, including pea
437 cutting, because "than you're independent." Friendshi 829 are still weak, relative to friendships in urban 572 settings. Most information which is shared between 62
[369] individuals rapidly enters the pool of communal gossip
[521] Although many persons emphasize the importance of mutu
[476] aid in defining a friend, some emphasize the ability t confide and keep secrets.

621 Today many of the younger villagers do not know
178 their relatives to the extent that their elders did.
602 In one family, a girl who was about to get married had [585] to ask her brother, who was the only one of the siblin [596] interested in kinship connections, whom to invite to t wedding. It is still useful to retain an inventory of 602 one's relatives. "I have cousins in Glasgow and 484 Australia that I've never seen, but if I ever go there [178] I'll have a place to stay." With the increase in transportation and income, more islanders are taking brief trips away from the island. During these trips, they almost always stay with relatives.

859 It is frequently said that children are now "chee
579 less inclined to run errands and obey orders meekly, a 829 that they prefer to watch television or read books by 178 themselves to playing with each other.

1: Parman E-4,5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Shawbost

wife was religiously converted a few years later. They have no children. Neilie Leoid occasionally goes to the hotel in Carloway for a drink, and enjoys reading adventure stories on Sunday. He is very interested in sheep.

"Sailing made you content to settle down. You had seen it all. After the war many could have easily qualified for civil service jobs, but they didn't bother. They were quite happy to settle down to the weaving. No young person now wants to weave, but I think we were none the worse for it."

Cailean Leobhar

Cailean Leobhar is a religious skeptic, but he reads the Bible as though it were an encyclopedia that referred to all important events in human history. He reads widely and omnivorously, and often delights in confusing people by jumping from one topic to another. His people are said to be scholars. "It's in the blood."

"You can find references to all of human history in the Bible, from the creation to present times. Zarathustrianism had a great influence on Christianity. You can see that in the Book when the Jews entered Babylon. We were raised on the Bible; it's the ministers and schoolteachers alike that stamped out the old Celtic

3: Geddes K-4,5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

Islanders themselves sometimes talk of a lowered stamina and poorer health today than in the past. Inbreeding is widely held to account for this. Even if health be really poorer, this explanation is untenable, since marriage outside the village has greatly increased in the last century. Everywhere there is movement along the roads; a school placed half-way between two villages fosters early acquaintance; immigrants trickle in from the mainland, and emigrants occasionally marry beyond the Island. Moreover, the people of certain villages were transplanted in large numbers eighty years ago, as from Valtos, Uig, northward to Shawbost. In any case, inbreeding itself does not produce degeneration; for though it may "fix" or bring out harmful tendencies where there is already some poor or dangerous strain, it can also fix good characteristics in a healthy population.[1]

All these changes were hastened and reinforced by two new, revolutionary means. First, the physical mobility suddenly brought to an area with no railway by the motor-car, van and light lorry-bus; then, towards the end of the inter-war years, the penetration of the Gaelic-speaking home by the ceaseless voices of broadcasting.

[1] J. A. Thomson and P. Geddes, Life: Outlines of General Biology, 1931, vol. i, p. 473.

8

828 ETHNOPSYCHOLOGY-
sensation, perception, unpleasantness; ideas a notions about abnormal
lirium, hallucination,
planations of neuroses
learning process; conc personality, of charact
Data on behavior processes an Use of alcohol, narcotics, and Ideas about sleep and eliminat
Sex . . . . . .
Education . . . . . .
Patterned expressions of emoti
Gratification and control of hu
Food preferences . . . . . .
Manifestations and control of Palliation of labor . . . . .
Esthetic ideals and canons of u
Appreciation of form and pers Ethics . . . . . .

28

-ideas about impulses or drives; conceptualization of and emotions; standards of sensory pleasantness and bout conscious and unconscious mental processes;
mental states (e.g., aphasia, catalepsy, coma, de-hypnosis, hysteria, swoon); interpretations and exand psychoses; ideas about habits, attitudes, and the epts of the self, of human nature, of motivation, of er; associated cultural behavior; etc. See also:

d personality	15	Punishments for abnormal behavior	689
stimulants	27	Ideas about blindness, deafmutism, and feeblemindedness	732
tion	83	Use of anesthetics	752
	87	Psychotherapy	755
ons	201	Soul concepts	774
nger	261	Types of religious experience	781
	262	Divination and interpretation of dreams and hallucinations	787
hirst	271
	461	Logic	811
ate	517	Conception of free will	812
pective	532	Development of scientific psychology	815
	577	Ideas about form, color, and sound	822

286 on commission for weavers around the turn of the century.
283 By the early 1920's, four mills on the island were 175 carding and spinning wool on commission; and one mill 178 brought looms into its premises. Lord Leverhulme, who [236] bought Lewis in 1918, saw the value of concentrating [283] weavers in one place and of improving the technology.
He encouraged the introduction of Hattersley domestic [463] looms, which eventually replaced the wooden looms. The individual weaver also did his own warping, but after World War II the mills began to hire warpers to work full time on mill premises. Transporting the tweeds, which used to be the responsibility of the weavers, is now the responsibility of the mills. Today all processes except the actual weaving are handled by mills, most of which are located in Stornoway.

Such steps in specialization and centralization made 175 sense to the weaver. One of the older weavers recalls, 286 "In the late 20's or 30's you could buy a yard of Harris 288 Tweed for about two shillings. It wasn't economical for 435 any crofter to dye and spin the yarn, weave it and sell it for only two shillings a yard. As the mills enlarged, they could make it with the machinery because they could make it an economic proposition."

175 However, the tendency toward specialization and 286 centralization was in direct conflict with the reasons
288
• 828

175 behind the tweed's popularity. The tweed was more than 286 a cloth; it was peat smoke and windswept moorland, the 288 • [828] image of the free man who had escaped city life and machines and was the master of his own destiny. Steps had been taken all along the way to preserve the image of home-crafted goods, as when, in an effort to prevent machine-spinning, carding mills were built in Lewis and Harris at the turn of the century to prevent wool from being sent to mills on the mainland, where it was both [685] carded and spun. As early as 1906, a man was convicted in London of selling power-loomed tweed under the name 288 "Harris Tweed." Today power-driven looms can produce 402 double-width cloth 54 inches wide, a width much preferred to the 28-inch cloth produced on the Hattersley loom because there is less waste when the cloth is cut. But because "Harris Tweed" must be hand-woven, new looms of light-weight metal are being designed on which double-[435] width cloth can be hand-woven. The new looms will cost so much that many weavers say they would be unlikely to invest in them, especially given the uncertain future of the industry.

175 The Harris Tweed Association, formed in 1909, was 178 granted a certification mark by the Board of Trade which 288 was stamped on tweeds that were hand-spun and hand-woven 441 in the islands. During World War I, hand-spinning died [424]
[286]

288 434 The Harris Tweed industry has provided a higher standard of living, but income from this source is [458] inconsistent. The standards developed during prosperous [342] times cannot be met during difficult times. Many-roomed [336] houses with indoor plumbing are more heavily taxed than [661] smaller, less modern homes; loans must be repayed; [426] a car and a television once gotten are difficult to [045] give up. A weaver must pay for his insurance stamp, [651] which amounts to over L70 a year; and income tax takes a large percentage of a person's income, in large lump sums which are paid twice a year rather than in small amounts throughout the year. When income fluctuates, any constant demand for monetary outlay constitutes a liability.

254 181 To many persons outside the island concerned with Highland and Island development, Lewis has a reputation for "subsidy-grabbing." According to one official, "The people are too used to getting subsidies. They tend to sit back and rely on the subsidies, which makes it difficult to develop the place."

29] "We pay tax," said one weaver. "Why not get back what we can in subsidy?"

51 34 Income tax collectors shake their heads in despair at the thought of trying to get a true estimate of a crofter's income, except for jobs such as weaving for 241 178 Crofting constitutes a dormant strategy which can be mobilized if deterioration of land has not proceeded too far, and if the skills of land use are not lost by succeeding generations who have grown up in an environment which presented them with more appealing strategies.

B. Social Marginality

166 464 1. Linguistic Distinctiveness: Social marginality began when the Highlander had to leave his place of origin and go to the cities of the south in search of [197] employment. The feature which most distinguished him was his Gaelic speech.

101 186 In Glasgow the common word for Highlander is "teuchter," a slang word with derogatory implications 648 which, according to one theory, developed when Gaelic speakers coming into English-speaking cities mispronounced the word "sugar" so that it sounded like "teuchter."

● [829] Glasgow Highlanders have developed their own defensive explanation: when the civilized Highlanders came down among the uneducated barbarians of the south, they came as tutors, a word which their uneducated Lowland pupils mispronounced.) According to a university student from the islands, the word was once used by the English to refer to the Scottish Lowlanders.

197 191 behavior characteristic of the dominant group; but for 559 those that remain in the village, the language serves a 571 unifying function, although its form is limited in 181 578 diversity of elements.

184 Jokes are most humorous when told in Gaelic; and 197 conversation is punctuated with Gaelic proverbs and old 538 stories. There is a vast oral lore, expressed in Gaelic, [522] of the village and generations of its members and their [521] characteristics and escapades, a dense map of human events. All of these tales, proverbs and jokes have been told a ● 829 thousand times, but retain their unifying function. When speaking of today's children who do not go to the sheiling, a man says sadly, "They won't have our memories; this place will mean less to them than it does to us." The moor is not an empty wasteland, but a map of memories.

103 175 Thousands of place names are known, and behind every place name is a story. The major landmarks such as mountains, lochs and headlands tend to have Norse names, from the days when the Norsemen raided and settled along the island coasts; but the smaller hillocks and fields and bends in the stream have Gaelic names, for example, Sheiling of the One Night, Field of the Slaves, Slope of the Stone [184] Boys, Hillock of William's Sheiling. To know these place names and their histories is to participate in a distinct community, which has been made even more distinct by contrast with the dominant society.

166 2. The Exiles: An important source which supplies this sense of contrast is the large number of persons settled away from the island, often in "ghettoes" or neighborhoods in cities in which village ties are main- [521] tained. It is said that gossip about Shawbost travels more quickly in the district called Partick Hill in 146 Glasgow than it does within Shawbost itself. It may be 621 argued that the "exiles," with their Lewis and Harris Societies and pilgrimages back to the village during the holidays, do a great deal to sustain the strong boundedness of the village as a sociocultural system. They and non-Gaelic-speaking outsiders (the Eminent Person writing his inevitable book in the romantic solitude of an isolated manse) help to maintain a feeling of worthwhileness in a place rife with feelings of ambivalence and negative comparison with the larger society.

181 Within the village, especially during the long, dark 621 winter, complaints are often heard of the "sameness" of [195] things. A common phrase, almost a greeting, is, "Anything fresh?"—implying that the usual mode of existence is stale, sour, exhausted, and mucky with 621 overuse. Although the villagers have access to the 20 range of information available to all Britishers through ● 829 forms of mass media such as newspapers, radios and tele- vision sets, very little of this information is considered relevant to village life, and thus is not attended to.

273 [at a wedding] would be held in the barn, with sheets
175 lining the walls so that if a man staggered against the 585 wall he wouldn't dirty himself. There were four and one-half gallons jugs of beer and a few bottles of whiskey. Sometimes someone would spew on the floor. People got drunk on very little, because they didn't have it so often."

273 Occasionally the word went out that someone had 175 brought a jug of beer from town, and the men gathered in someone's barn or weaving shed, usually on a Saturday night.

273 "The war changed that. When you were at sea, you 175 lived from day to day. There was no tomorrow." "When
• 829 my brother was away at sea, most of the money he earned was saved for him, and when he got back we gave it to him to do whatever he liked with it. The men would go off to town drinking. They had money, and they had nothing else to do; and they had learned to drink during the war. Maybe if the TV had been around then they wouldn't have started that kind of drinking."

175 1. Bothans: Because most parishes in Lewis were 295 "dry," that is, no licensed purveyors were allowed, a 213 journey of many miles had to be made to purchase beer and [671] whiskey in Stornoway. Around 1930, Nessmen (many of whom were sailors) began to bring back from town several kegs

273 the Lord that his prayers had been answered.") Another 215 bothan was started in an old bus.
[175]

Today only one bothan exists in Shawbost. It is a [354] small concrete structure, lit by gas and heated with coal, which is burned in an expensive fireplace. Like most bothans, the one entrance faces away from the main road. Unlike most bothans, it has a small window which is curtained but nevertheless reveals whether or not the light is on inside. Most bothans present blank, windowless and doorless faces that give no indication whether or not the building is occupied.

[208] Every three years a poll may be taken within a parish to determine whether the parish should be wet or dry.
[66] After the parish of Uig voted itself "wet," the Doune Braes Hotel was opened in Carloway, only five miles from Shawbost.
• [829] One of the arguments for making the parish "wet" was that drinking at the bothans would cease, and men would drink under more controlled circumstances. "The married men usually went home from the bothan at a reasonable hour, but the single men just stayed there talking all night. At the hotel, they have to go home at 10:00."

Despite the opening of the hotel so close to Shawbost, the bothan remained open. The drink was cheaper and the atmosphere less formal. Unlike the bothans in Ness, however, [771] the Shawbost bothan was usually open only on Saturday, the

B. The Bible

771 1. The Free Church: "A man in my great-grandfather's
175 time," said a 65-year-old man, "talked about the great
178 change within his generation, from the days when fanks were held on Sundays to such strict observance on the Sabbath that not even a cow could be tethered."

175 The first evangelical minister on Lewis came to the 793 parish of Uig in 1824. The Rev. Alexander Macleod belonged
795 to the Church of Scotland, but joined the Free Church when it broke away from the Church of Scotland in the "Disruption" of 1843. When he came in 1824, he found "superstition," "spiritual darkness," and "polluted remains of Popery, since it was the religion in this place...the only notion they had of Christianity (Beaton 1925: 7-8)." The southern 795 isles of the Outer Hebrides are still Catholic, but in the
• 829 Protestant isles of the north, holidays associated with 184 Catholicism are avoided, and stories are still told of the 798 burning of Protestant martyrs by Catholics. Catholics are disliked "because they believe that they can buy their way out of sin," or that the bread and wine of Communion is really the blood and body of Christ. "A Catholic is anointed with oil and left to die without food or water. We are privileged that we are not like them."

175 In the Disruption of 1843, about one-third of the 795 people and 39% of the ministers left the established church

794 Membership in the religious clique offers many 781 satisfactions. "You can talk with the converted all night, see them the next day and go on talking, because • [829] you're always talking about something new. Now, when you hear someone telling a yarn or joke, you say to yourself, I've heard that before, I don't want to hear it again. But when you're talking about Christ, sharing your experiences of conversion, the conversation is always new."

794 A few cynical, non-converted persons describe the 781 clique as a "social club" whose members sit together in 829 church, shake hands with each other more often than with non-members, and are always having meetings in each others' houses from which others are excluded. "They came in and invited Jessie and Marian to come to their prayer meeting, but they didn't ask me. They have tea, sing psalms, and have religious discussions. Ministers and converted people from all over the island come to these meetings."

"I said to her, 'You wouldn't be caught dead talking to me. At the church you all shake hands with each other, but never with me. How about passing some of it on?'"

The non-converted often express envy, and say they wish they felt the same way that the converted people seem to feel. "I was sitting with my sister at the fire

794 one night, and she said, 'I've got something, have you?'
781 She told me, 'I've got Christ.' She said that Christ
• 829 whispered to her as we were sitting there, 'Come, come, come to me.' Now she's got full military honors. I felt so bad when she took Communion, because I hadn't got it. We're all going to die. Christ is everything. Without Christ you've got nothing. I go to bed at night and something is hanging over the bed saying, 'This isn't your bed, this isn't your place.' This is the last fling, you won't have me with you long. The next time you see me, I'll be in the church parade."

Often the converted are criticized for "dropping the old crowd" or for not fulfilling their neighborly obligations. "When these people need something, they're going to be hard put to find anyone eager to help them." "You're supposed to be good and loving when you're converted, but they never help anybody except themselves. They look down on anyone who's not converted."

When someone begins to come to the Wednesday night prayer meetings, the most noticeable sign of conversion, the newcomers are welcomed into the fold with eagerness; after the prayer meeting, members shake their hands and congratulate them. To be converted is to be "Born again." "My life is like a boat that was once tied to a pier with many ropes. One by one, these ropes have fallen away. There is only drudgery to this life. I feel as though I

794 could float right up to heaven. The only pleasure I get,
781 although it is but a shadow of that ultimate joy, is being
• 829 in the company of good-living people."

The converted often spend evenings with each other singing psalms and sharing experiences of conversion. They follow the Communions as they are given in different congregations throughout the island, and may even go to Communions on the mainland. "You get to meet all kinds of interesting people that you wouldn't meet otherwise. If it weren't for these meetings, it would be like the cities, you'd never meet." "East side knows west side because of the Communions, not because of the dances. You're alone at dances." Although every house in the village is open to visitors at Communion times, the converted tend to gather in the homes of their fellow converted, where, between the twice-daily services, they gather for intense religious discussion.

Persons who are converted, even if they have not taken Communion, attend the prayer meeting held in the middle of each week, but only the communicants may attend the "private meetings" (coinne uaigneach), which are held once a month. "My father used to tease my mother, who went to these 'darkness' meetings. But it's only a prayer meeting that gives the younger, recently converted members a chance to give the prayers, since when you're a communicant you're

794 called on an awful lot to give prayers in church, and it's 781 hard for some of them to get up and speak." The Reverend
• 829 Macleod notes in his diary that private meetings were
(175) initiated on the island in 1826.

A quarterly meeting (coinne raith) is held in Stornoway, to which many of the converted from the villages go. The
(196) Communions are held twice a year. "Special services," or "small communions," held soon after the Communions, are intended as evangelical services for young people, that is, services enjoining people to convert. These services, which last from Monday through Friday, were started in Ness after the first world war.

796 4. The Communions (Orduighean): Communions are given
794 twice a year, during autumn and late winter. They are scheduled for different weeks in different parts of the island, and neighboring congregations close their churches when Communions are being held nearby, so that during the Communion season some persons may attend a number of services at different churches.

In the days when transportation was limited, visitors
796 coming from a distance away stayed for an entire weekend.
574 All households prepared food and made ready for any over-
794 night visitors who might arrive without prior warning.
178 Guests often slept on mattresses laid on the floor. After 484 facilities of transportation improved, it became common for people to drive down for the day in private cars and return to their own homes at night.

000 return to their own homes at night. There is now less 796 need for the generalized hospitality of the past, which 794 was given to anyone who came to the door looking for food
• 829 and shelter. Through these visits some families in 671 different villages have, however, established relation-
574 ships which are kept up by exchanging hospitality at times of Communion and also in other ways. A family in
(262) Ness may send to a friendly family in Shawbost some guga,
(251) goalings of solan geese which are captured by Nessmen on the island of Rona once a year and are salted to make a delicacy that is in great demand. Through such contacts a family wanting to purchase a cow may receive word of one that is being offered for sale in the village of a Communion contact.

796 Services of Communion last five days. All services except that held on Sunday evening are intended for the communicants or full members of the church, also called
(535) "the believers" and "good livers." During this time, no
(185) dances are held in Shawbost, and in Carloway the hotel is closed.

796 On Communion Sunday, the upper balcony of the church
794 is filled with villagers watching to see if any of the 824 recently converted have decided and have been allowed to take Communion. Because the villagers watch very closely the behavior of everyone else within the village, any change

796 in behavior is noticed long before the person takes 794 Communion. Some persons may never take Communion, even
• 829 though they are generally known as "good living."

A person who shows signs of being "good living" (converted) is carefully watched by all villagers, but especially by the clique of the converted whose strict standards he must satisfy before he is able to gain admission.

A communicant who gets drunk or in other ways falls from grace is not allowed to take Communion again until he goes before the kirk session and attests that his ways have been mended.

Thursday, the first day of the Communions, is " a day
796 of humiliation and prayer." Friday is Latha na Ceist, 794 the day of questions or catechism, sometimes called "fellow-(182) ship day" or "men's day." A passage is read from the Bible, which different elders must discuss in the light of their experiences of conversion. The day is also called a day of marks and signs. The elders who speak as a part of the day's rites are from congregations outside the village, which is regarded as "a matter of courtesy, and to bring in new ideas." They are called on by the minister and stand to give testimony or "fellowship," sharing their experiences of conversion with the assembly. These attestations are also spoken of as giving "tokens"

796 which signify that they are believers and differentiate 794 them from the non-believers. "Some people may think • (829) they're ready to take Communion, but listening to these people helps them to see if they really are. Often their daily actions give the lie to their intentions, and they realize this and decide to wait a while longer." The sermon is propitiatory and includes psalms on such subjects as "Blessed are they that see the light."

After this service, the minister announces that the kirk session is prepared to interview new persons who would like to take Communion. From Friday until Saturday night, individuals "give witness" before the session. After an individual has described his experiences of conversion and has been catechized, he leaves the room and his case is discussed. The elders bring up any items of behavior that would cast doubt on his testimony. Questions about his moral behavior might include, "Has he taken a drink lately? Has he been seen in a dance hall? Is his behavior sufficiently circumspect?" The person is then called back and told the decision of the session by the minister. Occasionally someone is rejected.

Saturday is the day of preparation, the day on which those planning to take Communion are called upon to look at themselves carefully, inspect their faith, and prepare themselves to go to the Lord's table. After the morning

794 and then by Psalm 69, all of which emphasize the suffering 794 of Christ. The sermon which follows may be based on any text; its intent is to strengthen the believers. It is followed by Psalm 116. The minister then announces that the most sacred part of the day's service will follow,
the "fencing of the table" (suir garadh an a Bhord).
He reads from Galatians V, in which those of the flesh are separated from those of the spirit. Those who wish [829] to take Communion are exhorted to leave everything behind, including husbands, wives, parents and children who are non-believers, if they wish to partake of the fruits of the spirit. One man is said to have become converted when he saw his wife going to take Communion for the first time.

Psalm 103, a psalm of blessing, is then sung. Until five years ago, communicants sat with the rest of the congregation and rose to "come to the table" (those seats marked off by white tablecloths or sheets) for different
"sittings," as the congregation sang the psalms of blessing.

The minister then asks the elders to bring in "the elements" of wine and bread. The wine is carried in silver pitchers (which are refilled from bottles kept in a trunk beside the pulpit by an elder who turns his back to the congregation while doing this task), and poured into silver wine goblets which are passed down the rows of communicants along with plates filled with bread cut

794 into tiny squares. The ministers and the elders partake 794 first. A final hymn is full of rejoicing, and the minister then exhorts the communicants to return to the world and
give witness and to live exemplary lives.

The evening service on Sunday is evangelical, intended
for non-believers. After this service the communicants
conduct a brief prayer meeting to give thanks.

[829] On Monday, the minister again tells the communicants
to go out into the world and declare publically their experiences of the preceding day; and to demonstrate in everything they do and say that they are believers. In [178] the past, only a morning service was given, as most people
[484] had a long journey ahead of them to return home; but now that cars are available, a similar evening service is also conducted.

781 5. The Process of Conversion: The process of conversion
794 may be slow or sudden, but conversion is most common at 794 middle age and among women. One informant wryly observed, [561] "Only recently women were allowed to have souls. But [562] from the looks of the Communion table, mostly women are [538] going to heaven." Many of the women taking Communion are [620] dressed from head to foot in black, a color which indicates their widowed status.

781 The first sign that a person is "following" (leanntail)
794 the church is that he begins to attend the weekly prayer

781 conversions that take place in other villages. "Five 571 persons converted recently in Lochs. Two used to drink
a lot, they're saying." Sometimes mass conversions occur, [882] called "revivals," during which people shout, chant,
speak in tongues, and sometimes collapse.

794 Although strict observance of religious practices 829 must be maintained by the converted while they are on the island, it is possible for them to relax this observance when they visit mainland cities. The converted see nothing wrong with attending plays or movies in Glasgow, as long as no one observes them. A non-believer once commented wryly, "They believe in the 11th commandment: thou shalt not be seen." Women who have spent many years in domestic service on the mainland, where they generally live very different sorts of lives from those of island people, often return to the island to retire. They then take up the [892] color of their surroundings. The long black dress then becomes the appropriate garb for them on Sundays. As one person observed, "Women deposit their curam in the Left Luggage Department at Stornoway, and pick it up fifty years later."

779 The beliefs of the Free Church include explanations for all events. "Everything of importance that happened in history is recorded in the Bible." Predestination lies behind all unexpected events; a sense of fatalism dulls

779 the impact of all disappointment. The church offers meaning and order to those encountering problems posed by village life. Of great importance is the sense of certainty, power and righteousness which membership in the church provides in contrast with feelings of inferiority vis-à-vis the "superior" mainland. This is the Land 709 of the Scriptures; even the Free Church on the mainland 829 is considered decadent. "Religion isn't kept on the mainland. The cities are full of sin. Lewis is given mostly to religion. It should be called the Holy Isle."

105 of the converted, who occasionally neglect township and 794 neighborly duties in favor of religious activities. The 621 increase in private transportation during the past 25 years
632 has facilitated the maintenance of closer ties within the 184 clique. The existence of such a strongly bounded subsystem [494] is an example of a trend toward the weakening of the township as a social boundary system, but this trend is countered by other factors that strengthen or help preserve the township as a bounded system.

105 People come and go from the township, but this appears 632 to maintain rather than weaken township boundaries because 621 behavior different from that prescribed within the township
166 can be performed outside it, and conformist behavior 184 reassumed upon reentry. Those unable to conform with standards of behavior prescribed within the township are not likely to return.

[528] Township members who have settled away from the island come back periodically for recreation and a sense of [892] belonging. They increase the value of the township and its way of life in the eyes of the inhabitants, and provide them with subject matter for conversation until the next holiday season, when the exiles again return.

105 The boundedness of the township is thus a qualified 632 boundedness that, over the past 100 years and especially 621 since the second world war, has decreased in strength but 184 is nevertheless strong today.
[494]

#159 he tried to persuade Mairi to emigrate to Australia, but she would not consider it. They lived for a while with relatives in Shawbost, until he built a house for them on the common grazing land.

#159 "I remember my mother talking about the sigh ceilidh,
• 882 how people would gather to talk, and the girls would sit around combing each others' hair. It was a good life.
Today things are going too fast. There are so few places left that offer peace. Many young people want to leave here, but they usually come back in ten years' time. I never want to leave."

Katrina Bheag

#159 "I sit there in church expecting to be hit by the 781 curam, like lightning. I always go with my next-door neighbor, Maletta. Up until a year ago she was going to parties and drinking, but then she started going with a new crowd, the religious folk. She just changed one crowd for another. She kept the party crowd going for awhile as well, she couldn't decide which she preferred.
But now she sees me and asks, 'How are you?' I say, 'Fine.' She says, 'How can you be fine if you haven't got Christ?' So now I sit in church with her up at the front, with both her and the minister brainwashing me. She keeps telling me about all the people that have been converted

#159 recently, like the boy in Ness who decided he wasn't going 781 to church. He was sitting there reading, heard a knock at the door and didn't go. It came again, so he went and opened the door--there was no one there. Then the voice of God spoke to him, and the next Wednesday he went to prayer meeting. He probably felt guilty about not going to church. I would have been just plain scared.

#159 "Something's wrong with the reasons why people get
781 converted. When someone dies, someone is sure to get • 882 converted. When something terrible happens, someone gets the curam. If one person gets it, other members of the family start to get it. Take Iain Mhurchaidh in the next street, for example; his wife converted, so he's trying.
But he took a drink the other day, and had to eat an onio
so his wife wouldn't notice; and when he hurt his hand in the garage the other day, he swore like a sailor.
Usually people marry people the same as they are. It's usually the woman who converts afterwards. The curamach people say they're so fond of each other that they could marry any one of them. That's the best way to get a husband if you're an old maid. And a few affairs have gotten started at the prayer meetings they hold in each others' houses. I've never seen a really holy person.
They'll try to cheat you as fast as the next person.

"Once you start 'following,' you can't really stop.
Once you've given the sign that you're a follower, every 511 226 511 coat, was thought to be supernatural. The fishing, too, is of good standard: a typical annual catch including 1700 salmon, 5000 sea-trout and 1800 brown trout; and it was for this, as well as for the shootings, that the moors pertaining to the different shooting or fishing lodges and hotels 137 were bought at Lord Leverhulme's sale. The absence of 233 foxes was important to sheep-rearing before the introduction of guns, and is still a favourable factor.

5. Sea-fishing

226 Fish have always contributed to the diet of the Islesfolk, 198 whether they fished from coracles or boats, or with 'long 262 wands' from the shore as they still do, and as they did in 433 the days of Dean Monro and, no doubt, right back to 241 neolithic times. The relative importance of fishing and agriculture, however, has always varied according to place and time.

182 Fishing in modern and historic, and also in prehistoric, 226 times—to judge from the kitchen middens of Uig—has always flourished more where there were deep sea-lochs;
241 and settlement resulted, even though rocky hillsides made 198 ploughing difficult or impossible. Conversely, agriculture 192 has offered better opportunity on smooth coasts with a variety of soils, though fishing was poorer there. Thus the men of Stornoway Bay and Eye, of eastern lochs and of the Harris bays, like those of Loch Roag on the west, have long been partly fishermen. In the extreme north, too, men of Ness—with the chance of choosing their fishing grounds on the north, west or east of the island and with their little rocky port giving shelter, of a sort, from southwest gales—were good fishermen; they are good seamen 467 still. "The fishing of the Barvas folk" is an old gibe, 829

182 meaning that the men of that village, and its immediate 226 neighbourhood, were the last to put to sea and the first to 241 return. The Barvas folk could retort that they would 829 have been fools to do anything else on a straight exposed 461 coast; and that anyway their pony-drawn ploughs were of more use than the foot ploughs of the rocky south.
A form of provender taken indirectly from the sea was the sea-birds and eggs from the sea-cliffs and islets like Rona, north-west of the Butt. This helped to support a few families in St. Kilda and on the rocky Shiant Islands southeast of Harris.

195 Fishing remained backward and primitive, however,
226 until the nineteenth century. After developing in a 178 promising way, it was checked before the First World 504 War, and fell into decay during and after it. Decay has, 501 of course, been widespread. In 1935 the chief ports of the East Coast, from Leith with Granton northward by Fraserburgh to Wick—a round dozen—had still an average of 250 to 300 vessels, 3000 in all. These were chiefly of steam or motor auxiliary power and valued (with fishing gear) at £2,750,000. Orkney and Zetland, too, had each their 300 boats. The whole West Coast, however, from Stornoway to Ballantrae, had only 2000 boats, valued at less than one-tenth of the fleet of the east, and worth only a fraction of this, to judge from prices in the open market.
Nearly 400 boats were still on the register for Lewis and Harris (Stornoway district) and another 300 for the rest of the Outer Isles. But fewer put to sea each year, even from Stornoway itself.

182 A major drawback to herring fishing in the Stornoway 226 district is the uncertainty in the movements of the herring shoals. On the Clyde, moreover, herring can be sent fresh to the city but further north they must be cured. Whereas

CHAPTER IV

THE EVOLUTION OF ECONOMY AND SOCIETY IN THE ISLAND ENVIRONMENT

829 FROM the first approach we saw that while the 'Outer Hebrides may seem to strangers a distant Ultima Thule, the Islesman may regard their home as lying at the core of our country and its life: of ancient ways, be they foolish or wise; and of deeply rooted faiths, be they superstition or truth. The purpose in this Part is to view the essential phases in the occupation of the land and coasts, and in the development of the people's means of subsistence, 'work ways', society and spiritual life. We shall find enduring traits, important at the present time, and which affect the future. Distance over sea and moor is still significant, as every Islesman knows; and position affected the peopling of the Island, its races and their long-continued customs. It must be asked whether sites first chosen upon the Island are still significant with regard to land-use and to sea-fishing. Did the types of class and community, the bonds of co-operation and kinship formed, correspond to needs we can still understand? Can we enter into the life of our forebears in black house and township, the thought-world of mingled fact, myth and religion, in which they carried on their work on land and sea?
194 Before what may be called the age of clanship, which 613 dawned as Gaelic culture reasserted itself after the defeat

194 of the Norsemen, lay a succession of earlier periods. A 623 phase of primitive settlements is traceable in archaeo-192 logical remains and in recent and contemporary survivals.
194 It is shown in the physical race-traits distinguishing those in one part of the Island from those in another.
Fragments of tradition telling of the first Christian missionaries survived the Norse invasions and settlements, dated from A.D. 800 or before, down to Haco's defeat on the Clyde at Largs in 1256. These fragments can be linked to chronicles and to later tradition, on which they throw fresh light.

144 A survey of the archaeology has been published,[1] but comparatively little, as yet, on race. Yet different communities are distinguished by marked racial types or strains.
Although many, indeed most, of the race-strains of the Island must have entered it in prehistoric times, some are linked to tradition, and history accounts for the more recent immigrants. The striking element of race in the 141 Outer Hebrides is a broad-headed type prevailing from Barra to the Lews, accompanied by medium stature and dark hair; it is also found across the Northern Minch.
But within the Island are notable differences.

829 Variety of race being accentuated by difference in ways,
the communities still comment pointedly upon one another! For instance, an old saying is not forgotten:
528 "The folk of Cladach, but the gentlemen of Uig!"
(Muintir a' Chladaich, ach daoin' uasaile Uig), 433 'Cladach' being the western 'Beach' district possessing 632 ploughland but poor fishing, which covers the modern 133 parish of Barvas (excluding the north-west cliff-promontory
113

[1] Royal Commission on Ancient Monuments, Outer Hebrides, Skye etc.); 1928. V. G. Childe, The Prehistory of Scotland, 1935; Scotland Before the Scots, 1946.

829 of Ness), while Uig is the most westerly promontory with 433 its natural fishing harbours. The authorship of the pro-
632 verb may be ascribed to the ladies and gentlemen of Uig; 133 yet the personal appearance of the victims, who are more broad-headed, gives the proverb a physical foundation.
194 Again, the tall men of Ness, dark or fair, and rather longer-192 headed, still form a group apart from those of Cladach, 194 each having taken root in prehistory, i.e. earlier than surviving record.

144 Such facts correct several current misconceptions as to race and heredity in their relation to Gaelic society, past and possible. First, it is still common to contrast a 'Celtic' with a 'Norse race'. Now, Norse immigrants belonged to several races, and when they arrived, several race-streams were already mixing and eddying in the Isles. After the immigration of Norsemen, the next recorded was in 1611, consisting of gentlemen-tacksmen from Kintail and burghal settlers to Stornoway, who were composed of Gaelic-speaking families from Easter Ross, where the people of today resemble some Scandinavian types rather than typical broad-headed Lewismen.

Second, it follows that no sweeping generalisations can yet be made as to the ways and habits of particular races.
The "Celtic race", one reads, have "never taken to the sea" as have the Norsemen.[2] The facts in the Island are that though the men of Ness, with a possible Norse admixture, were considered better fishermen than those of Cladach, and the present generation includes a great number of seamen, their opportunities have been greater —their cape commanding wider fishing grounds and their little port providing relative safety in storm. And the men of Lochs and of the 'Bays' of Harris, though they show

[2] For example, in the Brend Report on Lewis (1902).

175 the cultivable land and pasture having been shared out to 178 minimal fractions, they called for a minimum of labour by 241 the men—though housewives and mothers had always 476 plenty to do. The morrow's tryst for work might prove 654 a tryst with no work done. The men might foregather on the moor to cut peats, for instance, but if one of their 423 number was late, become so absorbed by telling stories of the Fenians that, ere work had begun, it was time to go 188 1 home—resolved to meet for work some other day! As a result, reformers advocated breaking-up the joint-holdings;
and this was done in Lewis by 1830, as noted in the Brand Report. But mere division of the land did not increase its total amount.

175 Yet while noting the progress made by the liberation 178 of individual initiative, we can see the drawbacks of individualism: the evictions made with no provision for 654 new homes, and later the monotony and the loneliness of 362 modern farm life, the mutual distrust of employer and employee, and the general inability of farmers, as yet, to 423 co-operate. At the present, when planning, purchase and 476 sale are required on a large scale, particularly among smallholders, the interest of each is still "the interest of the 829 whole". The team-spirit must be recovered from the work (not simply the play) of school onwards to further education and communal effort.

175 To sum up, every farm-hamlet was held jointly and on 241 equal terms, each joint holder being responsible for an equal share of the rent, and the movable run-rig system 427 ensuring equal quality, as well as equal quantity, of land.
476 Common interest was assured, and there was mutual support in distress or sickness, as when one member, named in 473 a deposition of 1718, was 'valetudinary'. Lastly, work was done in common not only when it led to efficiency

173 from the old chiefs' families, as in the genealogies of 622 MacDonald of the Isles and the MacLeods. A special 623 feature contrasting with English history is that claims to differences of descent, instead of being maintained—as 109 between the Saxon and the conqueror of Norman blood—191 were fused. Even when the ancestor of the chief was alien to the locality, the people and the chiefs ultimately claimed 173 to be of one and the same descent. Neighbourhood 621 softened the impositions of the hunting herdsman upon his human herd, and the feeling of kinship brought reconciliation.

How far, then, can the family name, which proclaims 193 every 'son' and 'daughter' of Leod to be of the clann, 624 the 'children' of the first Leod, really betoken a blood
614 tie? Both the differences of race to be found in clanship 829 and the ties it formed are well brought out in a tale of Highland pride, still told with Highland laughter across 539 the Minch in Kintail. A French skipper (an importer of claret) touching at Kintail three hundred years ago, met a short, dark man and asked him of whose clan he was.
"The Clan Rae," was the reply, "but we are of two kinds,
the tall, fair MacRaes and" (a little pityingly) "the short, dark MacRaes." "And which are you?" "I," said the wee, black fellow, drawing himself up, "am one of the tall, fair MacRaes!" "Then God help the short, dark 193 MacRaes!" said the skipper. Even one link with the 622 blood of the chief—and that not necessarily legitimate—614 was enough for a man to found a claim to kinship, not 829 merely as a MacRae, but with the tall, fair chiefly group

[1] In Gaelic, as a man is called MacLeoid (son of Leod), so a woman is 550 MacLeoid (daughter), and the clan, Clann Leoid. The absurd addition of 'son' to a woman's name (as in English surnames such as 'Johnson') is unthinkable in Gaelic, in which a woman would be named 'John's daughter', MacIain.

173 his near kin. Again, much as in the medieval gestes of 621 France, fosterage of an heir by a clanswoman formed the 614 closest possible tie to at least one family of the people
• 829 from ancient to recent times. For it linked the heir by [171] sympathy—though not by equal obligation—to elders and playmates in childhood and his contemporaries in later life.

565 To re-state this 'contradiction' of equality and privilege, we have thus a hierarchy of 'class' imposed upon a 'classless' society. For the joint farms and the township were essentially classless. The two classes, the lord and the people, were primarily opposed, war having placed the conqueror above those who fed him. This state of things was not active 'class-war', for the armistice could endure indefinitely by means of the bargain made between the classes for some exchange of services; none the less, it was built upon class conquest.

175 That all should ultimately claim the lineage of their 565 chief was a remarkable solution to the hereditary opposition
614 of class. A man who knew the Islanders well, John Lane
622 Buchanan (1793), noted how in conditions of the utmost poverty the poorest addressed each other as 'lady and [576] gentleman', bean-uasal and duine-uasal, a courtesy not lost today. And every clansman had a right to shake the hand of his chief, as Edmund Burt observed in his vivid Letters
[577] from the North (written after 1721). Indeed the sense of mutual obligation implicit in Gaelic society is well illustrated by the homely word coir, usually translated 'right'; it is equally used for right's correlative, duty—as when a Scots or Irish crofter may say "You've a right (a duty) to help your mother"—and for a 'right' (privilege) to shake the chief's hand. An English equivalent would be duty-privilege, or duty-right. Similarly, the same

175 Mackenzie. For all that, in 1900 a crofter said: "We called 613 the old proprietor Seaforth, but I believe his right name 621 was the Prince of Welsh". To him the Earls were royal!
• [829] Freedom of intercourse is embodied in the language to this day. With 'a stranger', a little spoken Gaelic 197 lessens 'strangeness' and quickens intimacy, because 565 Gaelic conveys essential human relationships as English 576 rarely can—even the English of the 'democratic' Lowlands. For instance, a well-dressed stranger, though young, is usually addressed in English as 'sir' by a senior crofter, and, just as in the South, without the expectation of 'sir' or 'ma'am' in return. In English, that is, respect is given to class. In Gaelic, age receives respect: it is the stranger, if the younger, who adopts the respectful 'you' (the second person plural, sibh), while the crofter, if the older, uses the friendly singular, 'thou' (tha). If they are of equal age, and neither is elderly, 'thou' would be [562] used by both. Similarly, respect is given to womanhood; and an older woman who would say 'Sir' in English will say 'My dear' in Gaelic.[1]

614 It is not only by daily contacts that we may understand the relationship of people to chief, but by the height of feeling it may attain, and by the beauty of its expression.
[175] Among the finest of the later songs of praise to Gaelic clanship and its chiefs are those composed by two Island
[533] bards, a woman of Harris and a man of the Lews. Mary MacLeod, Mairi Nighean Alasdair Ruaidh, was a kinswoman of the MacLeods of Dunvegan and Harris, and a beloved [173] [1] Calling on the sub-postmistress in a Highland place where I was known to be a friend of the laird, I was addressed as "Sir". But hardly had we passed to Gaelic when this woman, my elder and a person of culture, laughingly used an expression then strange to me. Halted, and suddenly shy at being forced to translate, she said at last, "When thou wast a lamp [just a boy!] t' munr bha thu cnap!" But rightly, she would have been slightly shocked had I said 'thou' to her.

175 the last of these in outlying villages after 1918. When 554 Matheson purchased the Island in 1844 he left the fishing 565 industry to the curers, great and small. Particularly before 427 most fishermen could speak and write English, the local 228 curers were best fitted to take action not only in marketing but in approaching the Government to aid the construction of piers and harbours. On the whole, their long ties with place and people, coupled with education, made them useful leaders of a community in which leaders were needed to adapt life to a changing economy. Here and there one or two small farmers survive, a little apart from the main townships. Aided by a long cultural tradition, they meet changing times by combining with their inheritance a sane selection of new elements.

Looking beyond the Island to the mainland, the time is 175 approaching for a fair assessment to be made of the historic 621 parts of chief and landlord, factor and tacksman. Not only 622 is there an enlarging body of documentation, but a growing 427 understanding of communal strands in tradition and of 184 changing social economy seen in relation to geographic factors of place and region. And in the Gaeldom, condi-[178] tions varied greatly between bordering areas from Mar to [182] Kintyre,[1] and the heartland of tradition in the Hebrides. In the Island, one must remember the fundamental opposition, yet the recurrent readjustments of chiefs and people. These, and not only individual differences in character and conduct, explain the differences of experience and opinion
• [829] quoted above. The people's belief, so frequently given to me thirty years ago, that it was bad factors, not the landlord, who taxed and harried them unjustly, expressed an idealistic faith in a chief, rather than the facts of economy [565] and history. For lordship begins with the imposition of [113] [1] A. McKerral, Stot. Hist. Rev., 1947.

175 private naturally addressed him in Gaelic by his Christian 703 name, and writes of him with the warmth and respect due [551] to an elderly relation. Something of this mutual regard remains; and young Englishmen of education have told me of their surprised admiration for the character of the best traditional type of 'Regular' Scottish, and particularly Highland, non-commissioned officer, before and during the two world wars.

175 Such bravery and character abroad led Stewart to the
• 829 conviction that their foundation must be the character of the peasantry at home. He held that the Highlanders' home life demanded support, and having served with the Sutherland Highlanders, he felt the deepest grief and anger at the clearances of the Sutherland estates by an English [729] proprietor. When Stewart remarked that a few deaths mattered little when compared to the nation's renown, for this 'endures for ever', he referred to deaths in battle, which he analysed as typically of 1 to 2 per cent of the men. Whereas upon long voyages or in unhealthy stations, 25 per cent of soldiers or civilians might die of disease.

175 Yet, to the Gael, discipline did not mean blind sub-703 mission to injustice. "Accustomed to obey their im-
614 mediate chiefs, who durst not break a compact with them, and to have promises punctually fulfilled, implicit submission was not yielded when they had rights to preserve." For the bond by which, of old, the Highlanders "were held to their superiors and one another" was "the bond [648] of fidelity and affection. . . . In later times, when they entered the King's service, they considered themselves as contracting parties", and resented breaches of faith. Of eight mutinies in as many regiments, that of the Seaforth in 1778 should be instanced here. The regiment included many Lewismen, with Mackenzies and Macraes, and also

779 with his spouse. The knight, the first Stewart Earl of 764 Menteith, had died four years after his wife, in 1294.
532 Medieval sculpture was then attaining its height, as this monument, in spite of the ravages of time, bears witness.
175 The following year, 1295, saw the commencement of "the 644 three hundred years war" with its repeated destruction of Scottish arts and traditions of peace. Under King
• [829] Alexander III, "that Scotland led in luve and law", peace within the kingdom of Scots allowed a union embracing [648] Gaelic Christian traditions and Scoto-Norman arts. After his death this became all but impossible. So far as scholars
181 can tell me, this almost unnoticed monument remains
764 unique in Christendom, indeed in the world.[1] The arts of Scotland, hitherto in touch with European achievement, were shattered by invasions, and Gaelic tradition was only to be maintained by the very poor, whose debtors, for all time, we have become.

763 At the approach of death God's mercy and peace were
782 sought. Latterly Roman Catholic prayers stressed the wish for Confession to a priest, followed by Supreme Unction for the attainment of 'Happy death', Bas sona.[2]
[174] In early times confession seems to have been made as willingly to the 'Soul-friend', followed by Benediction. When death had come, the mourners sang of sleep and 764 home. In Lewis today funerals are conducted in silence to the graveside, where the last service is held; but [113] [1] A unique medieval tomb at Inchmahome: a cultural link. (Geddes, 1952.)
[2] It would be of deep interest to compare the attitudes to death found in 'Spiritual Songs' by Protestant Gaels like Buchanan or Grant, with songs on death which, though maybe of post-Reformation date, are of Roman Catholic origin (e.g. in Fr. Allan Macdonald's collection, poems on the Day of Judgment, and of Wrath; on age and on death; and on Purgatory; pp. 31, 85, 146; 34, 19, 21; 27). Some have much in common, both by virtue of the earlier traditions they shared and still more because of parallel [171] trends of Reformation and Counter-Reformation. Cf. Carmina.

CONTINUED
ON
NEXT FICHE

is watching. My boyfriend tells me that I shouldn't go to church regularly and then all of a sudden show up in a pub on Saturday night. It confuses people. The Bible says you can't have two masters.

"There are only two kinds of people in this village. You're either curamach or you're not. If you get the curam, all of a sudden you've got a lot of friends. If you had a friend who got the curam, all of a sudden she's no longer your friend. She just asks you if you've prayed today, and acts like she's feeling sorry for you. If your parents are curamach and your father is an elder, you've got it made in this place. Domhnuill Iain Dasher's daughter was as slim and beautiful as a model but she was never chosen as Miss West Side at the dances. Her father wasn't a member of the church. He always spoke his mind, and people called him an idiot.

59 "There are definite symptoms of conversion. A person
81 who's been looking bored in church suddenly begins to pay attention. The women go all weepy. The men sigh. They wait around outside the church and don't leave so quickly. You can see them shaking hands with the converted. You can predict their conversion months in advance.

59 "I had a dream last year, of a line of people going 81 down the aisle of the church, all dressed in white like to 87 a wedding. Only they weren't wearing veils. I realized

*159 mythology. But the Celts still kept their special characteristics, like second sight.

"But who in this place talks about Zarathustra? I feel so ignorant. I've always read, and never believed anything. I guess I can thank the previous schoolmaster for making me a rebel. He used to give me at least four straps a day, because I was clever and his kids were dumb. It was a poor county, and there were only two bursaries available to send country children to the Nicolson. He outfoxed us, and his two children went. They didn't last there long, though.

"So whenever I see those big schoolmasters with *159 • 829 their fancy speeches, all I can think of is what corruption lies behind the scenes. The only people that ever know what's really going on are the fools and drunks. Everybody thinks they're drunk, so they go ahead and act naturally, or tell their terrible secrets. But the drunks are watching. They see something wrong and they have to come and tell someone, and for some reason they come to me. That always happens to me at weddings and wakes."

*159 Cailean was a middle child of a large family. The eldest sibling worked as a policeman for awhile in naval dockyards, and then returned home and tried to start a small business. When it failed, he tried weaving for a time, and then returned to Glasgow to work as a security

*175 scriptions flowed in. In 1709 the Queen granted Letters Patent 871 under the Great Seal for erecting certain of the subscribers into [643] a corporation. Thus did the SSPCK come into being, with an initial capital fund of £1,000. Its progress was rapid. In 1711, it supported twelve schools; in 1795, 323 schools. In addition to paying the teachers' salaries, the Society supplied the children with school books, established public libraries in various parishes, and defrayed the expenses of printing Gaelic Bibles and other books.

Harris here enters in an interesting sideline. In the records of [217] the Presbytery of Mull, 1730, it is reported that 'Mr M'Aula . . . carried off the library to Harris, because he was not paid for his expenses in bringing them [the books of the Society] to Coll.' This MacAulay was the great-grandfather of the English man of letters, Lord MacAulay.

The Gaelic School Society was founded in 1811 and existed until 1892. It supported a large number of schools, as the desire for education had exceeded the capacity of the SSPCK. In 1796
[874] there were two schools and a spinning school in the parish of Stornoway. The minister of Barvas, writing in that year, says [794] that there had not been a parochial school in that parish for many years, but that there was a Society school at Ness, attended by about twenty pupils, instead of treble that number had all the [874] children been made to attend. The minister of Uig stated that three spinning schools were established there by Lady Seaforth, but he does not refer to ordinary schools in his parish at that time.
[794] According to the minister of Lochs, a parochial school was built there in 1795, and a Society school some three years earlier.

By the middle of the nineteenth century matters had improved considerably, though there were still complaints that education was not appreciated. In fact, education tended to be discouraged for a very practical reason. Back in 1811 an observer in the island
• [829] stated in his report that the great mass of the Lewis people would not send their children to school. 'When reproached on this head they answer "If we give them education, they will leave us."' Seventy-two years later (1883), the Napier Commission was told that 'Sir James (Matheson) supported and contributed to seventeen schools in the Island, many of which he built with teachers'

EDUCATION

houses prior to 1854. Monthly returns of attendance were sent 175* to my office, and parents who did not keep their children at school 871 were dealt with, but in many cases to no avail, as they often told [829] • me they did not want to give their children wings to leave them.'

In 1833 there were thirteen schools in the parish of Stornoway, [212] according to the New Statistical Account, 1840-46, which records that there were 586 children between the ages of six and fifteen years, and 1,265 persons above the age of fifteen in the parish who could not read. Barvas had three schools in 1836; Uig had five in 1833. In Lochs, in 1833 a parish school had just been erected, and four schools were maintained by the Gaelic School Society; yet out of a parish population of 3,067, only 12 could write. After the Disruption of 1843, the Free Church established a large number of schools throughout the island. And soon after Sir James Matheson took over the island he built schools in those districts not catered for by other agencies.

In 1865, the Government began to prepare for the Education Act of 1872, and sent Sheriff-Substitute Nicolson to the island to investigate the state of education there. At the time of his visit there were forty-seven schools, supported by as many as nine different agencies, persons, or institutions. The number of pupils [162] on the rolls was 3,332, with 2,647 in actual attendance. Nicolson computed that there were some 2,500 children on the island who did not normally attend school, and who should have done. A [346] large number of schools were little more than thatched houses. Fifteen were good; fourteen tolerable; and eighteen bad or inadequate. In the third group he classes 'those that cannot by any standard of comfort or fitness above that of troglodyte, be considered suitable for having the work of education carried on in them, or any work indeed, to which the prevalence of smoke and moisture are infavourable.' Of the children who attended these schools, 79 per cent received tuition in the Scriptures; 85 per cent were taught to read; 39 per cent were taught writing; 32 per cent were taught arithmetic; and 16 per cent taught needlework.

The Education Act of 1872 put an end to the old parochial 175* system, and virtually to other agencies which it found at work. 871 656 schools on the island were brought into line with the re-

8 STORNOWAY

632 829 • STORNOWAY is the only real town in the Hebrides. Some even say that it is the only real town in the world, as its basic living patterns are those of the countryside from which it sprang. It has always been held in high regard by the [539] islanders. In the past it was regarded as one of the most important places in the civilised world: a saying attributed to a primitive native has passed into a proverb: 'steornabhagh mhor a' chaisteal —baile 's modha 'th'air an t-saoghal gu leir ach Bail'-ath-Cliath an Eirinn—'s iongantach nach eil an Righ fhein a' tighinn a comhnuigh ann!' ('Stornoway the great, with its Castle, the largest town in the wide world, except Dublin in Ireland; surprising it is that the King himself does not reside therein!') The affectionate [103] name for the town is 'Portrona', Port of Seals, which it is. A son [504] of Stornoway once said, 'The founder of Portrona must have been some sea rover with a good eye for a refuge from the storm and the peril of his calling. No matter what winds rage outside, within the bay the mariner may drop his anchor, furl his sails, and take his ease.'

*175 When the Vikings first came to the western isles of what was 632 later in history to become Scotland, they found a sandy spit of [133] land on which they could beach their longships in a sheltered bay. It was, however, more than a haven; it was a place in which to settle down and rear the first of many generations. Later the Norse-derived MacLeods took advantage of an outcrop of rock beside the beach to build a fortress. Later again a greenheart pier, [504] and later still a concrete wharf, have given the town the outward symbols of economic and social significance.

632 Stornoway owes its origin to the Stornoway Beds, a sedimentary 133 formation much younger than the Lewisian gneiss. These Beds have had two effects. First, their existence and formation allowed a deep indentation, giving a good harbour with a protecting isthmus not far way. The harbour itself is due to the erosion of these 181 some by characteristics which may seem unique. But it 171 will interest others by features of underlying universality. 133 These might be compared to the Archaean rock, overlain toward the south-east by a succession of younger strata, but forming their foundation.

181 In this rocky land, the roots of Island life are laid 182 bare; the rhythm of work responds to the day's weather and the cycle of the year. Yet the flowering of communal life in song and spiritual tradition may offer a fresh vision of regional, even of national, being. Indeed it is in characteristics latent in the evolution of the whole 'North and West' of the British Isles that Island life is most revealing.

131 Rising in imagination to a point above the summits of 133 the Harris hills, and viewing the British Isles from the 'far' north-west, we gain a new perspective (Fig. 1). The Island below us is now the nearest; the 'Outer' Isles, • [829] the innermost. To us now, as to the Islesmen, their Island home is no mere fringe, but a heart of Britain.

101 Thence, looking to the lands across the Minch, each 133 further from the Isles of home, there appear, in turn, three regions: (1) the rest of the Highlands and Isles; (2) the Lowlands and Uplands of Scotland; and (3) Ireland, Wales and Cornwall, and Northern England—all sculptured in rocks older than those of the Lowland or 'Plain' of England beyond. These three roughly concentric regions, from Harris to the edge of the 'Plain', may be grouped together with the intervening estuarine lowlands—not only Clydeside and the Solway but the 'firth-land' of Mersey-and-Deeside, and that of the Bristol Channel. To these, one might add the shores of an outer Minch, the Manche or 'English' Channel, which once linked Devon and Cornwall to Armorica. Beyond

ONTINUED
FROM RECEDING
FICHE

CHAPTER VIII

CHANGE IN RELIGION AND SOCIAL CUSTOMS

(A) COMMUNAL CHRISTIANITY, THE ROMAN CHURCH AND THE REFORMATION

175
798
829
[793]

WHEN the Reformation broke upon Scotland and the Church of Rome was driven out, the new Church was slow to replace the priests and conventual clergy by its ministers. More than two hundred years later the minister of Harris wrote, with reason, that in contemplating "the decayed monuments of the piety of our Christian ancestors . . . the pious mind is affected with a mixture of awe and sorrow, while it can hardly admit that the overturning of the ancient church establishment ought to be considered as reformation here". These words were honestly spoken. The minister continued: "In Harris, where, till within a few years back (from 1790), there has not been since the aera of our reformation from popery, so much as . . . one decent house for public worship; there were of old no less than twelve churches and chapels of which . . . the walls are yet standing, besides others . . . while tradition has preserved their names and dedications".[1] These are those of monastic cella or cill, of parochial or collegiate ecclesia or eagleis,

[1] Old Statistical Account, x, 376. No doubt many churches had lacked a priest for a considerable time before the Reformation; but taking a long view, the minister's conclusion was sound.

and of a township's tiny chapel, oratory or teampull.

In Lewis, as in the Northern Isles, the early years of the Reformation period had been years of invasion by the King's Adventurers, of resistance, bloodshed and ruin. Hence when Mackenzie brought a Protestant clergyman to minister to the people they flocked to hear him. Naturally the new lord chose one of his important tenants from Kintail, the Rev. Farquhar Macrae. "For forty years prior to the visit (about 1611) no one in Lewis appears to have been baptized or married,"—or rather, no ceremonies had been performed by professional clergy, an important distinction. "'The population', we are told, 'had lapsed into heathenism', but 'Mr. Farquhar's' mission proved thoroughly successful. 'Large numbers of the people were baptized, some of them being fifty years of age, and many men and women were married who had already lived together for years.' The author also stated that the success of this mission went far to reconcile the inhabitants of Lewis to Lord Kintail's rule. According to a Kintail tradition, 'the number of people that came to be baptized by Mr. Farquhar was so great that, being unable to take them individually, he was obliged to sprinkle the water at random on the crowd with a heather besom'"[1] —much as it still is on certain festivals in the Roman Church.

The tale of the Rev. Farquhar Macrae shows both the spiritual prestige of one who could read the Scriptures and must understand them, and the people's belief that a lord who brought a Gaelic clergyman must indeed be a Christian and was to be welcomed, or at least accepted. After the larger churches had been rifled by lairds, 'Pro-

[1] Brand Report, 1902, p. xii; from Alexander Macrae, the History of the Clan Macrae, Dingwall, 1899, p. 57.

175 which Mr. Macleod attempted to hold at Uig, one of the 771 former elders actually offered a request that a wreck should 793 be cast ashore in the neighbourhood;[1] while another elder, referring to the death of our Lord as a misfortune, used strong expressions of deprecation of its having at all occurred.[2] . . . The reason is easily furnished; the Lewis ministry was not evangelical. Moderatism held the land in sole possession. . . . Nor did it act merely in a negative indifferentist manner. Moderatism contained in itself elements of positive distaste to Gospel truth, and enmity towards gracious influences and experience. As a matter of course, it was perfectly compatible with this system to grant toleration to superstitions and superstitious observances, which had been handed down through the Dark Ages of Popery from the still darker ages of Druidical idolatry. Acts of adoration, having for their object the heavenly bodies, were common. It is scarcely necessary to state that family worship was unknown among the people, and even at the manse. For although the public ordinances were dispensed as a matter of form, they exerted no practical influence upon the conduct. They rather tended to lull more profoundly asleep by imparting and maintaining a feeling of security to the poor dark benighted souls who participated in them."

People did come to church "in tolerable numbers" from the very outset of Mr. Macleod's ministry, but "Here for the first time was a preacher who showed by his whole

829) [1] Shipwreck was still thought of as an 'act of God', and a dire 'misfortune'. Not only is there no hint of deliberate wrecking ever taking place, as on some other British coasts, but abundant record of aid to the shipwrecked and respect for their property in the absence of the skipper and crew. (Martin, 1695; and later.)

984) [2] According to Evangelical theory the punishment of guilty and innocent alike was part of the Divine plan. How different this, from the faith of the Islanders till then!

795 The Evangelicals, so insistent and worship of ancient Christian 771 stition', comparatively rarely co designed to bring punishment u have wronged one—that is upon such was the practice, widespre moulding a clay figure representin
and either sticking pins into it, ex it in a stream, with a prayer that so would the object of hatred.
I knew, Dr. Norman Morrison
his own performed this rite.
herself that if the desired inju
Divine law was at work and s [178] innocent or actually just. What twentieth century, long after Christian calm of runes and rites healthy laughter of gay custom si rite of ill-will had lived on. On pity the more: the hated, for th
they knew the rite was at work, o Evangelicals made so little appea
that the irrational element in su • [829] replaced by a sane, scientific ou was condemned as 'unbelief'.
wrath, anger and "the punishm
played havoc with the emotions.

Those brought up on the pr
—especially in its milder forms—
with a selection of Old Testam appreciate the shock to a sensit [776] the whole of the Old Testament shock is due not only to the acts

in condemning the beliefs
ity as ' vice ' and ' superndemned words and rites pon a person believed to a person one hated ! Of ad in the Old World, of
g the person to be harmed, posing it to fire, or leaving
as the figure wasted away
An educated Lewisman
, stated that an aunt of No doubt she persuaded y took place, natural or he herself was therefore is striking is that in the the healing beauty and had been banished and the lenced, this pre-Christian e hardly knows whom to ne fear they would feel if r the hater. The extreme
l to reason based on fact, perstition was not firmly tlook. Indeed ' science '
The constant evocation of nent of just and unjust "

ecepts of Presbyterianism
-and familiar from infancy nent readings, can hardly ive heart of first hearing read Book by Book. The
of vengeance or massacre;

175 the mansion, lodges, and grounds or ' policies ', much was 747 built and laid out for himself at the time, though part was for reclamation. This contrasts with his provision for 423 those whose homeland he had bought—the sum spent upon his own mansions and grounds being nearly half that spent directly for the good of some 20,000 fellow-Gaels.

175 Matheson was not technically equipped for his chosen 157 task of ' reconstruction '. Nor was he fitted by trade in the East for the leadership of a people accustomed, in [623] spite of dire poverty, to considerable freedom. Ignorant, one gathers, of the language of the people, his choice of a 175 later Factor was hardly a happy one. Tradition in Lewis speaks of this Donald Munro as an ' autocrat ', and evidence 623 in 1874 confirms it. In addition to being the Factor for 423 an ageing man and so holding economic sway over the people, he held seventeen public and semi-public offices
661 in the Island, from Justice of the Peace to Captain of the Volunteers, still other offices being held by his clerk ! The extent of his sway is also shown by his having served summonses of removal upon fifty-six families on his own authority. As a result of the treatment of the officer sent to serve the summonses, three crofters were tried on a charge of " assault committed on an officer of the law in revenge for having executed his duty ". When asked in court if Sir James would not have disapproved of this step and the manner of its execution, Munro replied that it was his practice " never to trouble Sir James with small matters ". " Then you consider the eviction of fifty-six families a small matter ? " was the retort. These ' Bernera rioters ' were found not guilty, they and their neighbours were left in possession, and soon after the Factor demitted 175 office.[1] Lewismen felt the result to be a moral victory,
829

[1] Brand Report, 1902, p. lxxi.

estate, or where a single lodge was bought as a home for retirement, depopulation might not matter. Certain populated parishes, however, were bought as investments by men of comparatively modest means. The principal reasons for his purchase given to me by a retired man, formerly connected with the administration of the Lews estate, were two. Asked if he had found, and expected, steady, remunerative payment of rent, he replied: "Certainly!" Next, in view of Press forecasts of general emigration, I referred to the fact that if large numbers of crofters decided to give a year's legal notice of departure and apply for compensation for improvements, including the erection of a 'white house' (otherwise than by Government aid), the landowner would be faced by heavy liabilities while deprived of income. Had the purchaser no fear of such an eventuality? "Certainly not!" was the reply, "the crofters will stick to their homes for many a long year."

These examples show that, while the defeat, or non-realisation of Leverhulme's schemes, seemed to many outsiders the beginning of a not distant 'end' to the Island community, the Islanders themselves did not contemplate a final exodus. They were quite uncertain what was to come, it is true. Who was not, in those years of discouragement for Scotland and her people, for Wales, for Tyneside and Lancashire? The years of Leverhulme's departure from Lewis and of his death brought bad seasons. In 1924 storms destroyed crops and the peat would not dry. Herring catches and prices, though they had risen a little since 1921–22, had not allowed recovery from the losses sustained. The cessation of Leverhulme's wage-payments meant a gap in income which the Islanders could not fill at home. To relieve poverty in 1924–25, a Highlands and Islands Distress Fund was raised in the Lowlands. The Committee organising it distributed relief, and purchased seed potatoes, etc. They also drew attention to some important features of Island conditions. Among others was that of the scale of charges for transport of goods and passengers. These charges had risen by from two to four times what they had been.[1] The steerage passengers were poorly provided for; and a later improvement in cabin comfort was not accompanied by improved steerage accommodation. One remembers in particular the suffering of the 'fisher girls'. In good weather the passage home (by day) was bearable; and though the song that 'lifted' as the boat left Kyle for the last lap to Stornoway sank pathetically as the steamboat left the shelter of Skye, voices began to rise again in the shelter of Stornoway Bay, sounding clear as the boat drew in. In bad weather the crowded women suffered sorely. Five hundred might be packed on the deck with little or no shelter, or covered the benches and floor of the steerage, sick and distraught. The Committee pointed out that "the Government increasingly accepted responsibility for the roads of the kingdom", and that sea communications were even more vital than roads to Islanders, for they serve in place of both road and rail. Some action was taken, but charges remained high.

As a result of all these difficulties, many young men

[1] Examples were given of the rise in charges from 1914 to 1924, e.g. a web of tweed, Harris to Glasgow, from 1s. to 3s.; a box of lobsters, Harris to London, 4s. 6d. to 11s.; a barrel of herring, Stornoway to Kyle, 1s. to 3s. and so on. Although the rise on larger consignments was less, these were of no benefit to 'small folk'. Typical charges for the export of livestock were: (Lochmaddy, N. Uist, to Oban, or from Harris) for sheep the rise was from 9d. to 2s.; for lambs, 6d. to 2s.; for horses or cows, 5s. to 18s.; for stirks, 2s. 6d. to 11s. 6d. The Committee's report was privately printed.

developed through the township Grazing Committees by the Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society and its associated Crofters' Agency. Lime and fertilisers were purchased, and wool and other products sold, co-operatively. The co-operative marketing of lobsters, taking advantage of fluctuating London prices, has led to the reconstruction of ponds for storage. By these and other means, government assistance is utilised but not squandered; earlier initiative in agricultural organisation is reinforced; and communal tradition is revived, linked to personal responsibility through the crofters' lifelong knowledge of one another.

As to the future, all agreed that unless the Harris Tweed industry flourished, with work at reasonable wages, the villages would be abandoned by the young, perhaps with no return such as hitherto on 'retirement'. Many young people are content with life in the townships, provided they can get a living there, though not all, for they are somewhat divided; and work elsewhere, even in the mills of Stornoway, is a counter-attraction.

Social life is undergoing changes which operate both for and against the retention of the young. On one hand, household interchange of conversation, song and story, the ceilidh, has declined. On the other hand, one found that, as regards religious prohibitions, and in spite of the nervous tension expressed in 'Revivals', the young have won greater freedom. Near one village a Nissen hut, handed over to the Home Guard, was also used by young people for monthly dances. When I asked a young crofter invalided from the Navy whether the Elders of the Kirk made no protest, he replied that they had, but had to give it up: "They see that we won't stand for it"! This would have been unthinkable during the First World War, so creating a small leak in the purse and in the mind, leaving both a little emptier, week by week. Surveys made by teacher-members of the Educational Institute of Scotland describe the effects on listeners in Highland parishes as pernicious, in the main. The reports of the B.B.C., on the other hand, emphasise their cultural endeavours, and the lightening of house-work and of rural monotony or solitude. Every effort is needed to aid a happy selection in home and neighbourhood.

Experiences undergone in war were of very differing types. Many men spent the war years in the Navy, without contact with decent town life, or others in the Merchant Marine. Of combatants in the land forces, the Territorials of the original 51st Highland Division experienced a few months of relative inactivity in France, then of a brief but bitter campaign, followed by long years in prison camps, while other soldiers underwent prolonged training in Britain, followed by severe fighting for long periods, far afield. Lastly, a limited number of men served in engineering or other works of war-time industry, though labouring work, at high wages, kept many of the older men employed at home. Of the women called up for service, some were posted to the Forces, some to the Land Army, and some were sent to factories. The greater opportunities for women to earn a living wage away from the Island tend to equalise the ratio of the sexes.

An experience new to the Western Isles came with the establishment of Air Bases. Not only did their construction provide high wages for labouring for the older resident crofters, brought daily to the Bases by bus from their townships, but for the first time a heterogeneous mass of men from every part of urban Britain was put down at the doors of these quiet communities—at a time when

---

S. Mairley et al. K-S (1959) 1962 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Uig

Unlike the mainland farmer, should an islander withdraw his store stock from the autumn sale he cannot easily present it elsewhere a few weeks later; he must keep it from the autumn until the spring, which will probably involve him in buying feeding stuffs out of his seriously depleted income. Many crofters suspect that their difficult position in this respect is taken advantage of by mainland buyers. Whether this is true or not the result is the same - the crofter is discouraged from raising stock.

Many crofters with whom we discussed this problem realised that, by fully stocking and cultivating their crofts they might double, or even treble, their income from agriculture. Some realised that sound management of a large unit, such as the amalgamation of two or three crofts, by sublets or otherwise, might yield a reasonable family livelihood. What they all stressed was the uncertainty - the uncertainty of stock and wool prices, the uncertainty of subsidies from year to year, the uncertain fortunes of their little packs of sheep and the uncertain effects of the weather on their hay and oats harvest. In other words they lack confidence - in both the cash reward for agricultural operations and in their own technical ability. Therefore they prefer to take a sure weekly income, however small, and to work their land at a low level of productivity.

Climate, soil, and insularity (to which must be added the particular isolation of south Uig and Bernera, even within a Lewis) all present problems. But there is a tendency to overstress these difficulties and to use them as excuses, whilst failing to appreciate that they also offer certain opportunities. Many agricultural raw materials have to bear the cost of shipping from Glasgow or from Leith; the peculiar difficulties of island stock marketing have already been mentioned; but, equally, the Minch could and should provide a natural protection for island agriculture. Elderly milk and travel-worn fatstock, potatoes and vegetables, imported daily into Stornoway from the mainland, are a standing reproach to crofting agriculture. Crofters could produce most of this food and if they would they would be turning to advantage the disadvantage of insularity. Some will admit this, if pressed, but they will also rightly point out the difficulties. These are two-fold: technical (particularly in the case of legal restrictions on milk production for sale) and economic (the difficulties, or believed difficulties, of marketing). A few individuals, for example, claimed that it was not worth selling potatoes unless they received the full shop price: this is a stubborn and stupid attitude; and one is reminded of the crofters' long opposition to the introduction of the potato, nearly 200 years ago; a co-operative marketing organisation might help in this respect.

The crofters' attitude to innovation is all-important; new ideas, whether in agricultural practise or in marketing, require careful introduction and a good deal of fostering. The crofters' lack of confidence is a real factor and must be taken account of; it is not due only to the risk and uncertainty of markets, they also lack technical knowledge, even though they may have plenty of ability. Again, the prevalence of small units makes it particularly difficult to adopt innovations; a failure which might be negligible on a large farm can become a disaster on a croft. The crofter has not the resources of the farmer with which to experiment, nor has he been able to observe other methods or crops on other farms because he lives and works in a restricted environment, surrounded by fellows in like situation. The introduction and development of township re-seeding schemes by the Agricultural Advisers is an excellent example of how these difficulties can be solved. Good progress has been made since our survey. Because such improvements are communal they tend to add to the flexibility of the township structure; because they extend the grazing season in spring and autumn they tend to reduce the need for winter fodder and so to reduce the cultivation problem. Far more re-seeding could be done, particularly in South Uig and Bernera. Here the lack of local employment makes agriculture more important as a source of income than elsewhere and the need to improve the productivity of agriculture is both great and urgent if population is not to fall below the minimum level for maintenance of services. This special problem deserves special attention, by both local communities and by the authorities. If South Uig and Bernera could carry a further 800 head of cattle, which is no more than was carried in 1883 (and is still less than the sums), the problem would be well on the way to solution.

[Merivig]

There are only fifteen cows, two yearlings and four calves in the township, and the crofters with no cow rely on neighbours, or on tins, for their milk supply. All but two of the crofters keep sheep, there being four hundred and eleven ewes, one hundred and eighty-five sheep and two hundred and thirty-four lambs belonging to the township. The common grazing (including the off-shore islands which are grazed by five different crofters each year) is used for the sheep in summer, while all but one of the crofters winter their sheep within the township dyke on the crofts. Most crofters keep hens, and surplus eggs are sold to the Stornoway vans.

Peats cut on the common are transported by lorry to the crofts, while peats from the north end of the peninsula separating Loch Marivig from the sea must be carried in creels.

Nearly every crofter owns a rowing dinghy which is moored in the loch off the end of his croft, and with this supplements the family food supply. One herring boat, operating nightly from Stornoway and returning to Marivig at weekends, is all that is left of a fairly large fleet which operated before the war. A second boat, unused for two years, lies shored up on the beach, and two others are wrecks. Over fifty years ago there was a curing station at Marivig. One crofter fishes lobsters during the winter and markets them in London.

Of the other crofters, only two supplement their incomes by weaving, one by working on the roads while several men work partly on the crofts but are periodically away whaling in South Georgia, fishing, or on hydro-electric schemes. Several others are in the Merchant Navy. The gradual migration from Marivig, especially of the young people, is reflected in the high average age of the permanent residents, and in the numbers in the school -over one hundred pupils in 1900, thirty-nine (including sixteen from Calbost) in 1946; but only nine (none from Calbost) in 1958. The young people leave the township to train or work on the mainland (generally in Glasgow) or in Stornoway, while their elders accept the view that "there is nothing for the young people here".

The township has a Post Office and telephone kiosk which also serve Calbost, while lack of a shop is partially compensated by a choice of four vans from Stornoway and one from Gravir. There is a daily bus from Gravir via Marivig to Stornoway and back: the return is over 10/-. The road which reached the township from the west in the late 1920's has a tarred surface and is much better than the later road southwards to Gravir which is untarred. There is no church in Marivig and most of the population attend the Free Church in Gravir.

Within the township the two arms of the township road serve all but two of the crofts and the sites of the newer houses, few of them more than thirty years old, tend to be near the road, while the ruined houses found on most crofts are often nearer the sea. Only two thatched houses remain and the other inhabited houses are built of stone roofed with asbestos slate, or of corrugated iron. All the crofts are supplied with electricity from the grid, but very few have a piped water supply; rainwater is collected from the roofs and piped for washing, with a separate piped supply from a well for drinking. All other houses draw water from wells.

The stormy winter weather, rocky terrain and poor soil are all blamed by the residents for the drift of population away from the crofts, but those who remain have little incentive to work the land more efficiently owing to the very hard labour involved. It is suggested that with more intensive cropping and more cattle, each croft could make a comfortable profit and surplus milk, potatoes and eggs could be marketed in Stornoway - the milk replacing that at present brought from the mainland. Such development, perhaps on a co-operative basis, together with a revival of the fishing industry and introduction of a tourist industry, by building a small hotel or guest house and attracting anglers as well as those who simply wanted scenic beauty, might bring prosperity back to a township which otherwise may well be derelict in the next twenty years. But the capital required for the two latter enterprises is not available within the township.

---

one thing, an attempt is being made to build up the value of the sheep and cattle stock. Then too it is hard to obtain information on personal income. Not a few Highlanders are reluctant to share in the cost of maintaining the government and, consequently, equally reluctant to discuss their income. Still, it does give some indication of the potential income for 80 percent of the Skye crofters. It should not be forgotten that a large proportion of the small crofters will have absolutely no income from the land.

The Income of a Medium Croft. The medium croft, according to experts, has a potential income of £150 to £200 a year. Like the small croft, it provides a home, potatoes, vegetables, milk, eggs, meat, and peat. The budgets for one croft of this classification for 1952 and 1953 show a cash income of £203 17s 2d. and £170 15s. 11d., and a net profit of £169 12s. 1d. and £96- 11d. The marked fall in net profit is accounted for by a decrease in the acreage under oats, increased expenses, and the sale of fewer and younger stock, which also affected the cash income. The total hours devoted to crofting are estimated at 600 to 800 hours.

This croft supports a family, a married couple and their children, supplemented by seasonal auxiliary employment on the part of the father. As presently worked and stocked, it could not be left to a woman with any expectation of the same return The stocking is two cows and followers and fifty sheep. There are 16½ acres of cultivated land, all but a quarter under gras

75 testant' and perhaps 'Catholic' too, or sacked by the
98 King's Adventurers, there seems to have been little effort
14 to build or rebuild the four 'paroche kirkis', one of the terms of the Royal grant or infeftment of the Lews to Kintail (Seaforth). But the evidence in the previous chapter makes one doubt that the maintenance of Celtic Christianity by the people in their thatched 'temples', in their homes and fields, or at sea, was "a lapse into heathenism". The term had been better applied to the acts of certain chiefs, and of the King and his Adventurers.

75 Although imbued with their traditional faith, the people
71 were intensely aware of their isolation from the great
29] world, and humble as to their own oral learning and religious culture. Moreover, since the arrival of Christianity they believed that they belonged to the Church Catholic. But by the sixteenth century their lords had misappropriated funds, clerical absenteeism was common, and they cannot have been unaware of faults in the Church of Rome. They were the more eager to welcome any cleric who read the revered Scriptures, whether he came as a Calvinist or Episcopalian from Edinburgh or by perilous journeys from Armagh, Spain or Rome itself.[1] Living far from the worst theological controversies and persecutions inflicted for a century after 1560, the Islesfolk revered a good cleric for his own sake, as they did Macrae and, later, the minister of Barvas (and Martin himself) in lonely North Rona in 1695.

[1] Catholic missions to the Isles in the penal times are described in Compton Mackenzie's The Book of Barra, 1936. Martin (1695) refers to some Harris fishermen recently reconverted by priests, and to the mockery of their 'Protestant' neighbours because in spite of Roman prayers, their fishing had been less successful! Some of the MacKenzie tacksmen and no doubt their tenantry remained Roman Catholics until after the 'Forty-five, notably MacKenzie of Kildun near Stornoway, who gave shelter to Prince Charles in 1746. (W. C. Mackenzie, 1919, pp. 126-130.)

Leverhulme grasped the problem in this fresh way, complementing his first policy of the sea for the seamen by one of the land for the landsmen, he could cheerfully have allowed the Government to honour their promise to divide the farms, and thus he would have brought peace to all. In giving up the farms he would merely have had to reconcile himself to additional imports of fresh milk from Easter Ross, at an extra cost of a penny or two per pint. To do Leverhulme justice, experiments on peat were begun (about 1920) upon a small scale, partly, it is understood, as a result of Hardy's report. Yet in failing to make this reclamation an integral part of his plans, in refusing to adapt himself to promises given and to agree to the wishes of many applicants, Leverhulme of the Lews allowed peace to be wrecked. Why he should have stopped work in Lewis in order to remove to Harris, is not clear. There is nothing to show that crofter-fishermen in the creeks of Lochs and other fishing tracts of Lewis believed less firmly in fishing than their fellows in 'the Bays' of South Harris.[1] Nor was there extensive land for dairying in Harris. To make a second attempt to found a centre, involving fresh expense, at Obbe (on the exposed south-west coast), a much less favourable point on the Island than Stornoway, was to court disaster, not to pilot his way through the difficulties of falling markets to success.

Leverhulme, it is true, had seen one side of the 'all-round' policy required: the need for a plot of land for the Lewis fisherman and his family. In Hardy's words, "A man's choice of the sea should not prevent his having 'a

[1] In his father's biography, the second Viscount suggests that there was a difference of character between the (unreasonable) men of Lewis and the (reasonable) men of Harris. The assertion is unsupported by the facts. There were raids in Harris, too, comparable to any in similar tracts of Lewis, but in neither were they important.

(B) SLOW CHANGE: 1925-

1. The Land, the Sea, and the L

When Leverhulme parted company wi Lews his gesture of farewell was one of offer of Lewis to its people. The Storn formed, and this accepted the gift of the townships of the Parish, and of the Castle Park or 'policies'. In crofting townshi people declined the offered gift of land, could not afford the augmentation of r acceptance. So the remainder of the es for sale in several lots, which were bough and have proved safe investments. The le rights adds a further, albeit a variable, ret that of the rents received. It is indeed a crofting estate, such as a Lewis parish, return to a purchaser, yet that the crofter-selves would lose by receiving it as a gift.
improvements in housing would also be fear of increase in their rates. It is tru existing laws of assessment) all the farm cottars and squatters of a county were to at the same moment, the total increase in as either be repaid in greater services or met

[1] The reasons (as indicated in Chapter IX (E)) are (or 'small landholder'), as occupier of an agricultural assessed at three-eighths of the occupier's half of the a Rent, i.e. at less than a quarter of the whole rental. A built a good house and other buildings he is not assess neither is his landlord. Were he to become owner he to assessment both as occupier and as owner, on the land and of buildings too; with deduction of five-eight value as occupier only.

-39

oom

th the people of generosity: the oway Trust was adjacent crofting
and its beautiful
os, however, the inding that they ates entailed by tate was offered
t by individuals
tting of sporting urn of income to nomalous that a
can yield a good
-occupiers them-
Much-needed discouraged, for e that if (under
ers and crofters,
become owners
sessments would
by lowered rates

briefly that a crofter holding, can only be ssessment on his Fair lthough he may have
ed at their full value;
would then be liable
full annual value of hs on the agricultural

423 431 427 632 829

—or by a compromise between. But as it is, if one crofter, or a small group of crofters like those of a township or parish of Lewis, were to become owner-occupiers (even by gift), they would be penalised as compared to others. Hence the Lewismen preferred to go on paying rent as statutory crofting tenants. Leverhulme sold the land and received the price; the new owners paid for it and received an investment; and the only 'loser' on this curious transaction was the Local Authority, the County, which failed to make more in rates!

[623] Further reasons why the great majority of crofters declined Leverhulme's offer have been given by the Lewis Association's Economic Committee (1944):

(a) As individual proprietors, they would lose the advantages of the jurisdiction of the Scottish Land Court in dealing with their disputes, and any litigation would take a more costly form.

(b) They would be debarred from obtaining loans from the Department of Agriculture for Scotland for the improvement of their holdings or houses; as the Department would no longer have the "Corner Stone" of a landlord to fall back upon in the event of renunciation.

(c) The crofters were afraid that as individual proprietors they would forfeit their share of the Common Grazing rights.

(d) Should they wish to quit their holdings they would be compelled to find a buyer in the open market, instead of renouncing to their landlords and getting valuation.

(e) There is a feeling among Lewis crofters that they prefer to have a landlord before whom they can lay their difficulties and disputes, and who will attend to their wants; an authority that relieves them of responsibility.

[181] [624] [175] As the historical evidence has shown, a lack of responsibility has been greatly due to the undermining and then the abolition of the authority of the township's own elected Constable.

221

ime Crofter. The part-time crofter follows much the ule and shares the same succession and variety of ndeed, some are not so much part-time crofters as part-time employees. As such, they are successfully a traditional economy no longer en rapport with the g twentieth century commercial world by depending upon benefits of contractual relationships to the smallest degree. One fellow saw the situation this way: "We factories and the like; what we need is something give us time to attend to our crofts." Others feel ey have to abandon the traditional way of life, they
as well leave the island for places where greater 464

182

[829]

fruits of labor are for the vast majority. Although they establish their own tempo, the crofters, both men and women must follow the dictates of the seasons. Inclement weather imposes prolonged periods of idleness. There are conflicts These are not conflicts of meaning, but they pose serious p The small crofter has to decide how he can best allocate hi time. He may want to get in his hay or try making silage, but his sheep, his main source of income, must come first. This does not mean that there is economic disintegration. gration does not mean smooth functioning. Perhaps, a furth discussion of cooperation will clarify the situation.

which heartened them for resistance in common against landlord and State, both in the agitation for reform of the Land Laws during the next ten years and in their demands for 'the return' of sheep farms to crofting, which continued until all these were divided soon after 1919 and the ex-Servicemen's return.

Expenditure of capital in Lewis during more than a generation, from the purchase of the estate in 1844 down to the death of Sir James in 1878, helped to maintain the people and provide relief in bad seasons. It left Lewis greatly improved in roads and paths, in sea communications and in buildings of various sorts. Two real efforts had been made to utilise Lewis peat, industrially for paraffin oil, and agriculturally by reclamation. Given the resources and knowledge of a century ago, these attempts did their initiator credit. Yet failure left the Islanders to continue crofting without either an additional occupation or the extension of croft land, even at the high population density (per acre of arable) which Matheson had found on his purchase in 1844.

Subdivision of crofts was the first result. A father would simply divide his croft between himself and a son, who might not even be entered on the rent-roll of the estate, and the two would inevitably need more stock than before upon the common. The second result was simply 'squatting': the building of a house, perhaps with a tiny kailyard, on a piece of the 'skinned' land. As building went on overcrowding old sites, filth accumulated and springs were contaminated, crofting was hindered and cows became fewer per family, in spite of overstocking. By 1886 about two-thirds the number of the cottars and squatters found in 1914 were already in occupation. In 1914 there were over 3000 statutory crofts in Lewis, their

175 Board, created in 1897 to develop agriculture, fishing and 671 home industries, to form new holdings, to assist migration, 427 and to provide public works such as roads, bridges and [647] piers. These powers were further extended by the Land Settlement (Scotland) Act of 1919, passed to provide land for ex-Servicemen.[1]

The Crofters' Act granted to the individual crofter most of the rights advocated by the Napier Commission, and other advantages besides, but it did not impose upon him the corresponding duties. As Day wrote, "The landlord was compelled to act in the interests of the crofter; the crofter was not compelled to act in his own interest". [632] The Act discarded the core of the Napier Commission's scheme, that of "a recognised local community, the township, with an executive officer, the Constable, working for the improvement of the township, by fencing, draining and other works, with the assistance of the proprietor", the whole scheme enforceable by "legal compulsion on either [829] side". As a Gael might say, the Act discarded duty-right of members of the community to one another.

175 As a result, peace did not descend upon the Island at 423 once. The demand for land continued, followed up by attempts to settle upon it, in spite of police and armed force.
[668] A legal victory was to be pressed home. In Lewis the [113] [1] A useful summary of the legislation is given by the Scot. Econ. Committee's Report, 1938, pp. 17-21, and a searching review in J. P. Day's Public Administration in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, 1918, a work of real social insight.

The Act of 1919 is still the main enactment under which land settlement schemes may be undertaken in Scotland; but the Agriculture (Scotland) Act 1948 included new provision to allow the creation of holdings up to 75 acres in extent and £150 in rental. After the Second World War a more cautious policy was adopted in regard to settlement of ex-Servicemen and little progress has been made in carrying out schemes, despite many unfulfilled applications in the Hebrides and elsewhere where the demand for crofts exceeds the supply.

and the use of the case stability, subdivision subsistence economy to cattle could not have l
cal dependence undistur cooperate? I think not land Problem have exagg glorify the past, have

---

[9]Cf. F. Fraser Da Situation," The West H

enfrom made it welcome." Population inof the crofts and the change from a an export economy based on sheep and eft the old pattern of mutual, recipro
bed. But does this mean they no longe
. In fact, I think critics of the Hig gerated,[9] and the people, always ready been influenced by stories of an ideal

---

arling and Averil Morley, "The Social ghland Survey, Part VI, p. 2.

254

as an eccentric. Included among these norms is a willingness to satisfy the curiosity of one's neighbors. Although the old woman who acts in mysterious ways is no longer regarded as a witch, two of the loneliest people I knew on Skye were two old spinsters who had kept their past concealed. No one in the township would have anything to do with them. Were it not for periodic visits by the local Red Cross, they could have died and hardly been missed.

4 This status equality for all of the same sex and age trade leaves no room for the status and role of a leader.[15] Occasionally, an individual fancies himself as a self-elected leader, but he is always resented by the remainder of the township and his neighbors do not hesitate to show their displeasure. As an eccentric, he is dubbed with a cynical title, such as "the sheriff." If he can keep himself immune to the taunts and jibes of the people, he is accepted in time or, rather, comes to be tolerated. He gives the people something to talk about. The aspiring leader becomes the subject of numerous jokes. Any human failing he displays is immediately taken as a means to censure him. These are negative social sanctions less drastic than ostracism. I only knew one of these self-styled leaders. He was a well traveled man and a walking encyclopedia of miscellaneous facts. Walking the hill with him, I was told how Boston compared with Glasgow; how the British fought the Crimean War; how the money they received from the Turks helped Skye during the potato famine; and how the [15]Cf. Darling and Morley, "The Social Situation," The Crofter's Highland Survey, pt. VI, pp. 24-25.

255

554 New Zealanders breed sheep and make liren. One might say he 626 knew more about the world than about Skye. He could not under-824 stand why so many people made fun of him when he was only trying to help.

626 In the absence of any traditionally valued status and 632 role of leadership, administration of the common interests of the township members is the concern of all. We say in the last chapter that primitive democracy is the guiding rule. Each crofter has an equal voice in deciding any question which affects the group and all, without exception, have to agree before any action is taken. Consent is expressed by silence. Typically, the crofters will have talked the 624 matter over among themselves beforehand. At such times the fact clearly emerges that the grazing clerk and the grazing committee are no more than figureheads required by law. They have no coercive or disciplinary powers. In any group situation, their views are taken no more seriously than those of any other man.

887 It is the old men who gather at one anothers' homes or 888 on the hill on a summer evening to weigh the innovation which 626 the youth want introduced. If they find the change acceptable, 632 they approve it at a meeting of the township by keeping silent. If they believe it will upset the communal system, they disapprove it. The dissenting voice of one old crofter is all that is required to maintain the conservative patterns, economically and socially.

182 In summary, we may say that within the township and 626 on the croft the cultural patterns reveal a fundamental continuity. As of old, status is ascribed. Men have remained had to be accepted. Not a word was heard. At length one 573 crofter simply said, "No one has anything to say, so I guess we 241 all are agreed." One of the former members of the committee 824 could not be re-elected; he had passed away. This was a thorny matter. A series of men were proposed, and each in turn declined. Finally, a man was nominated and seconded before he had a chance to deny himself the honor. Election, of course, was automatic.

267

The committee administers the farm, handles stocking, 573 employs the necessary shepherds, sells the stock, and rents 241 the hunting lodge. They do so, however, within the now tra- 156 ditional framework. They have neither been granted nor assumed a role of independent action. They do not reach independent decisions. They rather weigh and put into operation decisions made by the Department of Agriculture. As we shall see, even 559 the elder, despite his high prestige status, has power to enforce social conformity rather than the authority to direct or lead men.

It is significant that while the share-holding crofters 573 own the farm and their crofts, they have not achieved independence 241 from outside control. Many of the Glendale crofters frankly 156 admit they are afraid of independence. As in any township or 824 neighborhood there are two opposing groups. "There always is someone who tries to sabotage the whole thing," said one man. One group has favored the guidance of the officers of the Department. The other group resents the interference of the government in their affairs. At the same time, however, they do not want to be cast off on their own. They want some form of farm management under a resident manager, preferably not a 573 Skyeman. The attitude of the former faction was aptly expressed 241 by one person who was about to leave Skye: "We need the Department. 156

268

If they withdraw, we wouldn't have anybody to go to for anything." 824
This is in striking contrast to the Irish small farmer for whom land ownership is an all important factor in regulating social interaction and status.[24] On Skye land ownership has not led to 428
any change in the traditional status values. A Glendale crofter 559
is not a better man because he owns land.

Prestige Ranking within the Neighborhood. In so far as prestige 554 ranking is concerned, status is more developed within the neighborhood than within the township. In addition to the crofters and their families, there are always several individuals who are given status because of their performance of the necessary functions of ministering to the peoples' spiritual and physical needs and educating the children. These are the only achieved statuses which are valued by the crofters. Noteworthy enough, 793 only the minister of Glendale serves his own "people and friends." 554

The minister's status depends to some degree on his denomination and the religious sympathies of the people. In Glendale the minister enjoys the highest possible status. In Kilmuir, with two ministers, each is valued by his own congregation with whom he interacts. Nevertheless, all ministers are treated with respect. They are always addressed as the Reverend Mister MacDonald or Mister MacDonald. It is interesting to note that [24]Arensberg, op. cit., pp. 72-100; Arensberg and Kimball, op. cit., pp. 98-144.

272

The crofters of northern Skye are dependent upon the village for the goods of the shopkeepers and the services of 366 the tradesmen. Several times a week food vans from Portree, 443 or from a national concern with headquarters in Portree, call at the crofts. Twice a week a shopping bus brings the men and women into the village from Glendale, and there is a daily bus service from Kilmuir. For the nearby neighborhoods, the 368 village is of religious importance. If the crofters do not come into the village to go to church, the local ministers go out to serve them. They also send their children to school in Portree. Few of the crofters take an active part in the formal social life of the village, but for all who come in on business there is an opportunity for men to stop by at a pub to have a chat with friends and women to get together in a tea room for a bit of gossip. Then too, for many it is an occasion to visit kinsmen who have left the croft. Nevertheless, despite its functional importance, the village 369 has remained something alien and apart for the crofter. 824
Despite the bonds of friendship and kinship and mutual economic dependence, there is antagonism between the rural dweller and village resident.

Part of the crofter's hostility stems from the religious 369 ethos. On at least one occasion, Portree has been described 824 by a minister as being almost as wicked as Sodom and Gomorrah.[25] 771
In the eyes of the majority of the clergy, the village contains the "synagogues of Satin" from which flow the poisons of [25]Rees, Life in a Welsh Countryside, pp. 128-129.

273

immorality. For these reasons, among others, the crofters 369 look down on the villagers. As one man said, "The crofters 824 think we all went to Hell long ago." In part the suspicion 771 and distrust of the villager has grown from the attitude of 369
the villager toward the crofter. 824

Many of the villagers not only look upon the crofters as narrow minded and bigoted but they resent the presence of the crofters on economic grounds. A few representative statements will indicate their views. "The crofters always have their hand out." "They're aye wantin'. They want water, electricity, roads, and all sorts of things, and they don't pay a copper for them." There is a foundation for these attitudes. The phrase "rich man, the government" has become a common saying on the island. The crofter has become accustomed to having the government pay for a large part of the cost of his house, draining his land, and bringing in water and electricity as well as building roads and piers. Many have come to think that there is no end to the obligations of the government. There was one man, for example, whose roof was leaking. Even though the house was his, crofters it will be remembered own their homes, he reported it to his landlord, the Department of Agriculture. Three weeks later, when one of the officers got out to see him, the roof was still leaking. No, he did not see why he should fix it. "Let the government do it." To give another example, in Kilmuir one night there was a discussion about reeds in the grazing land. "We have reeds by the square mile," said one fellow, "the government should 36 do something about it." The villager feels that he is the one 829 who is paying for all the services and facilities the government sponsors. There is a growing consensus that he is just a working man who has to get along as best he can while the crofter is coaxed, coddled, cajoled, and pampered with grants, advantageous loans, and subsidies. "Sure there are poor crofters just as there are men who fail in business," said one man, "but if we can't make a go of it, we go down the drain." Another man put it, "The crofter gets paid by the government for doing nothing--for having a cow on the hill--all I get I get by sweat, hard bloody sweat." These feelings are especially common to the newcomers, but they are by no means held exclusively by this group.

The Social Structure of the Trade-Center Village

121 The village of Portree has a complicated social structure. While I can accept Murdock's contention that social classes operate to unite members of different local groups and to segment the community, I cannot accept his view that the presence of social classes complicates the social structure of a community.[26] Class status, as any status, determines the pattern of reciprocal behavior. By placing the individual in a group with expected behavior patterns, the social structure may be simplified. The individual in the group finds security in the cohesion with others who

[26] Murdock, op. cit., p. 88

565 villagers say he married above his station. His daughter, 562 they believe, married below her station. Be that as it may, he disowned his daughter. He never spoke to her again. The third case involved the marriage of one of the poor, but nevertheless accepted, gentry and a crofter's daughter. He has fared differently. Rather than cast him out, his mother refused to recognize the marriage. He was forbidden to bring his wife home. To this day he continues to divide his time between his estate and his "town house," where he keeps his wife. Further, this man, who I have been told should have become chief of Clan Ranald, is no longer of the county people.

565 Among the distinctive features which overtly characterize 559 the county people is their ascribed status and role of leadership. Indeed, this is their most important function. As the tacksmen were once the counselors of their subtenants, so today the landed gentry must fill this role which the 829 Sgiathanach from the croft will not assume. Even if a Skyeman here and there feels that the local proprietors would like nothing better than to have all the people behave like serfs, bowing and scraping before them, he expects the proprietors 565 to get things done. In Portree the local gentry form the 559 village council. During the war when they were on active 623 duty, there was no village council. The Skye District Council, which replaced the old parish councils and which, acting as an agent for the County Council, is the only administrative body on the island, reveals a similar membership. In any of 565 and no one thought himself capable of running a future meeting.

559 At last reports, the wife of another proprietor was having 747 her impression that "It's not as easy as it sounds just to call a public meeting in Glendale," confirmed. While the majority of the crofters thought an Old People's Welfare Committee was a good idea, they had no intention of being instrumental in its organization or in assuming any position which might elevate them above their neighbors. Throughout this chapter, the stress on conformity has been apparent, let us now turn to the problem of social control for a clearer picture of how conformity is enforced and to see how the Sgiathanach handles the deviant.

Social Control

626 Since social control is an important topic, I want to go into a further analysis of the manner in which the group influences the behavior of its members. For the sake of clarity, we must distinguish between social and political 121 control. By social control I mean the informal pressure or spontaneous action which any organized group can muster to exert an influence on its members sufficient to encourage conformity to tradition patterns of behavior. Political control, to me, involves the independent or requested interference of the state, as represented by the police, in any case which involves the enforcement and maintenance of law 671 and order as prescribed by legal enactments. On Skye the 829 laws of the land do not always have the same meaning to the 671 people as they have for the larger society. This is true 829 in spite of several hundred years of continuous and increasing contact.

Poaching provides an excellent contrast between the two forms of control and the differing attitudes of the state and the Sgiathanach. In Great Britain the tenant of the land does not automatically have hunting and fishing rights. The landlords, including the Department of Agriculture, lease them separately and the county taxes them separately. The crofters, and many of the villagers, have never fully accepted the legality of their being barred from the rivers for fish, the moors for grouse, and the hills for deer. The police enforce the law to the best of their ability, but they cannot always count on the support of the local justices of the peace, much less the cooperation of the people. Several of the local justices of the peace, those who are not landlords, feel that a man catching a few fish for his own use is not poaching.

626 If social control were to assume importance with respect
671 to poaching, it should appear in Glendale. When the crofter 829 owner-occupiers are able to rent the hunting lodge and gaming rights which they received as part of the purchase, they all share in the rent and benefit by not having to pay both owners' and occupiers' rates on the property and the gaming rights. Unfortunately, they have had a great deal of trouble in finding tenants and even more difficulty in keeping them. The river and land is all poached. When asked by whom, one man replied, "Och, who but ourselves would be doing it?" The

626 last tenant apparently decided the whole island was working
671 against him. Unable to catch a single salmon in the Hamara
829 River, an excellent fishing stream, he drove into Portree to buy one from the local fish shop. After he had purchased a fine salmon, he asked the shopkeeper where it was from. Not knowing the gentleman, the fishmonger told him it was fresh in from the Hamara. Buying his own fish, so to speak, was too much for him to take.

626 Favorite subjects in discussions of social control,
829 for the lack of it, are pre-marital and extra-marital sexual relations. One reason for this is, no doubt, the fact that 826 the social control of sex is a universal.[36] In an area such as Skye where the most powerful institution to which the Sgiathanach looks for guidance, the church, forbids or condemns open courting, young people must court in secret. Moreover, for a people who find marriage all but impossible in their younger years, secretive courting not infrequently is accompanied by illegitimacy. A pattern has evolved on Skye to handle such mishaps.[37]

848 The child of an unwed mother is "adopted" by the girl's parents, or, less often, the girl's brother or sister. The foster parents raise the child as their own. People exercise great caution in asking about the parentage of a child who does not seem to be compatible with the age of his mother and

[36] Murdock, op. cit., p. 260.

[37] I have recently found the same pattern in northern New York, and I suspect that it probably exists in other rural areas throughout the Western World.

857 was the first place he had ever worked where his men did not 685 have to lock up their tools at lunch time, and the widows were not broken as fast as they went into the frames. Still there is some theft.

As might be expected in any area of low per capita income and seasonal employment, some people succumb to temptation. Children, now and then, find the temptation of a 857 candy bar, a shiny pocket knife and other such items which [837] shopkeepers may have on the counter too strong to resist. A striking thing is that they always share their loot with 685 their schoolmates. Around New Years, when unemployment is 273 at its height and a man needs his bottle to see in the New Year in the traditional way, some men turn to theft. It never takes the form of house burglarly or armed robbery. As far as I know, the only case of armed robbery in which a man from Skye was involved happened on a train in England. His weapon was a rolling pin. The people at home were very amused when he said he was taking the rolling pin to his mother. The usual forms are to take a cow or sheep or to 685 loot a shop. No answer can be given to the question, how 827 much theft is there? The responses vary. "If you stood on the corner and forgot who you were, they'd have you off in five minutes, so they would," was one man's opinion. The police say, "There's quite a bit of it." An old whiskey smuggler told me, "There's no theft around Portree, but you not safe with five pence in your pocket in Skeabost." This 685 obviously is an expression of neighborhood loyalty. How,

241
476
178
829

ne crofter told me that one of the biggest n the last thirty or forty years was that their ss Christian," in the sense of being neighborly other, than they used to be. Once no one hed my work," until everyone in the township rain. "Colin is harvesting today and Murdo to-over and lend them a hand," was the expected the end of the season, the whole township king on an old widow's croft. "Now when a is land, he says, 'I'm finished,' and that's tement has to be followed by asking if they the sick and the aged. The answer is always a person needs help, his neighbors will help
y can't do his corn, but they help by just h by the door or a pail of milk in his cottage."
ontinue to give mutual aid, but it is anonymous.
ver looks for thanks and never offers it. I [576] lady complaining about an Eastcoaster in had helped by giving some outgrown children's ipient had thanked her profusely. "You know,
"If anyone did that for me, I'd be too choked
g."
the same colors to paint the scene. I was
e harvest was formerly a time of friendly phair-bhacaig, two sheaths of oats tied at d to be thrown on the unfinished fields within each township as a sign of c

the practice of helping one' relatively recent. Again in frequently described as coope
taking as late as 20 years ag
in the township used to work in turn and enjoying a festiv
others told me," but first th and then for the shopkeeper."
to them in those days because debt to him, and he might ext were in his good graces. The
By the time they got around t cut for her, they were all to or the fields needed attentio versions of these stories fro that cooperation varied from township?

The growth in importanc income, associated with the d economy, led to new patterns sheep must be raised in numbe cooperation is imperative, an cially, pooling their capital is true of the nine townships townships where the crofters
the individual flocks are gen

[10]cf. William MacKenzie,

197

ontempt.[10] This suggests that 476
neighbors with the harvest was 241
the matter of cutting peats, 178 829 erative, and a communal undergo, there is disagreement. All together, cutting for each crofter
e picnic. "Sure they would,"
ey would cut for the minister The shopkeeper was more important they would all be in perennial end a little more credit if they y would then cut for each other.
o the old widow with no one to o busy. The sheep had to be dipped
n. I have heard conflicting m neighbors. Are we to conclude door to door and township to e of sheep as a major source of 236

ecline of the old subsistence 476 of cooperation. To be economic 178
rs. As we have seen, physical many crofters cooperate finan-and dividing the profits. This of Kilmuir. Moreover, even in have rejected the club stock plan erally handled as club stock.

Skye: Iochdar-Trotternish, p.59.

198

In Claigan, for example, the crofters felt they would do 236 better with private flocks than with a club stock. Although 476
each man now has his own sheep on the township grazing, they 178 are cared for like any club stock. The four crofters are needed for success at the dippings, marking, and shearing, and they are always at the fank on these occasions. In larger 236 townships, those with ten or more holdings, the need for all 476
the crofters to help out at the fank is less pressing while 621
the felt need for auxiliary employment is stronger. In con- 632 sequence, the cooperative work habits run less smoothly. In an attempt at adjustment, many townships have resorted to paying the share holders for their labor from the profits.
To the best of my knowledge, only one township has witnessed
the total suppression of the cooperative spirit; all the crofters are too busy with full-time employment to bother with the steadily declining sheep stock.

Nevertheless, it has become commonplace for the crofters [829]
to complain of at least one individual in the township who does not pull his full share, someone who is "trying to sabotage the whole thing."

Independence is a personality trait, but it is best 157
described as a steadfast determination not to conform for the 476
mere sake of conformity when an innovation handed down from 829
the outside commercial world is at stake. The old ways are the 888 best ways, even if only the old men think so. It is the old men who uphold the traditional practices. As long as they do,
and as long as unanimous consent is required for any change,

he Highlander will be "independent." As for being "just not cooperative," what the critic really means is that the crofter s unable to cooperate in the ways city people or more sophisticated farmers do. The cooperative movement has come to Skye, ut it was not a local venture. The Scottish Cooperative and holesale Society opened its shops, without shareholders. The istinction between the crofters' simple cooperation and sophisticated cooperation, including capital investment, does ot invariably hold.[11] There are sheep stock clubs. Government loans, of course, provided the initial capital.

In dealing with the topic of cooperation, as any part f the economic aspect of the culture of the Sgiathanach, he basic importance of the township again and again emerges. nly a few crofts exist apart from a township. A more detailed nalysis of the township system and the pressures it imposes n the crofter is, therefore, in order.

The Township

The efficient unit in the local economy is the township, he modern equivalent of the joint-tenants' and tacksmen's arms. Each township consists of a variable number of individual oldings, the low-lying arable and improved grass land held nder hereditary tenure, and a more or less extensive area f rough, unimproved hill grazing held in common. The common, oncurrent right of each crofter to use the hill grazing under he "souming" principle gives the township its focus.

[11] Cf. Darling and Morley, loc. cit.

427 of the holders reside on their land for more than half the
241 year. The lowest rate of absenteeism is found among the tenants
162 of the Department of Agriculture. There are 76 absentees out of a total of 667 tenants. Most of the non-resident crofters are permanently absent. On the small estate mentioned above thirty-seven of the forty-two absentees have not been seen in years. Five of them usually return to Skye to spend their summer vacation.

427 Thus, we have a situation in which, perhaps, a third 241 of the crofts are held by people who either cannot work them
341 because of old age or infirmity, or do not choose to work
887 them because of greater opportunities elsewhere. What, then, happens to this land? Some of the old people allow a neighbor to use the land. Almost invariably this means the few fertile acres will be used for grass and hay. Absentees "entrust" the [67] croft, house and land, to a landless family. While Parliament inadvertently gave the crofter a right to keep his holding whether he resided on it or not, it is illegal to sublet. So far, this has not concerned the crofters. Other absentees "entrust" the land to someone in the township who uses it for grass.

427 Turning to the influence of old age and absenteeism on 887 stocking, we find a series of entanglements. If the township is 231 inhabited solely by old people, like Aird in Sleat, the township becomes derelict. More commonly, the absentee and the old person allows someone else to take over his "souming" so [82] that some crofters have far more than their share. Not infrequently, this gives the crofter a chance to outwit that

427 "rich man, the government." Since subsidies depend on the 887 number of stock, he may forget that all or part of his "souming"
231 has been given away. One old crofter, for example, a few years 829 ago asked a young lady to fill out his agricultural return. She knew his estimates gave a great deal of reason to doubt his veracity, but, preferring not to question the point, she entered his figures. When it came time to sign the report, he was canny. "Och," he said, "just put a tremble in your hand and sign it yourself." There are other crofters who puzzle the authorities by returning the same number of cattle and sheep year after year. Although even the best crofters and farmers lose a few sheep and an occasional cow, they insist [62] that their stock has produced as many as have been sold. As a means of protecting the government from paying for non-existent stock, the police have to be notified when the annual stock counts are to be made. Even when they do supervise the counting, allowances for stragglers have to be made.

654 So pernicious is the effect of non-residence and decrepit
427 crofts, that a recent government commission has recommended the 888 severance of the house from the land in the case of the aged and the eviction of the absentee, as a means of bolstering the economy and alleviating the widespread condition of bad
427 husbandry.[17] This could be the final blow for the culture. Not 888 uncommonly, the croft is subjected to both absenteeism and the infirmity of old age. The heir does not return until he has passed the age of retirement and begins to think, "It would be

[17] Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Crofting Conditions, pp. 42-43, 46-47, cb.

228 waters around Skye.

228 829 I have very briefly reviewed the factors responsible for the present condition of Skye's fisheries. These are unimportant to the people of Skye, many of whom regard the situation dolefully. As far as the crofters are concerned the decline in fishing is due to the following factors: (1) trawlers commit depredations, destroying the spawning beds and fish food in the Minch, poaching the lochs, and sweeping away the gear of the local inshore fishermen; (2) seine netters are just as guilty, especially in depredating shallow waters; (3) there is a lack of harbor facilities; (4) the crofter-fishermen cannot take advantage of the partial grants toward boats and equipment offered by the Herring Industry and White Fishing Industry Boards; (5) the high cost of transportation reduces their profits, especially on lobsters and whelks. The net result is that fishing is dead. As one man put it: "Fishing is as dead as a dodo."

In order to restore the inshore fishing, the crofters advocate, above all, the closing of the Minch to all foreign and British trawlers and seine net fishermen for ten years. Next that "rich man, the government" should provide piers, slips, jetties, and break waters and institute a system of grants and loans for the purchase of boats and gear. Heavy penalties on trawlers who fish illegally, including the confiscation of boats, are also considered desirable. A closed season on lobsters is their final recommendation.

228 In so far as the local white fishing is concerned, there the suggestion detrimental to the best interests of the national 228 economy. There is no doubt that the Skye crofters would benefit. Their peak years, culminating in 1947, coincided with a time when the area was restricted for reasons of security during the Second World War. Additional problems include the loss of creels during gales and transportation difficulties. It takes a day and half for a lobster to reach the London market when all connections are made. The high cost of shipment and the high mortality rate reduce the crofters' profits.

The attitude of the government concerning the domestic 654 feasibility of encouraging the local fisheries may be summed 228 up by the following question by a fishery expert: "Can we afford to jeopardize the livelihoods of men who devote their lives to the sea in favor of an industry which may never develop? There's no official policy yet, but I don't think the Board will ever try to revive the industry on Skye." Al- 228 829 though they slightly exaggerate the situation, a few statements by Skye men sum up the present condition of this activity pretty well. On one estate the landlord who has seen fishing die altogether in the last few years, said: "There are no boats at all, not even for lobsters. Even young men gave it up. All of a sudden it just died, stopped." A man from Stein, an abortive fishing village established by the British Fishery Society in 1790, has also seen fishing cease, "The few boats are beached, look at them rotting on the beach." He believes the decline in fishing is one reason for the continued depopulation. Others share his belief. A school teacher said, "Few realize how recent the decline in fishing really is.

Something has to be done to keep the people here." A Glendale 228 829 crofter put it more forcibly: "There aren't enough men in Glendale to man a row boat. They've lost experience. One crew after the last war lost their boat because they didn't know how to use it. If depopulation isn't stopped, there soon will be no need for any of these remedies." Fishing, then, is one of those subjects which is often discussed and about which little is done. Let us turn to a consideration of the less [128] traditional occupations open to the men of Skye and their womenfolk.

Minor Supplementary Industries

Diatomite. Diatomite, the siliceous remains of minute organisms 317 laid down in fresh water lake beds, is found in quantity in drained Loch Cuithir, near Staffin. After extracting, drying, and pulverizing, during which process it loses 70 percent of its weight, it has innumerable industrial uses, ranging from filters for the manufacture of beer, sugar, fruit juices, and petroleum products, through abrasives, to fillers and insulation material. Attempts to work this large and high quality deposit go back seventy years. To date, however, the success has been indifferent. The omnipresent lack of capital, difficult access through rugged terrain, and technological barriers have been limiting factors. Within the last few years outside investment, about £180,000, with a limited amount of local capital has stimulated the industry once again. A road was built by the government to replace the old tramway, long in disrepair and

302

1951 as a single sheet of 200 words it has grown 204 pages. It has the distinction of being the only ine in Great Britain written in longhand. The 203 also pass along the local ken, as it is called.
common belief that the telephone operators are urce. I have known people to drive several miles call from a box in another exchange district because sure the people of their neighborhood would have the e they had hung up the receiver, if they made the
ly. The post office is also said to be a transmitter [829] [205]
h telegraph; some say the post mistresses steam open ers. On shopping days in Portree the women carry than the week's groceries. Down at the square at y gather in small groups to transmit their tantalizing news and, perhaps, scandal.
status groups are left out of the normal gossip 203
ese are the county people and the ministers. The 554 795 get a bit of ken from time to time, but much of the passes without reaching them. The ministers'
n is generally limited to questions of health, events
e cycle, or cases of moral or religious backsliding
t of their congregations. The degree to which the try participates in the verbal spread of news and nds to a great extent on personal qualifications.
one or two who have contacts through whom gossip
ross the lines of cleavage in the social hierarchy.
are probably the least well informed of anybody on ings of everyday life. Once when asking a minister of Scotland

After the si
she declined
with the mini
and communion
Free Church
probably wond
might have to Communion, in
be able to le
The se
among the co
in the commu
as roles, as
and leaders,
because of t attain membe become elder to the contr
ble with the
of Scotland,
the structur Dying, which only r life. While pleasures an deceased is one time in

in Portree. Only one girl appeared for instruction. 794 gnificance of her preparation had been fully explained, 779 184 to take the final step. She did not disagree ister's view that she was prepared for membership n, but she was afraid of what her friends in the and Free Presbyterian Church might say. She was dering what the middle-aged adherents of her church
o say, too. When the Sgiathanach takes his first n Glendale, Kilmuir, or Portree, the people must ook up to him.

cond exception to the age-grade requirement rules 626
unty people. Because of their social position 888 565
nity, which rests on the expression of their statuses, 794 landlords, village and neighborhood representatives and members of the national class system, and heir education in England, the county people ship in the church at an early age. Some have of the church at twenty-one. To subject them ol of the crofters would, obviously, be incompati-r social standing. Although they are all Church [182] here again religion is a reinforcing factor for
of the society.

the final act of living, reveals a host of traits 763 eceive covert expression during an individual's 829
the youth is censured for his spontaneous
the adult is criticized for his behavior, the lways respected. As one woman said, "It is the person's life that the people have nothing but o say about him." Death is one of the two occasions for 763 ended family gathering. Indeed, a man's prestige is best 829

t his funeral. Without exaggeration, death is the most 596 564 icant event of living. It is constantly visualized and
sed. "Second Sight," the ability to foresee future 763
, is mainly concerned with the death of one's "people" iends. Since the ministers have been striving to wipe his belief, it is difficult to get the people to talk it, except in retrospect. Still most of the people, ding many of the newcomers, and not a few of the ministers, nue to believe that some old people,--they are always en and women,--are afflicted with this power. There n old man in one township who would not go out at dusk ear of seeing a funeral, and there was an old woman who old her daughter's death. Lights seen in strange places tell of death. Even the sophisticated Sgiathanach who een born and mised in Portree sometimes forgets himself.
rent story on the island tells of a "ghost bus." The ights suddenly appear behind a driver on the Sligihan For the newcomers this is a fanciful tale, but for al of the natives it has a meaning, death.

All plans are prefixed with the phrase "if spared." 763 pared, we'll shear the sheep on Thursday." "If spared, 195 go down to see my brother soon." Many of the newcomers ade to feel very uneasy by this habit, which is as much
m of speech as greeting people with, "It's wet," or, cold." When a Sgiathanach asks to have something done

837

837 EXTRAMARITAL SEX RELATIONS--presence or absence of an ideal of marital fidelity; cultural definition of adultery (e.g., applying to both spouses, to wife only); allegations of promiscuity; incidence of adultery for both sexes; prevention (e.g., cloistering of women, chastity belts); initiation and conduct of adulterous liaisons; cicisbeism; keeping of mistresses; culturally sanctioned extramarital relations (e.g., wife lending, sexual hospitality); etc. See also:

Prostitution	548	Ceremonial license	786
Concubinage	596	Privileged sex relationships	835
Punishment of adultery	684	Illegitimacy	848

1: Parman E-4, 5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Shawbost

796 miscarriage occurring before marriage also requires
851 standing even when the child to be baptised was conceived
626 by the couple after marriage. A married man who has 848 impregnated a woman who is not his wife must undergo [837] this ordeal before he can have his own children baptised.

It is the responsibility of the entire community to ensure that this punishment is carried out. On one occasion, the minister forgot to lecture a couple, and afterwards sent them a note that they would not have to stand; but they insisted, afraid that people would say that they were getting special treatment.

[203] According to one minister, the manse is a kind of [521] "research center" to which all gossip is reported. Some [193] ministers use this information in the pulpit, chiding
[194] people and calling attention to wrong-doings in front of the congregation. In contrast, a different attitude exists
[184] in parts of Stornoway, where villagers have approached
[159] doctors in the maternity ward for information regarding miscarriages and premarital births only to be told that this information is confidential. The ordeal of standing
[178] in church does not exist in Stornoway. In 1971 a person in Shawbost was accidentally exempted from this ordeal and his exemption was seen by some as providing an opportunity to stop what is considered by many to be an archaic custom.

175 example to lads! Often of tall, fair stock, physically
565 superior from better feeding, accustomed to have his own
582 way, better taught, finely dressed, free and welcomed wherever he went in the glen that fed and fostered him, the young chief had favour on his side; moreover he was protected from the vengeance of jealousy. A song in praise of a young chief of Clan Leod boasts that " the girls [836] would give their snoods for Rory "! When she lost her maiden snood to him, a girl would be excused, and her 'natural' child not dishonoured, but granted a share of paternal affection and inheritance. After marriage, a chief's 175 lady made allowances for his past. But licence, once a habit, is hard to check, and the Gael tell bitter tales of •837 jealous wives, married for policy, and their revenge upon a rival. One gathers that where there were enough gentry to meet, choose and inter-marry freely, as among the Island tacksmen, decency was better observed; but among landlords in the Highlands, as in other lands, local licence was common down to the last century. Then, whereas a Minister of the Established Church could hardly blame his own Patron (or his son), a Free Church Minister could speak out from the pulpit!

175 Of the legendary jus primae noctis, the 'law of the first
585 night' of Boece and other old historians by which a lord had at one time the 'right' to rape the bride of any of his serfs or tenants, there is no authentic record. Yet from the primal right or wrong of conquest, some such 'law' was forced upon the Gael, as upon other peoples. Boswell records MacQuarrie of Ulva's belief that the custom of paying him a sheep when a tenant married was followed in lieu of such a right! Obligatory hospitality also lent itself to abuse. In all relations of chief to people, there were adjustments. In more complex society, poverty makes

848 father. So well is the situation handled that the child in many cases does not know of his illegitimacy. We may illustra this point with the story of a young lad of fifteen.

An old woman applied to the local office of the Ministr of Labor on behalf of "her son" for acceptance in an apprenticeship training course given in Glasgow. The manager of the exchange, who had recently arrived from the Lowlands, was suspicious. He pressed her for information until she admitted the child was her grandson. At a later conference, the boy was asked if he had any place to stay in Glasgow. He replied that he could live with his married "sister." In this case the girl had married someone other than the boy's father. There is no pattern of marriage in these situations. Sometimes the unwed mother-to-be marries the child's father before the child is born. Financial hardship often forces a postponement of the marriage until the very last minute. One couple was married on the day of their child's birth. Other girls never marry. In the latter event gossip appears as a social sanction. As I mentioned earlier, the native who has prospered is not always held in high esteem by the local people. There are several stories on Skye about such men, especially men in Portree, and their illegitimate children.

• 837 Extra-marital relations present a different problem.
626 They definitely are not characteristic of the Sgiathanach. When a husband or wife does commit adultery, he or she is usually a newcomer. Nevertheless, the Islanders feel

ty. If he was one of the "elect," he will enjoy eternal 763
If he was not one of these venerable old men and women, 554 775 expect to suffer eternal damnation. Although baptism [851] acrament and removes original sin, it is only the initial [783]
n the direction of salvation, which election alone con-

Neither the minister nor any member of the bereaved 764 offers a prayer. "What more can you do than bury him," [793] man asked. An old man said, "They are just as well [782] ered without praying for them." In a community which inated by the old people, and in the crofting neighbor-where so many of the crofters are very old, death can ected to disturb the equilibrium of social interaction.
ndale during November and December of 1953 funeral ions made their way through the glen no less than nine

The function of the minister is to restore the dis- [793] patterns, both in the family and in the neighborhood [782] llage). All work stops in the township for three days
e time of death. Some of the cosmopolitans of the [369]
, seeking to justify their deviating behavior, assert [829] ●
e lazy crofter looks forward to a funeral because it hree days of idleness. In the village, of course, it [369] onger possible to bring daily life to a standstill be-he villagers serve a wide area. The "people" of the d do stop work and close their shops. On the day of the all blinds are drawn until after the procession has

s he would if there were illness in the family, the 793
r calls on the bereaved family and leads them in family 764

her brothers and their wives came to visit, and at New Years 576 795 they came by with their bottle of wine, whiskey being a man's [273] [562] drink, to toast the New Year.

Excepting Glendale, where church membership and af- 621
filiation is synonymous with the neighborhood, the township 795 571 may contain affiliates of two or three churches. One small township contains two Free Church families, two Free Presbyterian families, and one Church of Scotland family.
As in any township, they visit one another and cooperate in handling the sheep flocks. Further, the Church of Scotland family often gets out the truck on the Sabbath and drives everyone to Church. This is one of those isolated townships far off the beaten track. Although I certainly agree that people who meet together at a church and pray together get to know each other better because of their religious unity, in this township the families have come to know each other better because they go off to their respective churches together. There is a firm, basic belief 795 among the people that no one should be slighted, even by a 829 ● minister, because he has differing religious sympathies. 798
Were this not so, think of the position in which I would have found myself. One Free Presbyterian family put it this way,
"Who can tell which church is the right one since they all claim to be on top of the pole? Maybe they all are and everyone will get to his final resting place." The "all" was later qualified to exclude Catholics. One of the gentry told me an amusing story on this point. One day during the blitz of London he was talking with a crofter's wife, and they 795

got to discussing Hitler. "What a terrible man he is," she 829 ●
said, "Why he's worse than...worse than...almost as bad as the 798 Pope." In another township there is a Church of Scotland 795 missionary, a lay preacher. His religious sectarianism does 797
not prevent his interacting with the Free Presbyterians,
who are in the majority. Not infrequently, he visits his neighbors and when they need help on the croft he is prepared to lend a hand. When he pays a call, he establishes the tempo of interaction at mealtime or tea time by saying grace and returning the thanks. This is part of the hospitality 574 of the Sriathanach. The visitor is always asked to say 782 grace.

What is true of the township on Skye, is also partly 621
true of the neighborhood. Here the members and adherents of 794
the same church do get to know one another better because of a common faith, or their particular interpretation of a faith
common to all. They see each other with greater regularity.
Then, too, since the congregations are small, they feel they belong. At the same time, the patterns of interaction are not exclusive, except in Glendale. The religious cliques are [476]
mutual aid groups, doing what they can for the infirm and [796]
destitute; they are not opposing factions. Nor does religious homogeniety mean the absence of factions. Glendale has its independents who are set against the disciples of the Department of Agriculture. Anyone who knows Wales may be struck by this 795 difference, for in Wales the people are attached to a particular 171

8

834 GENERAL SEX RESTR
behavior between the se
before or during cerem
miscellaneous sex rest Effect of sexual repression on Regulation of sex relations be castes, and ethnic groups.
Sex behavior and taboos at m during pregnancy . . . .
Euphemisms . . . . . .
Modesty in dress . . . . .
Modesty about elimination .
Modesty in bathing . . . .

34

ICTIONS--sexual modesty and decorum; ideas of proper exes; sex taboos observed on particular occasions (e.g., nonies, war, hunting, or special industrial activities);
rictions; etc. See also:

personality 15
Etiquette 576
Deferred consummation 585
tween classes, ... 66
Sex regulation under polygamy 596
Avoidance and joking relationships 602
enstruation and 84
Punishable sex offenses 684
. 196
Word taboos 784
. 291
Asceticism 785
. 514
Sex taboos during lactation 853
. 515
Training of children in modesty 864

632 with the decision which they know is to be made usually 571 do not attend the meeting. Thus, apparent consensus is 666 always maintained.

632 Changes in the character of the township as social 178 boundary system are apparent in ceremonial occasions such as weddings and funerals, which will be discussed in the following pages.

584 1. Courtship and Marriage: Courtship occurred during the dark hours when the older members of a household had gone to bed. A great deal of courting was done in [514] company. Because transportation was limited, groups of young people went together to dances; and on other nights, bands of young men would visit a house in which several girls were sleeping together, climb in through a window, and perhaps lie beside the girls, fully dressed, filling the dark with whispered jokes. Such a custom, a form of bundling, was called "night visiting" (ruith na h-oidhche); the male visitor was called caraid na h-oidhche, "companion of the night."

When couples began serious courting, they would meet outside at night, or the girl would let her bramar (sweetheart) into the house after the old people had gone to bed. A couple would never consider walking hand in [834] hand along the road during the day. Boys and girls were seated separately in school, went around in separate

584 groups on the sheilings or within the village as they [834] were growing up, and even during courtship maintained a joking, somewhat rude interaction. "If he says he wouldn't touch her with a barge pole, he's obviously smitten." Someone considering the dangers of marrying an outsider[1] commented, "A devil you know is better than a devil you don't know."

584 Now that facilities for transportation have increased, 198 couples tend to pair off in cars rather than go in [493] groups. They may even be seen together on a date in [535] town. Activities such as dances still begin late in the night, lasting from about 12:30 a.m. until early morning. The seriousness of a relationship is kept secret for as long as possible, but weddings today require long-term planning because wedding dinners are held in hotels rather than within the village. At an 514 earlier time, serious intentions were announced only a 584 few weeks before the wedding, at a reiteach or dinner party which signified a betrothal. Reiteach also means "disentangling" or "reconciling," and was described by one person as a means of "pouring oil

[1]The term "outsider" usually connotes non-Gaelic-speaking, but may also refer to someone from outside the village.

626 last tenant apparently decided the whole island was working
671 against him. Unable to catch a single salmon in the Hamara
829 River, an excellent fishing stream, he drove into Portree to buy one from the local fish shop. After he had purchased a fine salmon, he asked the shopkeeper where it was from. Not knowing the gentleman, the fishmonger told him it was fresh in from the Hamara. Buying his own fish, so to speak, was too much for him to take.

626 Favorite subjects in discussions of social control,
834 or the lack of it, are pre-marital and extra-marital sexual relations. One reason for this is, no doubt, the fact that
836 the social control of sex is a universal.[36] In an area such as Skye where the most powerful institution to which the Sgiathanach looks for guidance, the church, forbids or condemns open courting, young people must court in secret. Moreover, for a people who find marriage all but impossible in their younger years, secretive courting not infrequently is accompanied by illegitimacy. A pattern has evolved on Skye to handle such mishaps.[37]

848 The child of an unwed mother is "adopted" by the girl's parents, or, less often, the girl's brother or sister. The foster parents raise the child as their own. People exercise great caution in asking about the parentage of a child who does not seem to be compatible with the age of his mother and

[36]Murdock, op. cit., p. 260.

[37]I have recently found the same pattern in northern New York, and I suspect that it probably exists in other rural areas throughout the Western World.

836

836 PREMARITAL SEX RELATIONS--presence or absence of a standard of chastity for the unmarried; variations in the standard (e.g., by sex, by class status); basis of the standard (e.g., material or ethical considerations); prevalence of premarital liaisons; degree of social approval or disapproval; seduction; assignations; permanency and exclusiveness of premarital unions; reciprocal behavior of lovers; incidence of rivalry and jealousy; termination of liaisons; evidence as to infertility of premarital unions; etc. See also:

Fertility, contraception, abortion, infanticide, and illegitimacy 84
Trial marriage 583
Courtship and behavior during betrothal . . . 584
Idealization of chastity 821
Sex training 864
Adolescent activities 883

175 example to lads! Often of tall, fair stock, physically
565 superior from better feeding, accustomed to have his own
582 way, better taught, finely dressed, free and welcomed wherever he went in the glen that fed and fostered him, the young chief had favour on his side; moreover he was protected from the vengeance of jealousy. A song in praise of a young chief of Clan Leod boasts that "the girls 836 would give their snoods for Rory"! When she lost her maiden snood to him, a girl would be excused, and her 'natural' child not dishonoured, but granted a share of paternal affection and inheritance. After marriage, a chief's 175 lady made allowances for his past. But licence, once a 837 habit, is hard to check, and the Gael tell bitter tales of jealous wives, married for policy, and their revenge upon a rival. One gathers that where there were enough gentry to meet, choose and inter-marry freely, as among the Island tacksmen, decency was better observed; but among landlords in the Highlands, as in other lands, local licence was common down to the last century. Then, whereas a Minister of the Established Church could hardly blame his own Patron (or his son), a Free Church Minister could speak out from the pulpit!

175 Of the legendary jus primae noctis, the 'law of the first 585 night' of Boece and other old historians by which a lord had at one time the 'right' to rape the bride of any of his serfs or tenants, there is no authentic record. Yet from the primal right or wrong of conquest, some such 'law' was forced upon the Gael, as upon other peoples. Boswell records MacQuarrie of Ulva's belief that the custom of paying him a sheep when a tenant married was followed in lieu of such a right! Obligatory hospitality also lent itself to abuse. In all relations of chief to people, there were adjustments. In more complex society, poverty makes

181 people, although life in crowded quarters and daily concern with the rearing of animals make for a frankness not 183 readily understood by strangers in Victorian times. The 848 standard of morality in the Isles is high, and the rate of illegitimacy low. A courting custom, once common 584 through the northern and western coasts of Britain, as in Norway and New England, was ' bundling ', a preliminary to marriage, or bed-fellowship (leapachas). This is noted [836] with disarming frankness by various writers.[1] After the ceremonial and festivities of the betrothal, reiteach, a young man was allowed to sleep beside his betrothed; but the marriage ceremony was to precede, not follow, consummation. At wedding festivities, sweethearts found their way to the barn and took their rest together on the straw. In the shielings, too, courtship was given some freedom:
trust is a necessity where there could not be total restraint.

585 To what extent marriage sometimes took place or may still occur after consummation and the expectation of a first child, only one with close local knowledge could say.
' Hand-fasting ', marriage made binding only by the conception of a first child, was an ancient custom. Two things must be remembered. First, the strength of parental benediction and authority, backed by a community in which all knew one another from childhood, gave binding force to betrothal and its obligations; and ceremonies such as that of the kertching effectually replaced legal and ecclesiastical marriage when there was neither registrar, minister nor priest. Secondly, marriages blest with children tend to be happy ones. Fulfilling the cycle of life, children also provided the support to old age needed among peasants living on the edge of poverty.

[113] [1] W. A. Smith, Lewiana; and Brand Report, 1902.

6: Ducey E-4,5 (1953-1954) 1956 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Skye

626 last tenant apparently decided the whole island was working 671 against him. Unable to catch a single salmon in the Hamara 829 River, an excellent fishing stream, he drove into Portree to buy one from the local fish shop. After he had purchased a fine salmon, he asked the shopkeeper where it was from.
Not knowing the gentleman, the fishmonger told him it was fresh in from the Hamara. Buying his own fish, so to speak, was too much for him to take.

626 Favorite subjects in discussions of social control, 834 or the lack of it, are pre-marital and extra-marital sexual relations. One reason for this is, no doubt, the fact that 836 the social control of sex is a universal.[36] In an area such as Skye where the most powerful institution to which the Sgiathanach looks for guidance, the church, forbids or condemn open courting, young people must court in secret. Moreover, for a people who find marriage all but impossible in their younger years, secretive courting not infrequently is accompanied by illegitimacy. A pattern has evolved on Skye to handle such mishaps.[37]

848 The child of an unwed mother is "adopted" by the girl's parents, or, less often, the girl's brother or sister. The foster parents raise the child as their own. People exercise great caution in asking about the parentage of a child who does not seem to be compatible with the age of his mother and

[36] Murdock, op. cit., p. 260.

[37] I have recently found the same pattern in northern New York, and I suspect that it probably exists in other rural areas throughout the Western World.

f a wife was to weave her winding sheet. Nor is the cost 761 ial merely buying a coffin. As at birth and marriage, 454 ople who attend a funeral must have their dram. Just as [829]
o not want subsidies to begin life, they do not want to ied with public assistance. They hoard their money, even is only a few pounds, to assure themselves of a decent . Another thing that disturbs the welfare officers is 763 termination of the old and infirm to remain on their 186
in spite of all efforts to move them to a "Twilight
Some of these people may have returned to Skye for er reason than the feeling, "If I could go back to Skye it would be fine." I knew many people who had come to as young adults and "liked it fine." Why did they
? The answer is always the same, "I was getting old, you and began to think of home." This, of course, is another sion of the sentimental attachment for the land and its ty with one's "people."

Paradoxically, for a [illegible]ple who are so aware of death 763 ok upon it so significantly, the churches, one and all, 796 efused to consecrate burial. There are no prayers for [782]
d. There is no service for the dying or at the grave body is lowered into the soil. The ritual which accompanies nal act of living is better described as a rite of fication rather than as a passage rite, to adopt the logy of Chapple and Coon.[15]

Once the individual dies, his status is fixed for all 000

---

[15] Chapple and Coon, Principles of Anthropology, pp. 398-399.

strongly about this infringement of the traditional norms. 837
Gossip spreads very rapidly. The offenders are said to be 426
"no better than the tinkers." While tinkers are respected [554] [754]
because they have the power of the evil eye, they are not accorded any more prestige than we would give a beggar. All who have any contact with the neighborhood or the village where the deviants live soon know all the details. Since [369]
most of the adulterers on Skye have been in Portree, it adds another brick to the wall which separates the rural neighborhoods and the trade-center village. The offenders normally leave Skye as quickly as possible.

The Sgiathanach cannot be said to have a strong sense 423
of property, or, more correctly, the land is valued as a 421
place of residence and identity not as something to be bought and sold. We have seen that he uses his land communally and that he often will not leave a will for the house, not to mention his land. Even though the state thinks otherwise, he looks upon the natural resources of the island as his for the taking. At the same time, he normally respects the fruits of 421 his neighbor's labor. Any one can cut peat on the moor, but [314]
no one, except an unthinking tourist, would take a piece of turf once it had been cut. In a simlar way, the children are 857 generally well behaved. In the village there is a bit of stone throwing, a little profanity, and uncommonly some drinking on the sly, but rarely do children show any disrespect for the rights of others. One contractor, a Lowlander who came up to Skye to make alterations on the school, was amazed. Skye

844

844 CHILDBIRTH--ideas about childbirth; attitude of the community; importance of first and subsequent births; preparations for delivery; place of birth; witnesses, assistants, and excluded persons; role of midwives and obstetricians; onset and duration of labor; facilitation of delivery (e.g., pressure, massage); posture in childbirth; receiving the baby; severing and tying the umbilical cord; expulsion of placenta; disposal of exuviae; immediate care of mother and child; cleansing, bandaging, and medication of mother; adjustments to postnatal hemorrhage; treatment of baby (e.g., initiation of respiration, cleansing, swaddling); etc. See also:

Birth statistics 163
Infant and maternal mortality 165
Birth registration 217
Birthdays 537
Hospitals 743
Medical personnel 759
Special mortuary rites 766
Omens, divination, and astrology 787

885 in thy kertch!" and counsels her to be hospitable yet wise, 539 and courageous though calm; to be frank yet tactful, dignified though kind. The themes of this ode's melodious
885 verse recall the virtues of a wife enumerated mnemonically
538 in the acrostic which concludes the Book of Proverbs.
593 For in that, too, there is mention of "strength and dignity, wisdom and kindness", and the poor are not forgotten as the wife goes tirelessly about her work, sets her servants to their tasks and sells her merchandise at a profit. Yet the acrostic's emphasis on the wife's work and its gain reveal the writer as a shrewd citizen seeking to train a wife to ceaseless exertion and business dealing, with her husband's private profit and public honour as a most important end! The singer of 'The Kertch'—man or woman, one cannot tell—thought of conduct not for its profit first, but for its virtue, and dwelt upon motive, mind and heart.[1]

175 To tide over the supreme crisis of childbirth the mother
844 was strengthened in confidence, courage and calm. The need was the greater before modern midwifery. In Sutherland as late as 1908, a good professional nurse tending a difficult case of childbirth, anxious and powerless without a doctor, found herself indebted to older wisdom. The patient's mother first filled a small basin with water into [788] which she put trinkets of gold and silver. "She then held the basin to her dying daughter's lips, and made her drink three mouthfuls of the water, each mouthful in the name of Father, and of Son, and of Spirit, 'the three Persons of the Trinity of kindness and power, Tri Pears na Trianaid chaoimh chumhachdaich'. Soon after, the child came . . .

[113] [1] Am Breid, 'The Kertch'. Carmina, No. 215. A short paraphrase by Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, set to a lovely air and refrain, will be found in From the Hebrides. First published (imperfectly) in Nether Lochabor by the Rev. Alexander Stewart (1883, p. 4) with delightful notes.

The visitors each give the child a gift, especially a silver coin. This token of good luck is placed under the child's pillow. The relationships, then, are essentially reciprocal and individual.

The child's position within the extended family is also fixed at the time of birth by his naming. As a rule, the first son is named after his paternal grandfather, and the first daughter, after her maternal grandmother. The second son is given the name of his maternal grandfather, and the second daughter, that of her paternal grandmother. There are exceptions to this pattern. One grandmother was adverse to having her granddaughter named after her, because nowadays, with late marriage, the naming frequently follows the death of the individual. By far the most common exceptions occur when someone in either parent's family of orientation has passed away. Where the mother's father has died, the first boy is named after him. The same is true for girls when the father's mother has passed away. When a brother or sister of either parent has died, especially without issue, the second born is named "in honor of his memory." In these days of small families, this has led to giving a girl the equivalent of a man's name. There was, for example, Angusina who had been named after her uncle who was killed in the war. Again, with delayed marriage, the couple may have only one child. He or she is given the names of both the paternal and maternal grandparents, such as Ian (for father's father) Ducan (for mother's father) or Morag (after mother's mother) Flora (after father's mother). Aside from serving to identify members of

848

848 ILLEGITIMACY--cultural definition of legitimacy and illegitimacy; frequency of illegitimate pregnancies; tests of legitimacy; behavior and treatment of mother (e.g., ordeals, confession); treatment of father (e.g., forced marriage); treatment of offspring; status of illegitimate children; etc. See also:
Legal sanctions . . . . . 684 Premarital sex relations 836

2. The Township as Religious Network: The religious sphere has two distinguishable social networks, one of which coincides in personnel with the village network. Most households within the village feel obligated to "make an appearance" during at least one of the two Sunday services. Most children are sent to Sunday school, and all are baptised. In baptism, fathers stand with the children, promise to raise them in the church, and to set a good example for them. Baptism must precede Communion, the ceremony by which a person becomes a full member of the church. Baptism signifies membership in the community the village-qua-congregation. "Somehow you're not really legal until you've been baptised." Some feel that the child's soul may be endangered if he should die without baptism, although this idea is discouraged by the church. According to the Calvinistic ideas of predestination, the fate of one's soul has already been decided.

The pressure to have children baptised enables the village-as-congregation to exert social control over devia individuals. If a child is conceived out of wedlock, the parents of the child (if they have gotten married) or the unwed mother alone must stand in front of the congregation and be lectured by the minister before the child may be baptised. A woman who has married a man known not to be the father of her child must also stand by herself. A

796 miscarriage occurring before marriage also requires
851 standing even when the child to be baptised was conceived
626 by the couple after marriage. A married man who has 848 impregnated a woman who is not his wife must undergo [837] this ordeal before he can have his own children baptised.

It is the responsibility of the entire community to ensure that this punishment is carried out. On one occasion, the minister forgot to lecture a couple, and afterwards sent them a note that they would not have to stand; but they insisted, afraid that people would say that they were getting special treatment.

[203] According to one minister, the manse is a kind of [521] "research center" to which all gossip is reported. Some
[793] ministers use this information in the pulpit, chiding
[794] people and calling attention to wrong-doings in front of the congregation. In contrast, a different attitude exists
[184] in parts of Stornoway, where villagers have approached
[759] doctors in the maternity ward for information regarding miscarriages and premarital births only to be told that this information is confidential. The ordeal of standing in church does not exist in Stornoway. In 1971 a person
[178] in Shawbost was accidentally exempted from this ordeal and his exemption was seen by some as providing an opportunity to stop what is considered by many to be an archaic custom.

181 people, although life in crowded quarters and daily concern with the rearing of animals make for a frankness not 183 readily understood by strangers in Victorian times. The 848 standard of morality in the Isles is high, and the rate of illegitimacy low. A courting custom, once common 584 through the northern and western coasts of Britain, as in Norway and New England, was 'bundling', a preliminary to marriage, or bed-fellowship (leapachas). This is noted [836] with disarming frankness by various writers.[1] After the ceremonial and festivities of the betrothal, reiteach, a young man was allowed to sleep beside his betrothed; but the marriage ceremony was to precede, not follow, consummation. At wedding festivities, sweethearts found their way to the barn and took their rest together on the straw. In the shielings, too, courtship was given some freedom: trust is a necessity where there could not be total restraint.

585 To what extent marriage sometimes took place or may still occur after consummation and the expectation of a first child, only one with close local knowledge could say. 'Hand-fasting', marriage made binding only by the conception of a first child, was an ancient custom. Two things must be remembered. First, the strength of parental benediction and authority, backed by a community in which all knew one another from childhood, gave binding force to betrothal and its obligations; and ceremonies such as that of the kertching effectually replaced legal and ecclesiastical marriage when there was neither registrar, minister nor priest. Secondly, marriages blest with children tend to be happy ones. Fulfilling the cycle of life, children also provided the support to old age needed among peasants living on the edge of poverty.

[113] [1] W. A. Smith, Lewiana; and Brand Report, 1902.

626 last tenant apparently decided the whole island was working
671 against him. Unable to catch a single salmon in the Hamara
829 River, an excellent fishing stream, he drove into Portree to buy one from the local fish shop. After he had purchased a fine salmon, he asked the shopkeeper where it was from. Not knowing the gentleman, the fishmonger told him it was fresh in from the Hamara. Buying his own fish, so to speak, was too much for him to take.

626 Favorite subjects in discussions of social control,
834 or the lack of it, are pre-marital and extra-marital sexual relations. One reason for this is, no doubt, the fact that
836 the social control of sex is a universal.[36] In an area such as Skye where the most powerful institution to which the Sgisthanach looks for guidance, the church, forbids or condemns open courting, young people must court in secret. Moreover, for a people who find marriage all but impossible in their younger years, secretive courting not infrequently is accompanied by illegitimacy. A pattern has evolved on Skye to handle such mishaps.[37]

848 The child of an unwed mother is "adopted" by the girl's parents, or, less often, the girl's brother or sister. The foster parents raise the child as their own. People exercise great caution in asking about the parentage of a child who does not seem to be compatible with the age of his mother and

[36] Murdock, op. cit., p. 260.

[37] I have recently found the same pattern in northern New York, and I suspect that it probably exists in other rural areas throughout the Western World.

8

51

may come to spend nights or longer periods of time them.

To some extent villagers are still dependent on other for various kinds of help. It is considered mely bad manners to refuse labor, a tool, or food yone who requests them. If someone refuses to aid er, people say, "What will he do when he needs
" This attitude has made the island a paradise
he few salesmen who, in the last few prosperous
, have started to visit its communities; villagers it difficult to say no to anyone who comes to their with a request, including the request that they omething.

A woman in childbirth was formerly attended by a midwife, and kept in bed for two or three weeks.
r women, both relatives and friends, came and stayed them at night, fixing them warm tea and milk, ering bhronag bochd (poor soul), how awful you look..."
as today the neighbors gather at times of illness eath. It is more difficult for neighbors to come e bedsides of young mothers of today, who are all to the hospital in Stornoway to have their babies;
he neighbors manage to visit the hospital, which has oice but to ignore its rule of only two visitors ed at a time.

885 in thy kertch!" and counsels her to be hospitable yet wise, 539 and courageous though calm; to be frank yet tactful,
dignified though kind. The themes of this ode's melodious
885 verse recall the virtues of a wife enumerated mnemonically
538 in the acrostic which concludes the Book of Proverbs.
593 For in that, too, there is mention of "strength and dignity, wisdom and kindness", and the poor are not forgotten as
the wife goes tirelessly about her work, sets her servants
to their tasks and sells her merchandise at a profit. Yet
the acrostic's emphasis on the wife's work and its gain reveal the writer as a shrewd citizen seeking to train a wife to ceaseless exertion and business dealing, with her husband's private profit and public honour as a most important end! The singer of 'The Kertch'—man or woman, one cannot tell—thought of conduct not for its profit first, but for its virtue, and dwelt upon motive, mind
and heart.[1]

175 To tide over the supreme crisis of childbirth the mother
• 844 was strengthened in confidence, courage and calm. The need was the greater before modern midwifery. In Sutherland as late as 1908, a good professional nurse tending a difficult case of childbirth, anxious and powerless without a doctor, found herself indebted to older wisdom. The patient's mother first filled a small basin with water into [788] which she put trinkets of gold and silver. "She then held the basin to her dying daughter's lips, and made her drink
three mouthfuls of the water, each mouthful in the name of Father, and of Son, and of Spirit, 'the three Persons
of the Trinity of kindness and power, Tri Pears na Trianaid chaoimh chumhachdaich'. Soon after, the child came . . .

[113] [1] Am Breid, 'The Kertch'. Carmina, No. 215. A short paraphrase by Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, set to a lovely air and refrain, will be found in From the Hebrides. First published (imperfectly) in Nether Lochabor by the Rev. Alexander Stewart (1883, p. 4) with delightful notes.

175 and all was well. . . . 'How the trinkets in the water
• 844 could affect the case', continued the nurse, 'I do not 788 know, but that some occult power was at work . . . I am certain.'"[1] As to the gold, did not the Magi offer the 844 same 'magic' at the Nativity? Is a drink of water not the simplest physic to cool a fevered system? Is not each 788 Name of the Trinity, breathed by a mother to her daughter in labour in her turn, a Word of tender power and courage:
while the slow rhythm of the three Names may calm the wild heart-beats which had brought on haemorrhage, and lead to safe delivery?

771 Throughout life there prevailed the concept of God as 'encompassing' man, woman or child, old or young, in their weakness. This image is ancient, and is found in the Psalms (10, 12, 32, 142). So long as faith were alive the Lord's aid might be called upon for another in need of help, or for one's own protection. To clarify the concept, unseen, by help of a thing seen, a circle was drawn with the hand round oneself or another, in fear, danger or distress.[2] By such innocent aid the people strengthened confidence in sickness and resistance in temptation, and concentrated prayer for delivery from evil.

888 As age approached, its gifts were honoured. For in age, memory, kneaded by labour, is leavened by leisure;
the experience won on land and sea, or in group-farm and home, can be weighed. And gifts of feeling, sown in childhood and growing through life, ripen as grandchildren come in from their herding or play to listen and learn.
[538] When manuscripts or books were unobtainable, readings rarely heard, and the people illiterate, teaching could only

[1] Carmina, vol. iv, p. 283.
[2] Carmina, vol. ii, Notes; cf. Nos. 248-250, etc. Encircling or circuiting symbolically, was also known by a word of which only the literal meaning is now known to most: cuartachadh.

Life Cycle

Birth. Childbirth placed both the mother and child in the 175* 844 danger of harm by malevolent spirits, especially fairies, who would substitute one of their children for the human child.[94]
To protect them each morning and evening a sunwise circle was made around the mother and child with a firebrand or burning peat. All visitors crossed themselves with a firebrand and might have the circle of fire made around them. As a token of good luck the child was given silver; it was bad luck to give it to the mother. If a person praised the child without wishing it good luck or God's blessing, they might put the evil eye on it. Although only old midwives are said to have continued to make the firey circle by 1700 on Skye, the belief in the evil eye was still strong.[95] The mother did no work, and rejoicing was postponed until she was "kirked." The parents, their relatives and friends attended a church service to give thanks for a safe mother and a living child. After the service, they went to the home for a feast and dance. Following the Reformation, the custom was placed under censure, as were all Catholic and pagan rituals. 175* 852

Baptism. Baptism freed the child from the power of the fairies and the evil eye. Until baptized, the child was not called by any name. On the way to baptism, the parents carried bread and [94] The following is mainly taken from William Mackay, "Life in the Highlands in Olden Times," TGSI, Vol. XXIX (1922), pp. 1-18.

[95] Martin, op. cit., pp. 177-178, 181-182.

ure of the church by being tested on his knowledge 626 and the Shorter Catechism. The elders, then, 851 • dicial capacity. If the father measures up to the 888 mposed by the elders and the minister, who is their 794 [779]
therefore, must reflect their views, the father present the child for baptism. If he does not elders, his child is refused the rewards of the his father mends his ways. Here the authoritarian the elderly finds expression.

en are reluctant to approach the elders to ask rament. Everyone knows when a man is going to be udged. The humiliation of being refused forces o reform. Since the elders think in terms of avior, one or even two years may pass before the feel that he has continuously demonstrated his o the satisfaction of the elders. Nor is the bond between the elder and his people and friends
h to prompt any leniency. To do so would threaten f the elders and the continuation of their control.
a first cousin of the minister was refused.

trade center village the question of baptism is 369
for the ministers of the Free Church and the Free 626 951 Church. As might be expected, the elders of the 888
otland are chosen from the county families and 794 t newcomers. Neither group shares the views of ch as far as their interpretation of circumspect concerned. For them baptism is administered to the child. Consequently, the sacrament is normally administered 369 without even the formality of a kirk session examination. The 626 ministers of the other churches assert that non-church-going, 851 • drunken fathers whom the kirk session has refused have gone to 888

the Church of Scotland and have secured the sacrament for their 794 children after pretending to mend their ways. They have then gone back to their former habits. It may be so, but at least one man in Portree was very surprised to find that the Church of Scotland can require a severe examination.

At baptism the child is formally introduced into the 851 folds of his father's church. His mother and father stand 794 before the minister and are admonished to bring up the child in the nurture and admonition of God, to the best of their ability.

Marriage is not a sacrament in Scotland, and, therefore, 585
does not provoke any strong resentment beyond a feeling that [779]
the Church of Scotland should not have the exclusive right to proclaim the banns of marriage. It is the one time in 585
the life of a woman when she is the center of attention and 562 has complete control over the situation. She decides where 794 she will be married and what minister will preside. Church affiliation seems to make little difference. At least, the wedding of a daughter of a strict Free Presbyterian family in the Church of Scotland did not give the people any cause to gossip. Although a wedding is no more than a legal formality, the vows made at marriage are sacred. It would not strike Americans as being particularly significant to omit the promise to obey from the ceremony; Americans are said to have an eternity. If he was one of the "elect," he will enjoy eternal 763 life. If he was not one of these venerable old men and women, 554

he can expect to suffer eternal damnation. Although baptism 775
is a sacrament and removes original sin, it is only the initial [851] •
step in the direction of salvation, which election alone con- [783]
firms. Neither the minister nor any member of the bereaved 764
family offers a prayer. "What more can you do than bury him," [793]
one woman asked. An old man said, "They are just as well [782] remembered without praying for them." In a community which is dominated by the old people, and in the crofting neighborhoods where so many of the crofters are very old, death can be expected to disturb the equilibrium of social interaction.
In Glendale during November and December of 1953 funeral
processions made their way through the glen no less than nine times. The function of the minister is to restore the dis- [793]
turbed patterns, both in the family and in the neighborhood [782]
(or village). All work stops in the township for three days from the time of death. Some of the cosmopolitans of the [369]
village, seeking to justify their deviating behavior, assert [829]
that the lazy crofter looks forward to a funeral because it means three days of idleness. In the village, of course, it [369] is no longer possible to bring daily life to a standstill because the villagers serve a wide area. The "people" of the deceased do stop work and close their shops. On the day of the funeral all blinds are drawn until after the procession has passed.

As he would if there were illness in the family, the 793
minister calls on the bereaved family and leads them in family 764

people of the Free Church are "the Wee Frees." The Free 795 Presbyterians are the "Seceders" or, at least to some of the gentry, the "Split P's." Arguing about religion is [576] considered very bad taste. It is left to the ministers, 793 and they do have their points of difference. One Free 795
Presbyterian minister, for example, told me that no one in 798
the Church of Scotland, including the minister, was worthy
to receive Communion. On many occasions during the year
the ministers of the Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church devote part of their sermon to a criticism of the Church of Scotland, not to mention the avid hostility of all Skyemen toward Catholics.

Adherents of the several sects intermarry with no qualms 582
and without suffering any loss of status. By the time a 795 person gets to be a member, marriage is no longer in his mind. Husband and wife continue to adhere to their respective 593 denominations, those in which they were baptized. The children 795
naturally, are baptized and raised in the church of their [851] •
father. Extended families are often divided religiously 596
along sectarian lines. In one family one brother and his 795
wife were Free Presbyterians, another brother and his wife were Free Church, a sister was Church of Scotland. The parents had been Free Church but became Free Presbyterians
at the turn of the Century. At least one cousin was United Free Church. This religious schism did not affect their affection for one another. Once a week the sister went to have tea with her Free Church sister-in-law. Periodically

his own family of procreation or ceases to be an integral member of the social units. Many features of these relationships will persist throughout his life.

The Sgiathanach treats the event of birth as something in which man is only the agent of a higher power. This fact was brought home to me one night during a discussion of the declining size of families. The question of subsidies to encourage larger families was broached. Although all take advantage of government grants for their stock and care of the land, this form of subsidy was unanimously rejected. As one man said, this would place man in the unthinkable position of a creator. Only the essential arrangements for the care of the mother and her expected child are made before birth. There are no "showers." "Showers," said one woman, "how can you tell if the child will be a boy or girl, or even live?" Today most women go to the maternity hospital at Uig for the delivery, but a few prefer to remain at home under the care of their mothers. To expect that the father's mother would take charge, even under the clan system, would be carrying the patriarchial emphasis too far. Within a few days, the obligations of the parents, their relations, and the people of the township become apparent. One by one the individuals and couples make their way to the cottage to welcome the child. This individual visiting is a modified survival of the old custom of "kirking," a group offering of thanks, at the church, for a safe mother and a healthy child, followed by a dance and feast at home. The parents are obliged to provide a dram of whiskey so that all the visitors can toast the child.

846

846 POSTNATAL CARE--care of postparturient mother during period of recuperation (e.g., rest, isolation, medication, sex and food taboos); duration of lochia and its disposal; visits and presents; resumption of normal life (e.g., gradual, after lapse of a specified time); purificatory rites; special care of child between birth and sloughing of umbilical cord; conceptualization and disposition of umbilical cord; treatment and disposition of motherless infants; special behavior of father (e.g., couvade); etc. See also:

Gift giving	431	Purification	785
Adoption	897	Infant feeding	853

1: Parman E-4, 5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Shawbost

Excise taxes were first levied on whiskey in 1814, and stills of less than 500-gallon capacity were prohibited. Local, illegal distillation continued for a long time after 1814, and throughout the Highlands and Islands tales are told of "the excise man" and how he was outwitted. The Island of Pabbay in the Sound of Harris was evacuated in 1843, supposedly because of illegal distillation that was being carried on there. The ruins of old distilling houses are found throughout Shawbost. Villagers say that these were used in the time of their grandfather or great-grandfather to distill whiskey for occasions such as weddings.

In Shawbost, until recent times whiskey was associated mainly with special ceremonial occasions: the birth of a child, weddings, and wakes. When a baby was born, the father went into town for whiskey to be given to visitors coming to see the baby. Having whiskey at a funeral was so important that many a widow sold her cow to provide it, so that people would not say it was a bad funeral. A custom of sitting up all night in the house of the deceased has stopped, probably in part because a prayer meeting lasting from midnight until 2 a.m. was introduced with the intention, according to one minister, of preventing the wake from becoming too joyful an occasion. Whiskey was abundant at New Year's, and at weddings. "The dance his own family of procreation or ceases to be an integral member of the social units. Many features of these relationships will persist throughout his life.

Skye

241

The Sgiathanach treats the event of birth as something in which man is only the agent of a higher power. This fact was brought home to me one night during a discussion of the declining size of families. The question of subsidies to encourage larger families was broached. Although all take advantage of government grants for their stock and care of the land, this form of subsidy was unanimously rejected. As one man said, this would place man in the unthinkable position of a creator. Only the essential arrangements for the care of the mother and her expected child are made before birth. There are no "showers." "Showers," said one woman, "how can you tell if the child will be a boy or girl, or even live?" Today most women go to the maternity hospital at Uig for the delivery, but a few prefer to remain at home under the care of their mothers. To expect that the father's mother would take charge, even under the clan system, would be carrying the patriarchial emphasis too far. Within a few days, the obligations of the parents, their relations, and the people of the township become apparent. One by one the individuals and couples make their way to the cottage to welcome the child. This individual visiting is a modified survival of the old custom of "kirking," a group offering of thanks, at the church, for a safe mother and a healthy child, followed by a dance and feast at home. The parents are obliged to provide a dram of whiskey so that all the visitors can toast the child.

852

852 CEREMONIAL DURING INFANCY AND CHILDHOOD--rites of passage prior to puberty; maturation ceremonies (e.g., at first step, at first tooth); rites associated with cutting of hair, ear piercing, and circumcision; ceremonies correlated with achievements (e.g., first animal killed, first cloth woven); adult guidance and sponsorship; participation of children in adult ceremonies (e.g., Christmas); etc. See also:

Mutilation	304	Artificial kin relationships	608
Birthdays	527	Baptism and confirmation	795, 851
Naming ceremonies	853	Religious ceremonial	796

3: Geddes ES10 Highland Scots ES10

585
788
852
88

[For additional general information on runes and rites at various phases of the life-cycle, see category 796, pp. 158-192, passim.]

3: Geddes K-4, 5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

as the days lengthened during Christmastide, old style, it may be called " The Rune of the World's Light ".

The world, ere came the Son of God,
was black, a bog forlorn :
Void of sun, moon or star,
void of body, heart or form.

'Twas Mary Mother lowly kneeled,
and gave the Inmost Being birth ;
Darkness and tears were driven afar,
the guiding star rose over earth.

Light on the land, the deep illumed
from sullen pool to ocean stream ;
Grief was laid and joy was raised,
with praise and hail and harping free.

Light on the hills, light on the plains,
light o'er grey-green sea and firth ;
Light o'er all the world as one,
the hour God's Son came down to earth.

(D) THE CYCLE OF LIFE

The stages in life's sequence are marked by noble runes, of baptism, initiation in adolescence, betrothal and marriage, childbirth, and of confession and consolation in trials throughout life and, at its close, of farewell. As might be fitting, the benedictions were given by either man or woman : to a child by a parent or elder ; to the young and strong by the wise ; and by lovers to one another. And in the past, especially in trial, the ' soul-friend ' ministered —an anam-chara, a neighbour chosen from lifelong friendships for steadfastness and understanding.

At birth a babe was baptized ; and in the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit the nurse placed three drops

alternating generations and being felt as an obligation to 553 perpetuate family names, these various practices serve to limit confusion among a people who share rather few surnames. I never knew a child who had been named for his parents.

The relationship of father and child is formally es- 851
tablished at baptism. As we shall see in the following chapter, the mother takes little or no part in arranging for the sacrament. The spiritual welfare of the children is the father's 593 concern. He is also the disciplinarian, but in the pre-school years discipline is lax. Both parents freely indulge the child, and they spend a great deal of time with him. The belt, an [861] ever-present, ever-threatened means of punishment, only appears when the child assumes the rights and duties which he will exercise as long as he remains on his parents' croft.

When he begins school at five or, in remote townships, 867
at six, the rights and duties determined by age and sex begin 462 to emerge in perspective. Actually, the child has already begun to make a pretense, playfully imitating his or her father or mother, at assuming his role, but the influence of the sex category is not marked. A small boy may fetch some peat for the fire or some water for the dishes. Once he starts school, he is no longer asked to do these chores. As soon as he is able to carry a pail he may feed the chickens; now he only feeds the calves. His first real task is tending the cattle, bringing them down from the hill and driving them out after the milking. As time goes on, he learns how to plant and dig potatoes, cut turf, harvest hay and oats, and at last how to shear sheep.

passage of the individual from birth, through his age statuses, 12
to death and to re-establish meaningful patterns of interaction after a disturbance by an event in the life cycle. When 851 individual and reciprocal patterns of behavior following birth 774
were described, I pointed out that they were a much modified survival of the old practice of kirking, the custom of having the parents, their "people," and "friends" attend a church service to offer thanks, followed by a feast and dance. Similar festivities once accompanied baptism. As the first event in the life cycle which concerns the church, and as one of the two sacraments celebrated in the church, baptism is of supreme importance. In addition to revealing the amount of control [121]
the elderly have over the group, it shows how the status and
role of the father has been maintained.

The child's father, as the religiously sanctioned head 626
of the family, approaches the elder for his township and 851 requests the administration of the sacrament. The elder, in 888 774 turn, intimates the father's request to the minister, who then calls a kirk session. At the kirk session the father is examined. He must live an exemplary life, in the way of the church, including regular sabbath church attendance, daily worship in the home, and the renunciation of all forms of frivolous amusement. The elders, of course, know how he habitually behaves by observation and reputation. In Glendale, if not in Kilmuir, the minister knows as well, for, as one woman said, "You never know what your neighbors will run and tell the minister." Sudden reform is not good enough. The [779]
father must also demonstrate his ability to raise the child

794 621 2. The Township as Religious Network: The religious sphere has two distinguishable social networks, one of which coincides in personnel with the village network. Most households within the village feel obligated to "make an appearance" during at least one of the two 796 Sunday services. Most children are sent to Sunday school, • 851 and all are baptised. In baptism, fathers stand with the children, promise to raise them in the church, and to set a good example for them. Baptism must precede Communion, the ceremony by which a person becomes a full member of the church. Baptism signifies membership in the community, the village-qua-congregation. "Somehow you're not really legal until you've been baptised." Some feel that the child's soul may be endangered if he should die without baptism, although this idea is discouraged by the church. [179] According to the Calvinistic ideas of predestination, the fate of one's soul has already been decided.

796 The pressure to have children baptised enables the 851 village-as-congregation to exert social control over deviant 626 individuals. If a child is conceived out of wedlock, the 848 parents of the child (if they have gotten married) or the unwed mother alone must stand in front of the congregation and be lectured by the minister before the child may be baptised. A woman who has married a man known not to be the father of her child must also stand by herself. A

796 miscarriage occurring before
• 851 standing even when the child 626 by the couple after marriage.
848 [837] impregnated a woman who is not this ordeal before he can have

It is the responsibility ensure that this punishment is the minister forgot to lecture sent them a note that they wou
they insisted, afraid that peo
were getting special treatment

[203] According to one minister [521] "research center" to which all [193] ministers use this information [194] people and calling attention t
the congregation. In contrast [184] in parts of Stornoway, where v [159] doctors in the maternity ward miscarriages and premarital bi this information is confidenti [178] in church does not exist in St in Shawbost was accidentally e and his exemption was seen by opportunity to stop what is co
archaic custom.

marriage also requires
to be baptised was conceived
A married man who has his wife must undergo his own children baptised.
of the entire community to carried out. On one occasion, a couple, and afterwards
ld not have to stand; but ple would say that they
.

, the manse is a kind of gossip is reported. Some in the pulpit, chiding
o wrong-doings in front of , a different attitude exists
illagers have approached for information regarding rths only to be told that
al. The ordeal of standing ornoway. In 1971 a person kempted from this ordeal some as providing an nsidered by many to be an

The visitors each give the child a gift, especially a silver coin. This token of good luck is placed under the child's pillow. The relationships, then, are essentially reciprocal and individual.

The child's position within the extended family is also fixed at the time of birth by his naming. As a rule, the first son is named after his paternal grandfather, and the first daughter, after her maternal grandmother. The second son is given the name of his maternal grandfather, and the second daughter, that of her paternal grandmother. There are exceptions to this pattern. One grandmother was adverse to having her granddaughter named after her, because nowadays, with late marriage, the naming frequently follows the death of the individual. By far the most common exceptions occur when someone in either parent's family of orientation has passed away. Where the mother's father has died, the first boy is named after him. The same is true for girls when the father's mother has passed away. When a brother or sister of either parent has died, especially without issue, the second born is named "in honor of his memory." In these days of small families, this has led to giving a girl the equivalent of a man's name. There was, for example, Angusina who had been named after her uncle who was killed in the war. Again, with delayed marriage, the couple may have only one child. He or she is given the names of both the paternal and maternal grandparents, such as Ian (for father's father) Ducan (for mother's father) or Morag (after mother's mother) Flora (after father's mother). Aside from serving to identify members of father. So well is the situation handled that the child in many cases does not know of his illegitimacy. We may illustrat this point with the story of a young lad of fifteen.

An old woman applied to the local office of the Ministry of Labor on behalf of "her son" for acceptance in an apprenticeship training course given in Glasgow. The manager of the exchange, who had recently arrived from the Lowlands, was suspicious. He pressed her for information until she admitted the child was her grandson. At a later conference, the boy was asked if he had any place to stay in Glasgow. He replied that he could live with his married "sister." In this case the girl had married someone other than the boy's father. There is no pattern of marriage in these situations. Sometimes the unwed mother-to-be marries the child's father before the child is born. Financial hardship often forces a postponement of the marriage until the very last minute. One couple was married on the day of their child's birth. Other girls never marry. In the latter event gossip appears as a social sanction. As I mentioned earlier, the native who has prospered is not always held in high esteem by the local people. There are several stories on Skye about such men, especially men in Portree, and their illegitimate children.

Extra-marital relations present a different problem. They definitely are not characteristic of the Sgiathanach. When a husband or wife does commit adultery, he or she is usually a newcomer. Nevertheless, the Islanders feel ild may come to spend nights or longer periods of time ith them.

To some extent villagers are still dependent on ach other for various kinds of help. It is considered xtremely bad manners to refuse labor, a tool, or food o anyone who requests them. If someone refuses to aid nother, people say, "What will he do when he needs elp?" This attitude has made the island a paradise or the few salesmen who, in the last few prosperous ears, have started to visit its communities; villagers ind it difficult to say no to anyone who comes to their door with a request, including the request that they buy something.

A woman in childbirth was formerly attended by a local midwife, and kept in bed for two or three weeks. "Other women, both relatives and friends, came and stayed with them at night, fixing them warm tea and milk, whispering bhronag bochd (poor soul), how awful you look..." just as today the neighbors gather at times of illness and death. It is more difficult for neighbors to come to the bedsides of young mothers of today, who are all taken to the hospital in Stornoway to have their babies; but the neighbors manage to visit the hospital, which has no choice but to ignore its rule of only two visitors per bed at a time.

971 538 788 539

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

as the days lengthened during Christmastide, old style, it may be called " The Rune of the World's Light ".

The world, ere came the Son of God,
was black, a bog forlorn :
Void of sun, moon or star,
void of body, heart or form.

'Twas Mary Mother lowly kneeled,
and gave the Inmost Being birth ;
Darkness and tears were driven afar,
the guiding star rose over earth.

Light on the land, the deep illumed
from sullen pool to ocean stream ;
Grief was laid and joy was raised,
with praise and hail and harping free.

Light on the hills, light on the plains,
light o'er grey-green sea and firth ;
Light o'er all the world as one,
the hour God's Son came down to earth.

(b) THE CYCLE OF LIFE

796 852 88 584

The stages in life's sequence are marked by noble runes, of baptism, initiation in adolescence, betrothal and marriage, childbirth, and of confession and consolation in trials throughout life and, at its close, of farewell. As might be fitting, the benedictions were given by either man or woman : to a child by a parent or elder ; to the young and strong by the wise ; and by lovers to one another. And in the past, especially in trial, the ' soul-friend ' ministered —an anam-chara, a neighbour chosen from lifelong friendships for steadfastness and understanding.

852 At birth a babe was baptized ; and in the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit the nurse placed three drops

• 852 of water on the child's forehead, successively invoking wisdom, peace and purity. Lay baptism, recognised by Greek, Latin, Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches, may be partly of pre-Christian communal origin. It retained special significance in isolated communities. Where a clergyman might come within eight days, a temporary name was given at birth : ' Tonsured of the Lord ' (Maoldomhnuich) if a male child, and Gertrude (Griadach) if a female. Her immediate duties over after a safe delivery, the midwife forthwith became the celebrant or (as it were) lay priestess, and her neighbourly helpers, her acolytes. As the midwife intoned her part they gave the responses. " By the Book itself," said a reciter in Uist, for many years a skilled midwife, " ear has never heard music more beautiful than the music of the watching women when they are consecrating the seed of man and committing him to the great God of life." Those who care to ponder the thoughts then spoken may believe her word. (Carmina, Nos. 50 and 217-219.)

86 Initiation grew as understanding dawned and the babe passed on in childhood to be an older helper. Gaelic child-lore gives many a stimulus to an infant's intelligent apprehension of life about him, and to poetic appreciation. These may lead by natural steps to deeper things in adolescence. Homely teaching which led to a first communion, remained an intimate part of life in home and township.

814 869 538 869

From many parts of the Highlands and Isles, Carmichael and his friends gathered variants of verse prayers invoking graces in the young : Invocations of the Graces, Orachan Buadha (Buadh, victory, achievement or grace ; Nos. 3 and 278-281). In Tiree, of which the thoughtful minister had sent a fragment of verses to Carmichael,

Life Cycle

Birth. Childbirth placed both the mother and child in the danger of harm by malevolent spirits, especially fairies, who would substitute one of their children for the human child.[94] To protect them each morning and evening a sunrise circle was made around the mother and child with a firebrand or burning peat. All visitors crossed themselves with a firebrand and might have the circle of fire made around them. As a token of good luck the child was given silver; it was bad luck to give it to the mother. If a person praised the child without wishing it good luck or God's blessing, they might put the evil eye on it. Although only old midwives are said to have continued to make the firey circle by 1700 on Skye, the belief in the evil eye was still strong.[95] The mother did no work, and rejoicing was postponed until she was "kirked." The parents, their relatives and friends attended a church service to give thanks for a safe mother and a living child. After the service, they went to the home for a feast and dance. Following the Reformation, the custom was placed under censure, as were all Catholic and pagan rituals. 175* 852•

Baptism. Baptism freed the child from the power of the fairies and the evil eye. Until baptized, the child was not called by any name. On the way to baptism, the parents carried bread and

844

[94] The following is mainly taken from William MacKay, "Life in the Highlands in Olden Times," PSAI, Vol. XXIX (1922), pp. 1-18.

[95] Martin, op. cit., pp. 177-178, 181-182.

175* 852•

butter. If the child was a boy, they gave some to the first man they met; if a girl, to the first woman. The Reformed Kirk continued the practice of public baptism before the congregation. The father, or godfather, continued to recite the Apostle's Creed. The Lord's Prayer was said, and a doxology was sung. When an attempt was made to abolish set prayers and liturgy sometime around 1650, baptism ceased to be performed in church. Following baptism, the festivities of the kirking were repeated. Private baptism was not forbidden until 1690.

Marriage. Marriage, either regular or irregular, for a lifetime or a year, was a contract. The young clansman with his father and friends went to the girl's home where the oldest in the group told who was wanted. If her parents thought the marriage desirable, the party was invited in to eat and drink. This was the "little agreement." In about two weeks the "great contract," the settlement of the dowry and date of the wedding was concluded at a dance and feast. Among the gentry a great deal of money passed in marriage contracts. Both dowries and tochers, a form of dower, were settled. The dowry varied with the status of the woman; the tocher with the position of the man.[96] 175* 58

The "booking" may have occured on Skye. Elsewhere, at least, shortly before the fixed date the couple bound themselves, under penalty of a money fine, to marry by the date. The money was placed in the hands of a neutral party, usually the session clerk who entered their intentions in his books. In view of the [96] Lachlan MacDonald, op. cit., pp. 68-69.

855

855 CHILD CARE--supervision, care, and support of children from earliest independence (e.g., walking, talking) to puberty; distribution of responsibility among parents and other relatives; institutionalized care (e.g., day nurseries); beliefs and standards concerning proper clothing, feeding, and housing of children; provisions for physical and mental health; protection from physical and social dangers (e.g., confinement, removal of dangerous objects); attitude of adults toward children (e.g., indulgent, indifferent, censorious); spoiling and coddling; mistreatment and neglect of children; etc. See also:

Discipline and training	86	Preventive medicine	781
Family relationships	580	Medical care	788
Care of orphans	736

621 571 [422] 858 • 865 861 621 [156] 597 621

Despite these tendencies, an individual is still somewhat in familial and village ties. Villagers walk in and out of each others' houses without knocking; only a "stranger" knocks. Goods such as tape recorders, binoculars and books are passed around the village; people even borrow each others' reading glasses.

Children are "borrowed" as well. They are loaned out to relatives and neighbors to run errands, or may even live with them. They are scolded as often by a neighbor or other villager as by a parent. A child might be told, "When someone (any adult) tells you to do something, you do it, no matter who that person is." The parents of one household are criticized for taking their children's side against other children and other parents. "He's teaching his children not to mix with others. One child is as good as another. They may be good one day, but they're likely to be bad the next." A child or adult who enjoys spending time by himself is still considered extremely odd. An important criterion by which someone's mental health or general personality is evaluated is whether or not he "mixes" well. It is fairly common for childless households to "adopt" a child of neighbors or relatives; that is, the child spends a great deal of time with them. They may go to the child's house to put him to bed at night, or the 857 CHILDHOOD ACTIVITIES--extent to which a special culture of childhood exists; children's play, imitative activities (e.g., make-believe); habits of rest and sleep; children's playgroups, cliques, and gangs; quarreling and fighting; children's explorations and haunts; tasks performed by children and age at which each is undertaken (e.g., errands, chores, care of younger children); etc. See also:

857

Socialization	30	Age-grades	861
Education	87	Primary groups	871
Baby talk	136	Ingroup antagonisms	878
Mutual aid	476	Child betrothal	886
Daily routine	519	Residence changes by children	891
Children's games, toys, and playthings	554	Quest for guardian spirits	787

233 were taken out to small huts in the central moorlands
233 for several months during the summer. These moorland
342 dwellings, called sheilings or airidh, were tiny stone structures, as small as seven by five feet. They had double stone walls filled with clay, and a rounded thatched roof. There were two doors opposite each other in the longer walls, one of which was filled with turf depending on the direction of the wind. A fireplace
[364] was built into one end of the hut; shelves in the stone
[352] walls held basins of milk and other items; and the major part of the sheiling constituted a grass-and-heather-lined cavity which served as a bed. The sheilings were usually [361] clustered together near a stream, duplicating neighborhoods within the village.

221 Ploughing and planting were finished in the spring before the young men and women went off to the fishing, and before the cattle were taken to the sheiling. Some families went to the sheiling as early as March for a "fresh bite" of grass. Many went out in the middle of May, and returned at the end of July or beginning of August.

233 "During the week, young girls or boys stayed out on
● 857 the sheilings, depending on who was available in the 887 family; maybe old people who couldn't do anything else, 462

233 usually an old woman, as the women were responsible for ● 857 the milking, and the old men were usually fishing around 887
462 the village.

233 "We left for the sheiling early in the morning,
512 taking bed clothes and food. I walked out with my aunt, who went back home in the morning. My mother came out with the provisions in the evening. If no one came out [513] that day, I went to sleep with someone else. You never slept alone. During the day we fished for trout or gathered small blackberries; or we looked for the nests of grouse and other birds. You would knit or read, and walk for miles to visit friends. The boys swam in the loch, and sometimes the girls pinched their clothes. From the top of the hills you could see Stornoway, the hills of Lochs, Uig and the lighthouse in Ness; on some days you could see the distant hills of Caithness on the mainland. It's on the sheiling that I learned about other parts of the island.

"I remember watching the sun and trying to will it 512 to stay high in the sky, before our mothers came out from 233
234 the village to milk in the evening. They called the cattle--'Troit, troit, troit'--and they carried the milk every day from the sheiling to the village, all those miles. The cattle knew their own sheilings; sometimes

181
421 People prefer to give money 103
178 in exchange for car rides or other help, including peat-187 cutting, because "than you're independent." Friendships
829 are still weak, relative to friendships in urban 572 settings. Most information which is shared between 221 individuals rapidly enters the pool of communal gossip.
[369] Although many persons emphasize the importance of mutual [521] aid in defining a friend, some emphasize the ability to [476] confide and keep secrets.

Today many of the younger villagers do not know
621 their relatives to the extent that their elders did.
178 In one family, a girl who was about to get married had 602 to ask her brother, who was the only one of the siblings [685] interested in kinship connections, whom to invite to the [576] wedding. It is still useful to retain an inventory of one's relatives. "I have cousins in Glasgow and 602 Australia that I've never seen, but if I ever go there 484 I'll have a place to stay." With the increase in [178] transportation and income, more islanders are taking brief trips away from the island. During these trips, they almost always stay with relatives.

● 857 It is frequently said that children are now "cheekier," 579 less inclined to run errands and obey orders meekly, and 829 that they prefer to watch television or read books by 178 themselves to playing with each other.

offer help without an expectation of payment. Nevertheless, 794
anonymous donations of food and casual visits make sure that 573
none of their number becomes absolutely destitute. In Glendale this religious clique merges with the person's "people and friends." Kilmuir has two religious cliques.

We have had ample opportunity to examine the age-grades 561 of Skye's society and in the next chapter we shall have a closer look at the functions of the age-grades, especially that of the old men. One of the most important weaknesses 857 of the social structure, in my mind, is the lack of age mates 883
for children and adolescents. They find it difficult, almost 561 impossible, to come together as a sodality. In Kilmuir, for example, there are only fifteen boys under twenty in an area of ten square miles. A youth is anyone under forty. Of the [162 total population 60 percent are over fifty. For this reason 561
the important age grade clique tends to merge with the re- 794 ligious social circle. The situation is much the same in Glendale. There the age-grade and kinship groups are intertwined with the kirk congregation.

Status Equality within the Neighborhood. The fundamental 621
status equality which we found for the crofters within the 534
township carries over to the neighborhood, but, as would be 571 expected, there is often a need for leadership in this larger group. Let us look at the two neighborhoods which I know best to cast light on the methods employed in the self-selection of a leader and the means of expressing leadership as a role. Kilmuir has a Crofters' Club, which was originally formed by 573

strongly about this infringement of the traditional norms. 837
Gossip spreads very rapidly. The offenders are said to be 626
"no better than the tinkers." While tinkers are respected [55] [75]
because they have the power of the evil eye, they are not accorded any more prestige than we would give a beggar. All who have any contact with the neighborhood or the village
where the deviants live soon know all the details. Since [36]
most of the adulterers on Skye have been in Portree, it adds
another brick to the wall which separates the rural neighborhoods and the trade-center village. The offenders normally leave Skye as quickly as possible.

The Sgiathanach cannot be said to have a strong sense 423
of property, or, more correctly, the land is valued as a 421
place of residence and identity not as something to be bought and sold. We have seen that he uses his land communally and that he often will not leave a will for the house, not to mention his land. Even though the state thinks otherwise, he looks upon the natural resources of the island as his for the taking. At the same time, he normally respects the fruits of 421 his neighbor's labor. Any one can cut peat on the moor, but [31]
no one, except an unthinking tourist, would take a piece of turf once it had been cut. In a simlar way, the children are 857 generally well behaved. In the village there is a bit of stone throwing, a little profanity, and uncommonly some drinking on
the sly, but rarely do children show any disrespect for the rights of others. One contractor, a Lowlander who came up to Skye to make alterations on the school, was amazed. Skye

857 was the first place he had ever worked where his men did no have to lock up their tools at lunch time, and the windows 685 were not broken as fast as they went into the frames. Stil there is some theft.

As might be expected in any area of low per capita income and seasonal employment, some people succumb to temp 685 tation. Children, now and then, find the temptation of a 857 candy bar, a shiny pocket knife and other such items which [131] shopkeepers may have on the counter too strong to resist.
striking thing is that they always share their loot with 685 their schoolmates. Around New Years, when unemployment is [273] at its height and a man needs his bottle to see in the New Year in the traditional way, some men turn to theft. It never takes the form of house burglarly or armed robbery.
far as I know, the only case of armed robbery in which a man from Skye was involved happened on a train in England.
His weapon was a rolling pin. The people at home were very amused when he said he was taking the rolling pin to his mother. The usual forms are to take a cow or sheep or to 685 loot a shop. No answer can be given to the question, how 829 much theft is there? The responses vary. "If you stood on the corner and forgot who you were, they'd have you off in five minutes, so they would," was one man's opinion. The police say, "There's quite a bit of it." An old whiskey smuggler told me, "There's no theft around Portree, but you not safe with five pence in your pocket in Skeabost." This 685 obviously is an expression of neighborhood loyalty. How,

796 may need just one more dry day to finish his harvest. If t 241 next day is the Sabbath, his one dry day may be two or thre weeks away and the hay a sodden heap. Nor did the Sgiathan or any newcomer with a croft, change during the war despite all the pleas of the government for full agricultural pro-796 duction. This is the one time that the Older Order Amish slogan "And be not conformed to this world" fully applies to the island. Circumspect behavior on this day functions to remind the people of all the negations and all the sanct which religion has bestowed on the culture.

178 As in the case of Communions, there has been a gradus 796 lessening of the importance of Sabbitarianism, especially since the return of many young men and women from the war.
[369] Again, the rather spontaneous relaxation of the rules is most common in Portree. It does not have the encouragement of the ministers of any church nor the elders of any church [622] except the Church of Scotland. Thirty or forty years ago the ministers and the lay kirk officers had enough influenc to stop the running of trains throughout the western Highla shipping in the Western Isles, and the Kyle-Kyleakin ferry [484] on the Sabbath. Public transportation is still at a stand-[204] still on the first day of the week, but the Sunday papers appear in Portree after the evening services, despite all t efforts of the ministers. They come by car from Inverness, row boat across the strait, and by car to the village.

178 Before the war no one in Portree would let their 796 children out of the house, except to go to church with thei
857

852 of water on the child's forehead, successively invoking wisdom, peace and purity. Lay baptism, recognised by Greek, Latin, Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches, may be partly of pre-Christian communal origin. It retained special significance in isolated communities. Where a clergyman might come within eight days, a temporary name was given at birth: 'Tonsured of the Lord' (Maol-domhnuich) if a male child, and Gertrude (Griadach) if a female. Her immediate duties over after a safe delivery, the midwife forthwith became the celebrant or (as it were) lay priestess, and her neighbourly helpers, her acolytes. As the midwife intoned her part they gave the responses. "By the Book itself," said a reciter in Uist, for many years a skilled midwife, "ear has never heard music more beautiful than the music of the watching women when they are consecrating the seed of man and committing him to the great God of life." Those who care to ponder the thoughts then spoken may believe her word. (Carmina, Nos. 50 and 217-219.)

86 Initiation grew as understanding dawned and the babe passed on in childhood to be an older helper. Gaelic child-lore gives many a stimulus to an infant's intelligent apprehension of life about him, and to poetic appreciation. These may lead by natural steps to deeper things in adolescence. Homely teaching which led to a first communion, remained an intimate part of life in home and township.

814 From many parts of the Highlands and Isles, Car-
869 michael and his friends gathered variants of verse prayers
538 invoking graces in the young: Invocations of the Graces,
• 867 Orachan Buadha (Buadh, victory, achievement or grace; Nos. 3 and 278-281). In Tiree, of which the thoughtful minister had sent a fragment of verses to Carmichael,

814 the invocation was addressed to boys and girls, in Uist to 869 youths and maidens. The loveliest version of all had been 538 spoken by an old, evicted woman and learned from her by
• 867 a lad who, as a poor crofter in old age, passed it down for record, for ever. Of this invocation Carmichael wrote, "Probably it was composed to a maiden on her marriage. The phrase 'eala dhonn', brown swan, would indicate that the girl was young—not yet a white swan", a tender and delicate recognition of youth still to attain perfection.

869 Not a thought jars, each stanza building up the rising move-
538 ment of the whole. In the hundred lines of this poem, metre and assonance are regular except where growing intensity creates new rhythm and design; and the last vowel-rhyme of each stanza leads on to those of the next one, to form an unbroken ascent to the climax.[1]

869 The Invocation begins, "I bathe thy palms. . . . And 539 I place the nine pure choice graces in thy fair fond face.
The grace of form . . . of fortune . . . of goodness . . .
867 of wisdom . . . of charity . . . of choice maidenliness

[114]

[1] Certain critics, struck with the variety of the poem but missing its thought-sequence and unity of form, took Carmichael's note of 'many fragments' to imply that the poem was a composite version, piously restored by the editor—in spite of his statement that it was taken down from a single reciter (one Duncan Maclellan). Carmichael's spiritual power of evoking treasures from the reciters was inseparable from his utter honesty. And the publication, forty years later, of four Invocations and of scores of fragments (cf. No. 277) has added (to the internal evidence cited) further proof that the poem was no editorial assemblage. Without doubt, the poem has grown from the inspired meditation of generations of poet-worshippers in a hundred glens and isles. But the English reader should realise what the Gaelic ear may hear: this poem forms an organic unity; though many petalled it is a single flower. Readers familiar with medieval or earlier chants know that the enumeration of attributes is a feature common to all, whether in Church Latin or other tongues, as in the English medieval hymn beginning, "God in my head, and in my understanding". In Gaelic, however, the richness and freedom of the vowel-pattern and rhythms carries the thought onward, wave on wave to its climax. A foremost poet of France, Pierre Emmanuel, to whom I introduced this poem, exclaimed, "This is a Christian Song of Songs!"

869 . . . of whole-souled loveliness . . . of winning speech."
539 Then, after the tender image of the brown swan and fare-
• 867 well on departure to a new home, comes a string of exquisite comparisons: to shade and shelter in need, to safety of isle and strength of fortress, to gift of health for the ailing. Each grace, each image, expresses not simply individual qualities but relationships and service for others. After eight choice lines in praise of the girl's womanly gifts—from "Thine is the faith of Mary", through chosen attributes of Bride, the Fairy Woman, Penelope, Emir, Darthula and Maeve, to "the charm of the sweet singer (Binnebheul)"—the poem, in Gaelic that is sonorous and succinct, passes beyond the sphere of comparison with things or even personal qualities. It acclaims her joyous girlhood as one with the powers of life-giving, life-abundant things, and as a reflection of the Divine:

Thou'rt the joy in every delight,
Thou the sunbeam's radiant light;
Thou'rt the gate of a welcoming chief,
Thou the clearest star to lead;
Thou'rt the step of the deer on a height,
Thou the pace of a steed ere the fight;
Thou'rt the calm of a gliding swan;
of longings thou'rt the loveliness.

The lovely likeness of the Lord
Is in thy pure face,
The loveliest form
Was ere on earth.[1]

538 192 [1] Poetic form is integral to the conception; hence this translation in verse. But alternatives to Carmichael's choice of English prose may complement his own, in bringing out the meaning. Line 1, 'joy', sonas—and a 'delightful or wonderful thing', ni éibhinn; l. 3, dorus, doorway; l. 4, iùl, guidance, land-mark, way; l. 6, steud, steed, would imply, in blàr, 'a field' of battle, and, by contrast, l. 7, séimh eal, calm (rather than 'grace') of a floating, swimming swan; l. 8, rùn, secret inclination, longing, and hence too, a person beloved; ll. 9, 11, cruth, form, shapeliness (and by implication),

539 And so, after every good wish for days, years and life
• 867 the Invocation closes: "Peter has come and Paul" . .
869 the Disciples and the Archangels. . . . Jesus the mild and the Spirit of guidance have come,

And the King of kings has come on the helm,
To bestow on thee their affection and their love,
A bhaireadh duit-se graidh us ruin.

The ideal of choice maidenliness which this Invocation portrays, culminates in the thought of the loveliness that 867 was Christ. It rises, too, to stirring virility: "the island [539] at sea, the fortress on land", or "the step of the steed on the plain". Yet when all is said, it is a womanly image which prevails: after the fortress comes the well in the desert, and after the charger's step, the gracious calm of a floating swan. It is all the more significant that the Invocation was addressed both 'to boys and girls' in one isle, and 'to youths and maidens' in another. Not simply was boyhood taught to honour girlhood: ideal womanhood was invoked to raise manhood itself to fullness.

885 Upon marriage, the husband replaced the maiden's
[292] snood or stiom that bound her uncovered hair by the wifely
[585] kerchief, am breid. Folded diagonally, its three-cornered shape came to symbolise the Trinity, in benediction on [539] the bride's head.[1] A poem to a bride, "now beginning her dual course", commences, "A thousand hails to thee

538 192 likeness. The short second stanza given stands out alone: the poem, having attained its climax by a rhythm sustaining the upward, sonorous movement, is hushed by its few simple words. In From the Hebrides, Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser rearranged one or two of these lovely stanzas, as one of her 'lyrics with refrain'. Cf. A. Geddes, The Songs of Craig and Ben, vol. ii, 1955.

[1] The kertch is spoken of in many songs, in which a lover hopes to place it on his young love's head, or a husband praises its whiteness as worn by his wife. When first I knew the Lewis, the kertch was still commonly worn under the more recent Lowland mutch, and either framed a young face, or an
198 old one, charmingly. The two have not quite vanished, though memories of what the kertch once symbolised are hard to find.

The first thing that is said when for some reason a woman is left alone in the house is, "Who's going to go and sleep with her?" Often a child will be sent from a neighboring family, not always relatives, to stay with her at night. As in the past, it is not uncommon for a childless elderly couple or single person alone on a croft to take in a young, homeless couple, to whom they may or may not be related. The young couple cares for the old person or persons, and inherits the croft when they die.

"Keeping up the relation" is the process by which relatives sustain interaction and expectations of mutual aid even though their relatedness becomes more distant with succeeding generations. "I've got cousins in Ness that I stay with at the Communions. They're getting on into the third generation now." A cousin is a cousin even to the 42nd degree (Williams 1963: 142), as long as there is reason to sustain the relationship. "I know we're related, but I can't quite place it." "We're a bit related. I think she was a MacPhail before she married." "I don't quite know how we're related, but my mother and his mother considered it a close relationship, and he has kept it up."

Every villager has a vast amount of information about other villagers and their families, which may be

192 561 requirements of adulthood, and also old age, are still boys and girls.

554 Status Equality within the Township. The ascription of status on the basis of age and sex has resulted in a straightforward [562] system of status. The facts are simple. Men are the social [561] superiors of women. Youth are socially inferior to their seniors. Men, or women, of a common age category are equals. We shall now examine a few interpersonal relationships to see how the [264] system operates. Unless a man and his wife are eating alone, women never eat with men. They wait until the men have finished 576 before taking their meal. When neighbors come to visit, the 562 man of the house does not rise for a woman. He does rise for 574 a man and shakes him by the hand. The woman of the house, on the other hand, rises for both men and women. Furthermore, when a couple comes to call, the woman greets the man first. Only after he has been offered a chair does she greet the [858] woman. Young people are seen but seldom heard. They do not [882] speak unless addressed.

626 All societies allow some deviation from traditional 178 norms of expected behavior. On Skye, as elsewhere, excessive deviation is censured. Neither increased opportunities for education nor the steady flow of Skye men and women to the four corners of the earth, accompanied by the slow returning trickle, have disturbed these fundamental values. Like the youth who leaves home to achieve upward mobility through outward mobility, the man who returns must conform to the traditional norms, which he learned as a child, or be regarded

3: Geddes K-4, 5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

181 gentle frankness, as there is for reticence.[1] But since
• 864 Augustine, orthodox religion, Catholic and Protestant, has [771] overstressed and misunderstood the folk-lore of 'the Fall'
—originally, it seems, a legend of fertility and fulfilment!
[869] In part as a result of the teaching of the doctrine of the 'Fall', there has arisen an attitude to parenthood which [773] falls short of rational understanding and reverence for human life.[2] If fact be the best guard against superstitious fancy, and if sensibility and tact can soften the first shock of adolescence, then the Gael knew wisdom.

121 Returning to the main theme, it is clear that primitive religion and folk-lore alike show misunderstandings of cause and effect, and of the action of 'mind' on 'body' and 'matter'. What are facts to faith may be symbols to science; yet if these symbols prefigure truth, they may 121 outlast the present stage of scientific recognition. Gaelic 771 belief and practice show a recognition of communal as well as individual spirituality; of the depth of conscious-181 ness below its upper surface, and its upwelling power;
and of the visible world without, in all its beauty, as a gate

[533] [1] Needless to say, Gaelic verse has its moments of coarse freedom like that of any tongue. Of the lively lilts (puirt-a-beul) sung when there is no piper or fiddler to play for dancing, most of the words are delightful, but a few are not. A rather 'drinky' dissolute fellow—a small contractor on one of the Isles whose apprenticeship in the cities had not improved his character—once quoted a coarse jingle to me, only to see little amusement at his song and some contempt for its singer. He excused himself by saying, "It's rough . . . it's rough—but it's not dirty"! His excuse sums up the cruder expressions of animal spirits found in Gaelic jingles. One may adapt it as "Sometimes coarse, but rarely or never vicious".

[2] A. Geddes, "The Origin of Sin in Genesis and a Missing Legend", Hibbert J. vol. 44, Nos. 1 and 3, 1945-46. Cf. The Legends of Creation: an Anthropo-Geographical Interpretation of Genesis, i-iii (with map); Man, vol. 45 (104), 1945.

The Churches have given attention to the second chapter of Genesis, at the expense of the first. Gaelic spiritual tradition seems to have been singularly unwarped by such confused mythology, and to have held firmly to the first chapter, in its noble simplicity.

86

867 TRANSMISSION OF CULTURAL NORMS--inculcation propriate behavior for children (e.g., rest and sleep children into social relationships (e.g., teaching to s struction in etiquette and kinship behavior); training values (e.g., ladylikeness, manliness); instilling of struction in social, ethical, legal and political norms morals and character; etc. See also:

Personality	16	Labor and leisure
Mutual aid and competition	47	Occupational specia
Kinship behavior	60	Standard of living
Social norms	183	Sleeping
Public opinion	208	Esthetic ideals
Status and role	554	Citizenship
Interpersonal relations	571	Legal norms
Etiquette	576	Juvenile delinquenc
Ethical ideals	577	Taboos
Social control	626

7

of norms concerning ap-routines); initiation of hare and take turns, inn sex-typed attitudes and respect for property; in-
; techniques for inculcating

. 461
lization 463
. 511
. 513
. 517
. 641
. 671
y. 674, 738
. 784

197 Within the village there are no branches of An Comunn
178 Gaidhealach and few books written in Gaelic. Once a rural 166 family moves to Stornoway, children often refuse to speak 191 Gaelic, even though they understand it, and parents tend to speak only English to their children, believing this will help them "get on." In the next generation, the [871] language is lost. Village children attending school in Stornoway often prefer talking to their Gaelic-speaking [867] roommates in English. A young island woman, married and living in Edinburgh, says she would like her baby son to learn Gaelic but feels that if he had a mixture of the two languages the other children would laugh at him.

197 English is the language of the larger society, the 191 language spoken in school and the language required in most jobs and in dealing with most officials. In Gaelic-197 speaking areas, the speaking of English connotes high
191 status. If an English speaker mispronounces Gaelic words, 554 he is quickly forgiven, praised for trying to learn such 626 a difficult language, and asked why he bothers with a 578 language that "isn't any use anyway." But if a Gaelic speaker makes mistakes in English, he is teased mercilessly [551] Many nicknames derive from such mistakes; for example,
"Peter Squeak" got his name by mispronouncing the word [524] "picturesque." People "win points" by competing with each other in speaking English. "See how good you are in to Sabbath school, nor would they allow children 178

s in the home. Today the children of the Church 796 people are allowed to go for a walk, read, or 857 Tourists, frequently, if not always, intolerant 484
t Sabbath, have no doubt contributed to this 178
f taboos. Although a further development of the 796 stry would be advantageous economically, tourists not only to the Sabbath but also to the whole mplex. They set examples which the youth are dy to emulate. Before the war every hotel on 485 including all in Portree, and every boarding 796 notices requesting visitors to refrain from cars for touring on the Sabbath. In many of the the request was the equivalent of a warning of day the signs are gone. Still not content, the cies in England and the Lowlands continue to make s in their literature, suggesting "a little more needed in certain quarters." The youth and some 178 rtree now have begun to go off for a drive around 796
One reason why the Sabbath is still strong in 484 Glendale is that tourists are not accepted in ict.

Sabbath observance distinguishes three broad 796
e Island. Portree is set apart from the crofters 565 nd the county people are set apart from the [369]
using the day for visiting and having afternoon [571]
r. The gentry, of course, are not under the 85

858 STATUS OF CHILDREN--cultural definition of stat
statuses during infancy and childhood; rights, privi
(e.g., special exemptions); restrictions and disabi
(e.g., special taboos); conception of legal minority treated as inherently inferior or merely as inexper about children (e.g., concepts of the good and the n pectations and treatment of children (e.g., accordi

Kin relationships	60	Family relations
Guardianship	429	Legal liability
Age stratification	561	Juvenile courts
Marriageability of children	582	Special mortuary Concept of legal

8

s periods and progression of leges, and powers of children
lities of infants and children
; extent to which children are enced adults; stereotyped ideas aughty child); differential ex-ng to age, sex), etc; See also:
ips 593
. 672
. 698
rites 766
majority 884

621 Despite these tendencies, an individual is still 571 enmeshed in familial and village ties. Villagers walk in and out of each others' houses without knocking; [426] only a "stranger" knocks. Goods such as tape recorders, binoculars and books are passed around the village;
people even borrow each others' reading glasses.

858 Children are "borrowed" as well. They are loaned
855 out to relatives and neighbors to run errands, or may 861 even live with them. They are scolded as often by a 621 neighbor or other villager as by a parent. A child might be told, "When someone (any adult) tells you to do something, you do it, no matter who that person is."
The parents of one household are criticized for taking their children's side against other children and other parents. "He's teaching his children not to mix with others. One child is as good as another. They may be good one day, but they're likely to be bad the next."
A child or adult who enjoys spending time by himself is [156] still considered extremely odd. An important criterion by which someone's mental health or general personality 597 is evaluated is whether or not he "mixes" well. It is 621 fairly common for childless households to "adopt" a child of neighbors or relatives; that is, the child spends a great deal of time with them. They may go to the child's house to put him to bed at night, or the

3: Geddes K-4,5 (1919-1952) 1955 ES10 Highland Scots
Lewis and Harris

852 of water on the child's forehead, successively invoking wisdom, peace and purity. Lay baptism, recognised by Greek, Latin, Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches, may be partly of pre-Christian communal origin. It retained special significance in isolated communities. Where a clergyman might come within eight days, a temporary name was given at birth: 'Tonsured of the Lord' (Maol-domhnuich) if a male child, and Gertrude (Griadach) if a female. Her immediate duties over after a safe delivery, the midwife forthwith became the celebrant or (as it were) lay priestess, and her neighbourly helpers, her acolytes. As the midwife intoned her part they gave the responses. "By the Book itself," said a reciter in Uist, for many years a skilled midwife, "ear has never heard music more beautiful than the music of the watching women when they are consecrating the seed of man and committing him to the great God of life." Those who care to ponder the thoughts then spoken may believe her word. (Carmina, Nos. 50 and 217-219.)

•86 Initiation grew as understanding dawned and the babe passed on in childhood to be an older helper. Gaelic child-lore gives many a stimulus to an infant's intelligent apprehension of life about him, and to poetic appreciation. These may lead by natural steps to deeper things in adolescence. Homely teaching which led to a first communion, remained an intimate part of life in home and township.

814 From many parts of the Highlands and Isles, Car-
869 michael and his friends gathered variants of verse prayers
538 invoking graces in the young: Invocations of the Graces, 869 Orachan Buadha (Buadh, victory, achievement or grace; Nos. 3 and 278-281). In Tiree, of which the thoughtful minister had sent a fragment of verses to Carmichael,

861

861 TECHNIQUES OF INCULCATION--ideas about childhood training; general methods of inculcation and discipline; specific techniques of providing motivation (e.g., inciting, warning, scolding, threatening, punishing); specific techniques of guidance (e.g., leading, demonstrating, explaining, commanding); specific techniques of providing rewards (e.g., helping, recompensing, praising); special emphasis on particular techniques (e.g., in general, at different ages, for particular types of training); consistency or inconsistency in the use of techniques; ages at which conscious parental inculcation begins and ends; etc.

See also:

Data on habit formation	153	Military discipline	703
Family relationships	593	Native ideas about learning	828
Social control	626	Education through play	867
Legal sanctions	681	Educational theory	876

1: Parman E-4,5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Shawbost

621 Despite these tendencies, an individual is still 571 enmeshed in familial and village ties. Villagers walk in and out of each others' houses without knocking;
[426] only a "stranger" knocks. Goods such as tape recorders, binoculars and books are passed around the village; people even borrow each others' reading glasses.

858 Children are "borrowed" as well. They are loaned
865 out to relatives and neighbors to run errands, or may
•861 even live with them. They are scolded as often by a 621 neighbor or other villager as by a parent. A child might be told, "When someone (any adult) tells you to do something, you do it, no matter who that person is." The parents of one household are criticized for taking their children's side against other children and other parents. "He's teaching his children not to mix with others. One child is as good as another. They may be good one day, but they're likely to be bad the next." A child or adult who enjoys spending time by himself is [156] still considered extremely odd. An important criterion by which someone's mental health or general personality
597 is evaluated is whether or not he "mixes" well. It is 621 fairly common for childless households to "adopt" a child of neighbors or relatives; that is, the child spends a great deal of time with them. They may go to the child's house to put him to bed at night, or the

ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Shawbost

183 The generally low level of stimulation derives in 181 part from values which restrict opportunities for self-[521] expression. People are ready to gossip, i.e., to participate vicariously in the escapades of others, but are less [626] eager to act. Stories concerning mad-cap adventures of some villagers do not belie the existence of constraints
[166] imposed on expressiveness. One of the major reasons given by young villagers for wanting to leave the island, and by emigrants for why they left, is that, "There is nothing to do. The place is dead."

156 In the everyday life of the village, a style of 181 indirectness and restricted communication is encouraged.
183 A man might be praised in an obituary by the phrase, "His 621 voice was never heard in the community." The encouragemen of a "low profile" of behavior is characteristic of communities in which people meet each other frequently and know they will continue to meet and ask things of each other for a long time to come. Indirectness avoids conflict arising from divergent expectations, and embarrass-ment from changes in plans.

155 A major feature of practices of child-rearing on •861 the island is inconsistency, which develops a style of guarded watchfulness and hesitance to act or express oneself. Children are teased by being offered things which are then snatched away. Punishment is inconsistent.

155 Lies are frequently told. "Every other sentence my • 861 father says is a lie. If you believe half of what he 577 says is a lie. If you believe half of what he [693] says, you're a fool. If you believe a quarter of what he says, you're getting near the truth. If you believe an eighth of what he says, it's probably the wrong eighth."

156 Villagers engage with each other in constant, quiet 621 game-playing. They are dependent on each other for many things, but try to minimize the control that others have over them while improving their own positions. If someone brings plants or shrubs as a gift, the response is likely to be, "She was probably pruning her garden and needed to get rid of the leftover garbage." Such negativism releases the person from feeling obligated. (See Emmett 1964:
16–17, for a description of a similar situation in Wales.)
A man who is asked about his new tractor replies, "Its faults will come out later." If he were to say it was all right and then it broke down, he would have lost points.
In discussing the mental health of a villager recently returned from Craig Dunain (a mental hospital near Inverness), someone observed, "He's better than the doctor who let him out." If another breakdown were to occur soon, someone would be sure to comment, "And so-and-so said he looked all right."

156 Such training allows little room for the development 572 of close friendships in which the individuals involved are alternating generations and being felt as an obligation to 553 perpetuate family names, these various practices serve to limit confusion among a people who share rather few surnames.

I never knew a child who had been named for his parents.

The relationship of father and child is formally es- 851
tablished at baptism. As we shall see in the following chapter, the mother takes little or no part in arranging for the sacrament. The spiritual welfare of the children is the father's 593 concern. He is also the disciplinarian, but in the pre-school years discipline is lax. Both parents freely indulge the child, and they spend a great deal of time with him. The belt, an [861] • ever-present, ever-threatened means of punishment, only appears when the child assumes the rights and duties which he will exercise as long as he remains on his parents' croft.

When he begins school at five or, in remote townships, 867
at six, the rights and duties determined by age and sex begin 462 to emerge in perspective. Actually, the child has already begun to make a pretense, playfully imitating his or her father or mother, at assuming his role, but the influence of the sex category is not marked. A small boy may fetch some peat for the fire or some water for the dishes. Once he starts school, he is no longer asked to do these chores. As soon as he is able to carry a pail he may feed the chickens; now he only feeds the calves. His first real task is tending the cattle, bringing them down from the hill and driving them out after the milking. As time goes on, he learns how to plant and dig potatoes, cut turf, harvest hay and oats, and at last how to shear sheep.

864

864 SEX TRAINING--adult beliefs, standards, and aims concerning sex behavior in children and methods of sex training; incidence of specifically sexual behavior in infants and children (e.g., masturbation, fingering of genitals, exhibitionism, sex play); rules for the control of such behavior (e.g., imposition, inculcation, enforcement); training in sexual modesty; imparting of knowledge and beliefs about sex and reproduction; reactions to curiosity of children about sex; normal age for each aspect of sex training; reactions of children to sex training; etc. See also:

Personality 15
Sex 83
Ethical ideals 577
Initiation 881

000 trouble; and neighbours come to suffer too!

181 Turning to natural things, how far could the people observe and think rationally, free from the intervention of imaginary beliefs? The Gael possess common sense, keen observation, ready wits and accurate memory. They show powers of tracing effects to their cause; and on the whole, their agricultural practices were based on good sense, and their knowledge of nature was wide. Before taking a social decision, they reasoned together to good purpose.

In the ordering of family life, their ideals were founded on common sense and human feeling, little interfered with by superstitions. Irrational prohibitions too often restrict the issues of life where it is already severely limited by • [864] environment. A word should therefore be said of the 181 bearing of beliefs upon the physical aspects of mating and 864 parenthood, and of Gaelic teaching upon these. To begin with an early experience among all peasantry, during 233 calving and lambing today shepherds, cattlemen and dairy-maids show delighted tenderness—there is no other word for it—in the care of mother and new-born offspring, though at other times they may be quite rough-and-ready at their work. What is true of hired farm-hands is still truer of a crofter's family tending their own precious stock. When out herding, boys and girls, before and after puberty, have to be exact in reporting when a bull has served a cow, so as to tell whether or no a calf is to be looked for next spring.

181 At the same time, human facts were not left to be 864 learned only by observation of animals, but were simply and frankly taught. In a parent's verses to a maiden, for instance, marriage is spoken of tenderly but frankly

86

ZATION--general statements dealing with several aspects of the basic sms of cultural transmission, especially the socialization of impulses nore informal educational processes. For formal education see 87; onality and its development see 15.

286 Despite these aids and incentives, parents do not 288 encourage their children to weave. The weavers them-
463 868 selves describe the job as dull, offering no security 593 and no possibilities for advancement.
829
[461] Referring to her young son, a mother says, "By the time he's old enough to weave, the tweeds will have failed." Another mother says, "I want him to learn some trade, if he's intelligent enough. I don't want him to stay here. The tweed is so uncertain." "There's no future in it," says the father of another young boy, "I definitely wouldn't want him to be a weaver. It would be good if he went in for engineering."

463 The histories of the weavers reveal many examples
464 of shifting occupations. Weaving often alternates with 286 work in the local mill, which is also relatively unspecialized. The Shawbost mill must tolerate this unstable labor force, as labor is difficult to find.
[166] Eldest sons tend to leave the island for more stable,
[593] permanent jobs, leaving the croft and the loom to their younger siblings. Table V[1] shows the number of male weavers in each age group.

288 The fact that Shawbost has the same age structure
461 as the rest of rural Lewis (see Table II)[2] and less 162 unemployment signifies that weaving has not served as 166 an adequate incentive to keep young people on the island.

1. [See p. xi--Analyst]
2. [See p.xiii--Analyst]

*159 question, whether it would be better to change from the 288 Orb trade and go to power looms. Then you would be 458 able to do any kind of cloth. You wouldn't be tied down to regulations as you are with the Harris Tweed. To do that after all it cost them with the court case a few years back--. But, at the same time, it's more important to have work than this trademark. As it is at the moment, it's just a white elephant."

Neilie Leoid

*159 Neilie Leoid left school in 1931 at the age of 14, as easy-going and generally content with things then as he is 40 years later. "When I was going to school lots of people hated the headmaster, but I had no complaints against him. Perhaps people are inclined to blame other people for their own failures. Of course, I didn't like school very much, and I didn't go to it all that often.

"In those days you didn't have the same access to education as the young people have today. You didn't *159 assume you could go very high. You were quite content to 288 settle down to weaving. The boys started learning from [868] anyone who was around. I started weaving with my uncle [434] when I was 15, on an old wooden loom. In one winter [435] we earned the L26 to buy a single-shuttle automatic. My uncle's eyesight was getting sort of dim, so I would

869

869 TRANSMISSION OF BELIEFS--special techniques for the inculcation of beliefs, attitudes and values not covered elsewhere in this section (e.g., supernatural beliefs, beliefs concerning phenomena of the external world); manipulation of anxiety in support of beliefs (e.g., arousing it for motivation, relieving it for reinforcement); role of accident and coincidence in confirming supernatural beliefs (e.g., rain following a rain-making rite, winning a race while wearing a luck charm); extent to which reality testing is inhibited or encouraged in children; etc. See also:

Religious beliefs 77
Beliefs about nature and man 82
Theories of disease 753
Types of religious experience 781
Formal religious instruction 794, 872

781 the same room as his father. His father used to lecture
273 him, but he closed his ears. Then his father died. The week after he walked out of the bothan, a relative sent him some money. He had been trying to buy a suit on installment, but always spent the money on drink. He went into town, got the suit, and wore it to church the next Sunday."

781 The process of conversion is often accompanied by 153 feelings of restlessness, inability to sleep, scriptural passages running through one's mind, alienation from normal surroundings ("A voice kept whispering, 'this is not your home'"), and occasionally visions, all of which events serve as signs to the person that he is indeed converted,
• [869] one of the few chosen by God for salvation. As children are taught from an early age in both school and Sunday school to memorize Biblical passages, it is not surprising that such passages often come to mind easily, and, during a stressful, disorderly time of life may be interpreted as messages from God which promise order and relief. Evangelical services are full of doom, the imminent possibility of unexpected death, and exhortations to convert. Conversion is often traced to a minister's preaching.

"I was like an animal. I didn't care whether God existed. Then my wife died. It was when I saw the coffin that something happened inside. I was converted six months later."

[18] gentle frankness, as there is for reticence.[1] But since
[864] Augustine, orthodox religion, Catholic and Protestant, has [771] overstressed and misunderstood the folk-lore of 'the Fall'
—originally, it seems, a legend of fertility and fulfilment!
• [869] In part as a result of the teaching of the doctrine of the [773] 'Fall', there has arisen an attitude to parenthood which falls short of rational understanding and reverence for human life.[2] If fact be the best guard against superstitious fancy, and if sensibility and tact can soften the first shock of adolescence, then the Gael knew wisdom.

121 Returning to the main theme, it is clear that primitive religion and folk-lore alike show misunderstandings of cause and effect, and of the action of 'mind' on 'body' and 'matter'. What are facts to faith may be symbols to science; yet if these symbols prefigure truth, they may
121 outlast the present stage of scientific recognition. Gaelic
771 belief and practice show a recognition of communal as 181 well as individual spirituality; of the depth of consciousness below its upper surface, and its upwelling power; and of the visible world without, in all its beauty, as a gate

[532] [1] Needless to say, Gaelic verse has its moments of coarse freedom like that of any tongue. Of the lively lilts (puirt-a-beul) sung when there is no piper or fiddler to play for dancing, most of the words are delightful, but a few are not. A rather 'drinky' dissolute fellow—a small contractor on one of the Isles whose apprenticeship in the cities had not improved his character—once quoted a coarse jingle to me, only to see little amusement at his song and some contempt for its singer. He excused himself by saying, "It's rough . . . it's rough—but it's not dirty"! His excuse sums up the cruder expressions of animal spirits found in Gaelic jingles. One may adapt it as "Sometimes coarse, but rarely or never vicious".

[2] A. Geddes, "The Origin of Sin in Genesis and a Missing Legend", Hibbert J. vol. 44, Nos. 1 and 3, 1945-46. Cf. The Legends of Creation: an Anthropo-Geographical Interpretation of Genesis, i-iii (with map); Man, vol. 45 (104), 1945.

The Churches have given attention to the second chapter of Genesis, at the expense of the first. Gaelic spiritual tradition seems to have been singularly unwarped by such confused mythology, and to have held firmly to the first chapter, in its noble simplicity.

871

871 EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM--degree of development and elaboration of formal education; prevalent types of educational specialization (e.g., schools, tutors, apprenticeship); source of support of teachers and educational institutions (e.g., fees from students, ecclesiastical aid, private gifts and endowments); systematization of education (e.g., local school boards, state educational agencies, voluntary organizations of educational administrators); degree of standardization as to levels, policies, and curricula; primary objectives of formal education (e.g., piety, morality, citizenship, vocational skills; intellectual leadership); diffusion of education (e.g., educational statistics); etc.
See also:

Literacy 212
School buildings 346
Public support of education 698
Reformatories 738
Philanthropic foundations 741
Sunday schools 794

Chapter 5

GEOGRAPHICAL AND SOCIAL MARGINALITY

182 Despite the growth of the Harris Tweed industry and the gradual disappearance of some of the techniques and expectations associated with heavy reliance on the land and the sea, an important factor which helps to sustain some of these patterns is the social and geographical marginality of the islanders.

175 When the young men who survived the second world [729] war returned to the island, most households still had [231] horses to cultivate the croft, but a few years later
[407] the tractors replaced the horses. The Labor government, 175 which came into power after the war, passed legislation
657 which extended the processes of centralization that had proceeded since the breakdown of the clan system. The National Health Service was established. Free milk
• [871] became available in schools. More scholarships (called "bursaries") became available for further schooling.
[207] Television came in the 1950's. In short, the islander was exposed to a number of new alternatives.

182 To the extent that persons became involved in these possibilities, the island became peripheral or marginal. The island has become more dependent upon central

522 In nation-wide comic strips and jokes, the Highlander
181 plays the role of the clown, the rustic country cousin. The comic strip "Angus Og" portrays a kilted Highlander, aly and canny behind his apparent simplicity, tricking the landlord and searching for the Loch Ness monster. Stories of the lazy, dour crofter abound.[1]

166 When young men go away to the Army or Navy or to 181 work on the mainland, they say that they feel like 175 "foreigners." "Thirty years ago the island was very 166 isolated. It was difficult to get away. There were 182 so few education grants available. I got my teaching
• 871 certificate and wanted to get a post back on the island, but was told there wouldn't be a vacancy for another fifteen years. So I went down to England, and found I had to be at least as good as an Englishman if not better in my job to get ahead."

177 "When I went into the RAF, I had never seen light
365 switches because we used paraffin lamps. An English
354 chap told me to turn the light on, and I didn't know which way meant on or off. That memory still sticks in me."

[1] Even a high official in the Highlands and Islands Development Board tells a joke, that is "presently going round Westminster," of the Spaniard who approached the Highlander and told him of the word manana which he translated as "Don't do today what you can put off till tomorrow," asking if there was a corresponding word in Gaelic. "In Gaelic," replied the Highlander, "we have no word that conveys such a sense of urgency."

464 on the island she had spoken English in school and had 197 not given much thought to which language she was speaking
186 "I suppose it was because the other girls couldn't under-571 stand us. They always used to mimic us, making noises like they were talking it. It was nice to be able to talk about things and not have anyone else understand, especially when they teased us so much."

197 But on the island itself, the number of persons
178 speaking Gaelic is declining; and the scope of the langu
[192] i.e., the range of situations to which it applies (as reflected in the diversity of vocabulary used), is becomi
[196] more restricted. A psychological experiment in which the [191] semantic differential was used to study the organization of English and Gaelic vocabulary in the cognitive process of Gaelic speakers suggests that Gaelic speakers are not bilingual but monolingual in particular situations (Maclea 197 1966). Gaelic is the language of hearth, home, family and 191 community. English is the language of education, the business world, and various transactions with the larger 197 society. Most Gaelic speakers spoke only Gaelic when they
• 871 entered school, but were required to speak only English in 191 the classroom. One islander recalls, "The first English [876] words you learned were 'Sit' and 'Stand.' Those were the days you got strapped if you spoke any Gaelic." Children were addressed by their full English names. One of the

197 One of the
793 richest sources of Gaelic vocabulary now available is 779 the Gaelic Bible, but many villagers, especially the younger ones, complain that they are unable to understand many of the Gaelic words used by the minister in his sermons.

197 Although provision for teaching Gaelic in the schools
• 871 was made in the Education Act of 1918, only within the last ten years have schools incorporated classes in which Gaelic is taught at both primary and secondary levels. Gaelic is taught as a foreign language like French or Latin, rather than used as a medium of instruction, which would require a much larger vocabulary than most teachers possess.

[875] The present schoolmaster in Shawbost differs from past
[551] schoolmasters in that he addresses the children by their Gaelic names,[2] and devises projects intended to encourage a sense of pride in "Celtic culture."

893 The Department of Celtic Studies at the University of 197 Glasgow, which includes in its staff a Lewis poet and 185 several Scottish Nationalists, is described as "progressive." According to an islander who is a student in the Department, "They believe that if Gaelic is to survive as a language, it must be written as it is spoken. At school we were taught to write 'proper' Gaelic, Gaelic that's considered

[2] Persons who come from Gaelic-speaking areas are addressed and referred to by Gaelicised names, such as "Murchadh" rather than "Murdo," and usually these names take the form of patronymics, which may or may not include nicknames (for example, Iain Dhomhnuill Bhain, i.e., John the son of fair Donald).

197 Within the village there are no branches of An Comunn
178 Gaidhealach and few books written in Gaelic. Once a rural 166 family moves to Stornoway, children often refuse to speak
191 Gaelic, even though they understand it, and parents tend to speak only English to their children, believing this will help them "get on." In the next generation, the
• [871] language is lost. Village children attending school in Stornoway often prefer talking to their Gaelic-speaking [867] roommates in English. A young island woman, married and living in Edinburgh, says she would like her baby son to learn Gaelic but feels that if he had a mixture of the two languages the other children would laugh at him.

197 English is the language of the larger society, the 191 language spoken in school and the language required in most jobs and in dealing with most officials. In Gaelic-
197 speaking areas, the speaking of English connotes high
191 554 status. If an English speaker mispronounces Gaelic words, 626 he is quickly forgiven, praised for trying to learn such 578 a difficult language, and asked why he bothers with a language that "isn't any use anyway." But if a Gaelic speaker makes mistakes in English, he is teased mercilessly.

[551] Many nicknames derive from such mistakes; for example,
"Peter Squeak" got his name by mispronouncing the word [524] "picturesque." People "win points" by competing with each other in speaking English. "See how good you are in

• 871 Education in the local school has included a great
875 deal of religious instruction; in other words, religious
791 and educational spheres commingle. Because of the
[466] relative prestige which the teaching profession offers to persons from the island, and because the islands are considered "isolated" by most persons looking for jobs (teaching posts on the island include an added sum which is designated as "isolation payment"), most of the island's teachers are themselves islanders. Education [554] is one method by which one's position in the community is elevated. The high status derived from having advanced education also reflects favorably on the parents and position of the family. But teachers and others who return to the island are expected not to deviate from island norms in important matters, such as fundamentalist religious beliefs; hence teachers tend to perpetuate fundamentalist religious beliefs within the classroom.

871 Formerly the minister visited the school once each 791 year to examine the children on their catechism, thus
793 testing the state of religious instruction in the school.
178 Several years ago this practice was stopped by the education authorities of the County Council, and the minister now gives a sermon in the school about once a month but is not allowed to examine the children. Many ministers are dissatisfied with the arrangement, as they are afraid that

• 871 the children might not receive proper religious 791 instruction.
793
178

"Family worship" is considered an important part 771 of daily life. Prayers should be said before meals
782 and teas, and the head of the household should read
593 passages from the Bible to the assembled members of the household every morning and evening. The practice of [178] "reading the books" prevails in households headed by [592] older men, but is less common among families headed by younger men.

794 1. The Clique of the Converted: The second network
632 within the religious sphere is a special religious in-
621 group, the clique of the converted (curamach). This clique constitutes a relatively strongly bounded system which to some extent competes with the township boundary system. Owen (Rees 1960) has noted that as persons become more involved with religion in the Protestant Hebrides, they tend to remove themselves from community life.

Intense involvement with the church sometimes conflicts with township activities since people may attend Communions at times when a fank is planned, leaving the work to be done by others. When elders of the church are present at activities, such as fanks, which are otherwise usually boisterous and full of humor, behavior tends to be "properly" restrained.

HISTORY

* 175 was made in the Crofters (Scotland) Bill of 1961; this had a mixed 657 reception. In general, today, small crofts predominate in most 656 areas. Out of some 18,000 (the number is decreasing annually 423 about 15 per cent exceed 20 acres (see Chapter 5). But size has 429 little to do with the type of land; whether arable or rough grazing
24 In fact, the proportion indicates that some 85 per cent of all crofts [178] in Scotland, and this applies to Harris and Lewis, cannot be considered as full-time now or as potentially full-time.

EDUCATION

* 175 In general, the Highlands and Islands of Scotland owe their intro-799 duction to letters to the early Christian missionaries. One of the
• 871 main provisions in the early monastic Church in Ireland and Scotland was for the cultivation of learning and the training of its members in sacred and profane literature. Associated as they were so closely with the common folk on the one hand and the aristocracy on the other, something of this learning and desire for learning rubbed off to advantage on to willing recipients. Literacy [212] however, has had many ups and downs since the dawning of the Christian era in the Hebrides. Though it is impossible to ascertain to what extent the common folk participated in the knowledge imparted by the early Celtic monasteries, there are many references to a class of cleric called 'scolocs', whose learning was accessible to the poorer classes of the emergent Highland society. The 'scoloc' is still retained in Gaelic as 'sgalag', a farm servant, the poor searcher after knowledge who received education in the monasteries in return for services as labourer on the church lands, and who appears in monastic records as late as the fourteenth century.

* 175 As late as the sixteenth century, however, after the influence of 212 the Church had diminished, the inhabitants were almost wholly illiterate. When the Fife Adventurers came to Lewis in 1598, they brought a schoolmaster with them; though it can be taken that his services were intended for the improvement of the incomers rather than the islesfolk. Old Roderic MacLeod, doughty chief of the MacLeods of Lewis at the time of the Fifers' arrival, was unable to sign his name. Two of his sons, on the other hand, were generations and being felt as an obligation to 553 family names, these various practices serve to sion among a people who share rather few surnames.

Skye

w a child who had been named for his parents.
elationship of father and child is formally es- 851
t baptism. As we shall see in the following chapter, takes little or no part in arranging for the sacra-spiritual welfare of the children is the father's 593
s is also the disciplinarian, but in the pre-school pline is lax. Both parents freely indulge the child, end a great deal of time with him. The belt, an [861]
t, ever-threatened means of punishment, only appears ild assumes the rights and duties which he will long as he remains on his parents' croft.
he begins school at five or, in remote townships, 867 462 rights and duties determined by age and sex begin n perspective. Actually, the child has already ke a pretense, playfully imitating his or her father at assuming his role, but the influence of the y is not marked. A small boy may fetch some peat e or some water for the dishes. Once he starts is no longer asked to do these chores. As soon le to carry a pail he may feed the chickens; now ds the calves. His first real task is tending the nging them down from the hill and driving them out ilking. As time goes on, he learns how to plant atoes, cut turf, harvest hay and oats, and at last r sheep.

867 462 A girl also makes an early while a boy is never seen helping fore, his duties begin later, a s make beds and do the cleaning. I has been left behind by her broth
she is expected to take their pla event, she will be taught how to and how to help in all other tas [567] corn and shearing. She learns at diverse ways that the primary rol needs of man, some man, throughou strong enough to live alone.

Learning the virtues valued community, as well as the tasks e
boys and girls are indoctrinated Islander long before they can uni their object lessons. They are s division of labor of their parent almost unaltered status values of and females to two different, but activity.

871 155 As they progress in school,
In one way this is inevitable. U attempt to teach the children any relate to the life expected of th
there were no agricultural subjec
one travelling teacher of agricul

pretense at assuming her role.
within the house, and, there-
mall girl soon begins to help
f she is an only child, or ers who have left the Island, ce on the croft. In any milk, how to plant a garden, s of crofting, except cutting a very early age and in e of a woman is to serve the t her life, unless she is

by their parents and the ssential to crofting, both with the ethos of the erstand the importance of eparated by more than the
s. As we shall see, the the culture relegate males complimentary, spheres of conflicts begin to develop.

ntil 1953 there was no thing that would directly em on Skye. In particular ts. Even now, there is but ture to serve the entire

868

868 TRANSMISSION OF SKILLS--acquisition of language; teaching children to walk and swim; techniques for inculcating manual dexterity and technological skills; teaching and learning of economic skills appropriate to each sex; informal instruction in occupational skills; acquisition of artistic skills (e.g., playing of musical instruments); relative importance of imitation, practice, and instruction in the transmission of skills; etc. See also:

Language 19
Fine arts 53
Division of labor by sex 462
Occupational specialization 463
Locomotion 481
Motor habits 516
Athletic sports 526
Military training 702
Age at walking and talking 856
Formal vocational education 874

852 of water on the child's forehead, successively invoking wisdom, peace and purity. Lay baptism, recognised by Greek, Latin, Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches, may be partly of pre-Christian communal origin. It retained special significance in isolated communities. Where a clergyman might come within eight days, a temporary name was given at birth: 'Tonsured of the Lord' (Maol-domhnuich) if a male child, and Gertrude (Griadach) if a female. Her immediate duties over after a safe delivery, the midwife forthwith became the celebrant or (as it were) lay priestess, and her neighbourly helpers, her acolytes. As the midwife intoned her part they gave the responses. "By the Book itself," said a reiter in Uist, for many years a skilled midwife, "ear has never heard music more beautiful than the music of the watching women when they are consecrating the seed of man and committing him to the great God of life." Those who care to ponder the thoughts then spoken may believe her word. (Carmina, Nos. 50 and 217-219.)

86 Initiation grew as understanding dawned and the babe passed on in childhood to be an older helper. Gaelic child-lore gives many a stimulus to an infant's intelligent apprehension of life about him, and to poetic appreciation. These may lead by natural steps to deeper things in adolescence. Homely teaching which led to a first communion, remained an intimate part of life in home and township.

814 From many parts of the Highlands and Isles, Car-
•869 michael and his friends gathered variants of verse prayers
538 invoking graces in the young: Invocations of the Graces,
869 Orachan Buadha (Buadh, victory, achievement or grace; Nos. 3 and 278-281). In Tiree, of which the thoughtful minister had sent a fragment of verses to Carmichael,

814 the invocation was addressed to boys and girls, in Uist to •869 youths and maidens. The loveliest version of all had been 538 spoken by an old, evicted woman and learned from her by 869 a lad who, as a poor crofter in old age, passed it down for record, for ever. Of this invocation Carmichael wrote, "Probably it was composed to a maiden on her marriage. The phrase 'eala dhonn', brown swan, would indicate that the girl was young—not yet a white swan", a tender and delicate recognition of youth still to attain perfection.

869 Not a thought jars, each stanza building up the rising move-
538 ment of the whole. In the hundred lines of this poem, metre and assonance are regular except where growing intensity creates new rhythm and design; and the last vowel-rhyme of each stanza leads on to those of the next one, to form an unbroken ascent to the climax.[1]

869 The Invocation begins, "I bathe thy palms. . . . And 539 I place the nine pure choice graces in thy fair fond face.
The grace of form . . . of fortune . . . of goodness . . .
869 of wisdom . . . of charity . . . of choice maidenliness

[114]

[1] Certain critics, struck with the variety of the poem but missing its thought-sequence and unity of form, took Carmichael's note of 'many fragments' to imply that the poem was a composite version, piously restored by the editor—in spite of his statement that it was taken down from a single reciter (one Duncan Maclellan). Carmichael's spiritual power of evoking treasures from the reciters was inseparable from his utter honesty. And the publication, forty years later, of four Invocations and of scores of fragments (cf. No. 277) has added (to the internal evidence cited) further proof that the poem was no editorial assemblage. Without doubt, the poem has grown from the inspired meditation of generations of poet-worshippers in a hundred glens and isles. But the English reader should realise what the Gaelic ear may hear: this poem forms an organic unity; though many petalled it is a single flower. Readers familiar with medieval or earlier chants know that the enumeration of attributes is a feature common to all, whether in Church Latin or other tongues, as in the English medieval hymn beginning, "God in my head, and in my understanding". In Gaelic, however, the richness and freedom of the vowel-pattern and rhythms carries the thought onward, wave on wave to its climax. A foremost poet of France, Pierre Emmanuel, to whom I introduced this poem, exclaimed, "This is a Christian Song of Songs!"

869 . . . of whole-souled loveliness . . . of winning speech."
539 Then, after the tender image of the brown swan and fare-
867 well on departure to a new home, comes a string of exquisite comparisons: to shade and shelter in need, to safety of isle and strength of fortress, to gift of health for the ailing. Each grace, each image, expresses not simply individual qualities but relationships and service for others. After eight choice lines in praise of the girl's womanly gifts—from "Thine is the faith of Mary", through chosen attributes of Bride, the Fairy Woman, Penelope, Emir, Darthula and Maeve, to "the charm of the sweet singer (Binnebheul)"—the poem, in Gaelic that is sonorous and succinct, passes beyond the sphere of comparison with things or even personal qualities. It acclaims her joyous girlhood as one with the powers of life-giving, life-abundant things, and as a reflection of the Divine:

> Thou'rt the joy in every delight,
> Thou the sunbeam's radiant light;
> Thou'rt the gate of a welcoming chief,
> Thou the clearest star to lead;
> Thou'rt the step of the deer on a height,
> Thou the pace of a steed ere the fight;
> Thou'rt the calm of a gliding swan;
> of longings thou'rt the loveliness.
>
> The lovely likeness of the Lord
> Is in thy pure face,
> The loveliest form
> Was ere on earth.[1]

538 192 [1] Poetic form is integral to the conception; hence this translation in verse. But alternatives to Carmichael's choice of English prose may complement his own, in bringing out the meaning. Line 1, 'joy', sonas—and a 'delightful or wonderful thing', ni éibhinn; l. 3, dorus, doorway; l. 4, iùl, guidance, land-mark, way; l. 6, steud, steed, would imply, in blàr, 'a field' of battle, and, by contrast, l. 7, sèimh eal, calm (rather than 'grace') of a floating, swimming swan; l. 8, rùn, secret inclination, longing, and hence too, a person beloved; ll. 9, 11, cruth, form, shapeliness (and by implication),

539 And so, after every good wish for days, years and life,
867 the Invocation closes: "Peter has come and Paul" . . .
869 the Disciples and the Archangels. . . . Jesus the mild and the Spirit of guidance have come,

> And the King of kings has come on the helm,
> To bestow on thee their affection and their love,
> A bhaireadh duit-se graidh us ruin.

The ideal of choice maidenliness which this Invocation portrays, culminates in the thought of the loveliness that 867 was Christ. It rises, too, to stirring virility: "the island
539 at sea, the fortress on land", or "the step of the steed on the plain". Yet when all is said, it is a womanly image which prevails: after the fortress comes the well in the desert, and after the charger's step, the gracious calm of a floating swan. It is all the more significant that the Invocation was addressed both 'to boys and girls' in one isle, and 'to youths and maidens' in another. Not simply was boyhood taught to honour girlhood: ideal womanhood was invoked to raise manhood itself to fullness.

885 Upon marriage, the husband replaced the maiden's
292 snood or stiom that bound her uncovered hair by the wifely
585 kerchief, am breid. Folded diagonally, its three-cornered shape came to symbolise the Trinity, in benediction on 539 the bride's head.[1] A poem to a bride, "now beginning her dual course", commences, "A thousand hails to thee

538 192 likeness. The short second stanza given stands out alone: the poem, having attained its climax by a rhythm sustaining the upward, sonorous movement, is hushed by its few simple words. In From the Hebrides, Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser rearranged one or two of these lovely stanzas, as one of her 'lyrics with refrain'. Cf. A. Geddes, The Songs of Craig and Ben, vol. ii, 1955.

[1] The kertch is spoken of in many songs, in which a lover hopes to place it on his young love's head, or a husband praises its whiteness as worn by his wife. When first I knew the Lews, the kertch was still commonly worn under the more recent Lowland mutch, and either framed a young face, or an 198 old one, charmingly. The two have not quite vanished, though memories of what the kertch once symbolised are hard to find.

EDUCATION

Work, and Practical Navigation and Seamanship would be leading features.' 175* 874

For many years afterwards technical education was available only on a voluntary evening-class basis. For instance, in September 1920 the Lewis School Management Committee offered evening classes in motor driving and maintenance, mathematics, dynamics, English, arithmetic and handwork in wood and metal. They were well supported and classes continued at sporadic intervals from that time. The plans for the present Lews Castle Technical College were passed in May 1948, after a lot of argument. Today the college has proved its worth; it is a centre of technical education in navigation and seamanship, weaving and textiles, building, engineering, and other pursuits important to the people of the Outer Isles. 871 •

In 1973 the Nicolson Institute received the Freedom of the Burgh of Stornoway, in recognition of the school's centenary which fell in that year. The event strengthened the 'town and town' relationship which has always existed between the Burgh and the School, even more so today when the pupils participate in much of the social and cultural activity in the town. 871

STORNOWAY

366 632 747 429 going concern to a trust which was set up to receive the gift and whose first object is to assist aged and infirm residents in the burgh. In effect, all profits earned by the shop are passed to the trust for distribution to those in need.

Almost half the houses in Stornoway were built by the local 362 632 authority. The Town Council has never been afraid of rooting out unfit houses. By 1937, under the 1930 Slum Clearance Act, * [175] one person in four in the town lived in a council house. The housing schemes, though large, have still that element of community with personality, something often lacking in newly developed 362 427 632 areas of other towns and cities. The Council also supports private housing by taking up sites, clearing and servicing them and then feuing them to private owners. The rents policy is to have no housing deficit beyond the statutory rate contribution (which works out at between £6,000 and £7,000 per annum). The Council's tenants co-operate with rent collection to a unique degree: collection figures are something like 99 per cent and on occasion 100 362 178 162 161 632 per cent. A vigorous housing policy is important to the town, as its population is now over 5,300 and still growing, mainly at the expense of the rural areas. Development plans at present envisage a 1981 population of about 9,100 persons within the parish boundary and including the burgh.

632 369 Stornoway is an island town and is an island's town: its rhythms of life are those of the island, regular and timed by nature, but with an added syncopation—the result of an urban 632 197 outlook. In this context, Gaelic is the language, though English is the lingua franca. Deeper still in the methods used for communication is a kind of patois based on Gaelicised English, Anglicised Gaelic, with some other words that defy investigation into their origin. Many words find their natural forebears in Scots, American and the maritime tongues of Europe, which might be expected in view of Stornoway's importance as a sea-port of significance a century or two ago. The Stornoway language, as spoken by true-born natives, recognisable anywhere by another native, reflects the life of the cosmopolitan, sea-faring people.

632 Apart from its industrial opportunities, Stornoway has many • 871 of the more sophisticated urban facilities that people everywhere [369] seem to crave, particularly with regard to education. The senior secondary school, the 'Nicolson', has had since its inception a formidable academic record Back in 1907 work from the school was included in the educational section of an International Exhibition held in Christchurch, New Zealand: this was appropriate because emigrants from the west Highlands, notably from Harris and Lewis, were among the pioneers of New Zealand education a century ago. In 1957 new extensions were opened, costing about £300,000 and making the school the largest of its kind in the Highlands area. It is co-educational, its primary and junior secondary departments taking only Stornoway children and its senior secondary department catering for those from both Stornoway and rural Lewis. Many board out in the town during the week, returning home at weekends.

COMMUNICATIONS

In providing social facilities, the town has placed itself in the position of an agent for those things deemed necessary for life, and is a middle-ground between the rural repression of the Free Church and the city abandon of the mainland, with resulting dilemma. The public houses, the cinema, youth clubs, dances and juke boxes are all in direct opposition to the preaching of the Free Church. The result is tension between the town's desire to act as a host for tourists and its wish to fulfil its duty on a religious plane; to instance this, the Stornoway Sabbath is less strict than the Lewis Sabbath. In keeping with the rest of Lewis, social standards are extremely high. Home is the centre of life, as it always was; the sense of community and communal responsibility is there. Divorce is practically unheard of, and the incidence of crime, as such, is extremely low.

HARRIS'S OFFSHORE ISLANDS

The small shop stocks essential household items, and extensive use is made of mail-order. A few years ago a telephone to the mainland was supplied, much valued in emergencies.

Scarp in fact has a small place of its own in the history of communications: on 28 July 1934 one of three British rocket-mail experiments (for which special stamps were printed) was held there. The inventor of the rocket, Herr Zucker, was later to become prominent in V-rocket work during the second German war. Herr Zucker personally conducted the firings. His rocket, a large cylinder with pointed nose, something like a heavy shell, was 3 ft long and weighed 30 lb, with capacity for several thousand letters. The motive force was ordinary high explosive contained in a large cartridge about 18 in long; the device was designed to burn with a series of rapid explosions and produce a flight speed of 1,000 mph. The firing apparatus was a flimsy wooden structure providing a runway rising at an angle from the ground, an elastic sling giving the rocket an initial impulse. The first rocket was fired on Scarp, to the mainland: it exploded prematurely and most of the mail was damaged. The postmaster applied to the backs of the damaged covers a three-line cachet in violet: 'Damaged by first explosion at Scarp—Harris.' In order that this mail should be actually flown, it was re-transmitted by the second firing made in the opposite direction, Harris—Scarp. The whole experiment was deemed a failure, however. The route taken by the mail addressed to Kirkwall was unique; rocket, ferryboat, motorcar, mail steamer, railway train, and finally by Highland Airways to Kirkwall.

Depopulation in Scarp was encouraged by the lack of employment prospects, and centralised education, of the type which has already played havoc with remote rural communities elsewhere, is felt to be a black cloud darkening the future. Much the same problem faces Scalpay Island, mentioned later. Children are removed from their home environments for higher secondary education at a central school: for Harris children this is at Portree, Skye. Many islanders argue that the scheme tends to destroy the family unit, urbanising the children so that they become unsuited to, and with no inclination for, rural life. Some sympathy must be felt for the education authorities, of course, as the pro-

EDUCATION

erate as to have drawn up a bond, unaided and with a re-able degree of legal precision.

was not until Lewis belonged to the Seaforth family that ning in the nature of education generally came the way of ommon folk of the island. John Morison, a native of Lewis, wrote about 1680, says:

> Onlie for the tyme the countris is possessed and saglie governed > the Earle of Seaforth, by whose industrious care and benevo-> nce the people, formerly inclined to rudeness and barbarity, are > duced to civilitie, much understanding and knowledge by the > urishing schooll planted and maintained by the said Earle all > e tyme in the toun of Stornoway. And not onlie the people of > e Lews, but also those of the nixt adjacent Isles. The gentlemens > ns and daughters are bred in that schooll to the great good and > mfort of that people; so that there are few families but at least > e maister can read and write: I do remember in my own > me that there was not three in all the countrie that knew A. b.
> A Bible.

rtin Martin mentions this Stornoway school as teaching both n and English. During the eighteenth century a school for hing both these subjects with writing and arithmetic was blished.

Martin also indicates that it was never considered necessary desirable to educate girls, whether they were common folk or ghters of the upper classes, unless they were daughters of efs and next in line to succeed their father, there being no male e before them. Towards the close of the eighteenth century, orts were made to educate the children of the island. Paroal schools had by that time been established; the Society in otland for Propagating Christian Knowledge and the Gaelic hool Society supported several. Clergymen of the period, how-r, claimed that the advantages of education were not appreci-
d; as a consequence, the schools were not well attended.

The SSPCK had its origins in 1701, when a few private gentle-n met in Edinburgh and resolved to establish schools in the ghlands and Islands, and to appeal to the public for subscripns for the purpose. They had a fitful beginning, but Queen ne encouraged the scheme by royal proclamation and subscriptions flowed in. In 1709 the Queen granted Letters Patent under the Great Seal for erecting certain of the subscribers into a corporation. Thus did the SSPCK come into being, with an initial capital fund of £1,000. Its progress was rapid. In 1711, it supported twelve schools; in 1795, 323 schools. In addition to paying the teachers' salaries, the Society supplied the children with school books, established public libraries in various parishes, and defrayed the expenses of printing Gaelic Bibles and other books.

HISTORY

Harris here enters in an interesting sideline. In the records of the Presbytery of Mull, 1730, it is reported that 'Mr M'Aula . . . carried off the library to Harris, because he was not paid for his expenses in bringing them [the books of the Society] to Coll.' This MacAulay was the great-grandfather of the English man of letters, Lord MacAulay.

The Gaelic School Society was founded in 1811 and existed until 1892. It supported a large number of schools, as the desire for education had exceeded the capacity of the SSPCK. In 1796 there were two schools and a spinning school in the parish of Stornoway. The minister of Barvas, writing in that year, says that there had not been a parochial school in that parish for many years, but that there was a Society school at Ness, attended by about twenty pupils, instead of treble that number had all the children been made to attend. The minister of Uig stated that three spinning schools were established there by Lady Seaforth, but he does not refer to ordinary schools in his parish at that time. According to the minister of Lochs, a parochial school was built there in 1795, and a Society school some three years earlier.

By the middle of the nineteenth century matters had improved considerably, though there were still complaints that education was not appreciated. In fact, education tended to be discouraged for a very practical reason. Back in 1811 an observer in the island stated in his report that the great mass of the Lewis people would not send their children to school. 'When reproached on this head they answer "If we give them education, they will leave us."' Seventy-two years later (1883), the Napier Commission was told that 'Sir James (Matheson) supported and contributed to seventeen schools in the Island, many of which he built with teachers'

houses prior to 1854. Monthly returns of attendance were sent to my office, and parents who did not keep their children at school were dealt with, but in many cases to no avail, as they often told me they did not want to give their children wings to leave them.'

In 1833 there were thirteen schools in the parish of Stornoway, according to the New Statistical Account, 1840-46, which records that there were 586 children between the ages of six and fifteen years, and 1,265 persons above the age of fifteen in the parish who could not read. Barvas had three schools in 1836; Uig had five in 1833. In Lochs, in 1833 a parish school had just been erected, and four schools were maintained by the Gaelic School Society; yet out of a parish population of 3,067, only 12 could write. After the Disruption of 1843, the Free Church established a large number of schools throughout the island. And soon after Sir James Matheson took over the island he built schools in those districts not catered for by other agencies.

In 1865, the Government began to prepare for the Education Act of 1872, and sent Sheriff-Substitute Nicolson to the island to investigate the state of education there. At the time of his visit there were forty-seven schools, supported by as many as nine different agencies, persons, or institutions. The number of pupils on the rolls was 3,332, with 2,647 in actual attendance. Nicolson computed that there were some 2,500 children on the island who did not normally attend school, and who should have done. A large number of schools were little more than thatched houses. Fifteen were good; fourteen tolerable; and eighteen bad or inadequate. In the third group he classes 'those that cannot by any standard of comfort or fitness above that of troglodyte, be considered suitable for having the work of education carried on in them, or any work indeed, to which the prevalence of smoke and moisture are infavourable.' Of the children who attended these schools, 79 per cent received tuition in the Scriptures; 85 per cent were taught to read; 39 per cent were taught writing; 32 per cent were taught arithmetic; and 16 per cent taught needlework.

The Education Act of 1872 put an end to the old parochial system, and virtually to other agencies which it found at work. The schools on the island were brought into line with the remainder of Scotland where, under the school boards, education became both free and compulsory.

In Lewis the school of real significance to the island was, and still it, the Nicolson Institute, founded by Alexander Morison Nicolson and opened in February 1873, supported by bequests from him and his brothers. Nicolson's grandfather was the founder of the Lewis fish-curing trade, and was also shipowner and farmer. Alexander was the fifth of six sons and was educated in Stornoway parish school and in Glasgow High School. He served an apprenticeship as an engineer with Thomson of Clydebank. Later he entered the service of the Chinese Government and established himself with a partner of a shipbuilding and foundry business in Shanghai. In 1865, in his thirty-third year, he was killed in a boiler explosion in one of his new ships going a trial run. His ideal of establishing a school in Stornoway was subscribed to by his brothers who were a widespread family: Yorkshire, Mississippi, Western Australia, Tighnabruaich (Scotland) and South Africa.

The first headmaster of the school received £82 per annum, plus the school fees, which ranged from 2s 6d per quarter in the lowest classes to 5s in the highest. The fees covered reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, English, history and English grammar and composition; when Latin, Greek, French and mathematics were taught, an additional shilling was charged for each subject. But the teacher was always bound to teach gratuitiously twenty pupils selected by the Nicolson Trustees. In 1888, the school was handed over to the school board. In 1901, by a Decree of the Court of Session, its name, previously the Nicolson Public School, was changed to the Nicolson Institute. In 1898, the first boys went straight from the Institute to university, a trend that has not ceased since (see Chapter 8).

As far back as the turn of this century a recommendation was made for the provision of technical education on the island. A report on the subject of Higher Education in Lewis (1900) stated: 'Regarding the practical or scientific aspect of education . . . there is a clamant need of a central Technical School in Lewis . . . the local resources are quite inadequate for the establishment of such a school, or its maintenance, on an effective basis. Such popular technical instruction as Household Economy, Wood and Iron vision of adequate educational facilities in remote spots becomes increasingly difficult.

A HARRIS VIGNETTE

In its time Scarp has contributed more per head of population to the professions than has any other community of similar size. The last of the native Scarp population left the island in November 1971 : two families totalling seven people. The island has now attracted the attentions of a hippie community.

Scalpay

Scalpay Island, on the east side of Harris, was formerly occupied by two or three tacksmen in succession before being 'crofted out'. About 1843 the Harris factor settled twenty crofting families who managed to make a fair living there, but five years later another twenty families were added; some had been evicted from the island of Pabbay in the Sound of Harris. This led to some subdivision of the available land. The 1861 population was 388, but the figure rose to a peak of 624 in 1921; in 1951 it had declined to 541. It is now in the region of 450.

Island Scalpay is in fact one of the few places in the Highlands and Islands area in which the normal trends associated with remote regions are operating in reverse. The island despite its smallness—it is a mere 3 miles long and 1½ miles across—supports a thriving and dynamic community and is the envy of its neighbours. Scalpay is retaining its young folk; and it boasts some of the finest homes in the Hebrides. From the agricultural point of view it is not greatly different from other islands in the Hebrides. Its forty crofts produce a good crop of oats; but less than 20 acres of the land are re-seeded.

The land being as poor as it is, the men of Scalpay have turned their faces to the sea—for a living, not for emigration. Scalpay has the largest number of full-time fishermen and a total of thirty-three boats, twelve of which are ringnetters of over 40 ft. Native enterprise is also shown in the ship-owning firm whose vessels carry freight and passengers to many parts of Scotland and on occasion to the Continent. A Harbour Association was formed on the island in 1966 to work for local amenities for fishermen and

2: Thompson H-4.5 (no date) 1973 ES10 Highland Scots ES10
Lewis and Harris

the community generally—in particular for a landing stage in the North Harbour. The lighthouse at Eilean Glas, Scalpay, was in fact erected as long ago as 1788; for a long time it was the only lighthouse in the Western Isles. In 1792 it was described as 'one of great utility to the numerous shipping that frequent this channel [between Skye and the Long Island] on their voyages to and from the Baltic'.

The independence of the islanders again appears in their attitude to the education facilities provided for their children. In 1949 Scalpay parents staged a school strike in protest against the delay in the construction of a road to the school. At present the island has a junior secondary school but in 1966 the Inverness-shire County Council Education Committee proposed the transfer of the island pupils to the school at Tarbert; this would mean each child rising early in the morning to face a trip across Scalpay Sound and then a road journey to Tarbert. The inevitable protests against this proposal were rooted in its deeper implications. The school roll on Scalpay (70 pupils) has maintained a remarkable level of continuity over the years, reflecting the general prosperity of the island. Forced attendance at a central educational facility, the islanders maintain, will introduce an unsettling urban element into their children's adult views.

The smaller islands

To the west of Scalpay, in East Loch Tarbert, is the one-square-mile island of Scotosay. Its population was 14 in 1861, none in 1881, 18 in 1891, 15 in 1901, and 20 in 1911. In 1921 7 males and 12 females lived there, but none permanently since.

On the west of the Harris mainland is a high rocky island, four miles by one, called Taransay. In 1549 Dean Monro described it as being 'well inhabit and manurit', a place where people delved with spades, and with good barley and corn, and fishing. There are two old chapels and a burying ground on the island. The population of Taransay has declined to a handful through the years; its peak was 76 in 1911.

The Sound of Harris is 'a chaos of rocks and islands', so numerous that they cannot easily be counted. Some are mere pinpoints of rock; others once supported small populations. Nearest to the

A HARRIS VIGNETTE

Nearest to the 361 southern shore of Harris is the verdant arable island of Ensay, 162 two miles in circumference. The peak population was 15 in 1861,
*175 but in 1951 and 1961 there were two men (seasonal shepherds).
[131] Just south of Ensay is Killegray, two miles long. The south end was uncultivated, though a good source of peat; five people lived on Killegray in 1861, 3 in 1911 and 1921, 5 in 1931 and none in 1951. An 1865 report mentions that there was only one house on the island, so the population must have been one family only.

[131] Four to five miles west of Killegray is a low-lying, fertile island of about four miles by 1½. This is Bernera Harris which, though lying nearer to North Uist, is included in the civil parish of Harris. It still carries a fairly large population. Until the early eighteenth century it was occupied by a tacksman at one end and a community of crofters at the other. Later there was an influx of people evicted from Pabbay and the mainland of Harris. Some clearing of families from Bernera itself took place. In 1861 the population of Bernera was 315; it rose to 524 in 1901. Three schools were open
• [871] on the island in 1865: an SSPCK school, a Gaelic School Society school, and a 'female industrial school' supported by the SSPCK and 'taught by a venerable Highland lady in receipt of a salary of £8 per annum'. The school was housed in, to quote an 1865 report, 'the oldest dwelling in the Long Island, and was at one time inhabited by persons of distinction. In the outer wall is a marble slab bearing this inscription: "Hic Natus est/Illustris Ille/Normannus MacLeod/De Bernera/Eques Auratus." (Here was born that famous man, Norman MacLeod of Berneray, a distinguished knight.) This illustrious personage and his brother, Sir Roderick of Talisker, were both knighted by Charles II for distinguished services . . . A grandson of Sir Norman became known in the annals of the Bench as Lord Bannatyne.'

Three miles north-west of Bernera is Pabbay, also in the parish of Harris. At one time Pabbay was a rich green island, the 'granary of Harris', and supported a considerable population. Early last century it was inhabited by 26 families (about 100 people), who lived in comparative comfort, and by 1841 the population was 338. But Pabbay was cleared of its people. Some emigrated to Australia, some went to other places nearby, such as Scalpay, Bernera and the Bays area of Harris. In 1858 only a 184 verses would ring false to them! Before 1939, two-fifths 241 of the rural pupils of most non-crofting counties came or 361 went in the school year—most of them the children of 166 farm servants. Their schooling suffered, and their teachers might be reduced to despair; indeed it is to [182] educationists, rather than to agriculturists, that we owe a survey of these facts. When they leave home to be 'hired',

• [871] the young folk learn to fend for themselves but may suffer in the learning: stability of character and endurance in [155] attachment are hard to form.

It would be difficult to overstress the tragedy of the long-continued break-up of rural communities in the Lowlands. From the later years of the English invasions, as 175 when Major wrote with his knowledge of Scotland in 1500, 178 this break-up continued through the early, largely unre-241 corded phases of the agricultural revolution, down to the 361 later phases from 1750 or 1800 to the present day. No
166 one who has worked with fellow-servants on Scots farms will under-estimate their sterling qualities. But the break-155 up, the tragedy, happened. It was boldly sketched by the [114] Rt. Hon. Thomas Johnston (to 1929) and verified by Miss I. F. Grant (1924 onward). Beginning from intimate study of well recorded and surviving ways in the Highlands and the Hebrides, Miss Grant realised the significance of earlier Lowland life in the farm-hamlet or ferm-toun, as Lowlanders themselves could hardly have done. Comprehension of this break-up of community brings out the value of the enduring elements of communal life still recorded, remembered and surviving in the 'Outermost' Hebrides, at the core of 'the North and West'.[1]

[1] Ideas outlined in this section are developed in A. Geddes (1938–54). Detailed references will be found in the Bibliography.

827 Islanders themselves sometimes talk of a lowered stamina and poorer health today than in the past. In-178 breeding is widely held to account for this. Even if health 582 be really poorer, this explanation is untenable, since marriage outside the village has greatly increased in the 166 last century. Everywhere there is movement along the roads; a school placed half-way between two villages
• [871] fosters early acquaintance; immigrants trickle in from the mainland, and emigrants occasionally marry beyond the Island. Moreover, the people of certain villages were transplanted in large numbers eighty years ago, as from 143 Valtos, Uig, northward to Shawbost. In any case, in-breeding itself does not produce degeneration; for though it may "fix" or bring out harmful tendencies where there is already some poor or dangerous strain, it can also fix good characteristics in a healthy population.[1]

178 All these changes were hastened and reinforced by two 177 new, revolutionary means. First, the physical mobility suddenly brought to an area with no railway by the motor-166 car, van and light lorry-bus; then, towards the end of the inter-war years, the penetration of the Gaelic-speaking home by the ceaseless voices of broadcasting.

[113] [1] J. A. Thomson and P. Geddes, Life: Outlines of General Biology, 1931, vol. i, p. 473.

175 did another Zacharias, closer than Thomas to the Lewis 554 tree, who worked nobly with Wilberforce for the emanci-
614 pation of the slaves.[1] Still another connection was a 621 Canadian emigrant, grandfather of the late T. B. Macaulay, [668] LL.D. Alexander Mackenzie, the explorer of the Mackenzie River, was a descendant of Lewis tacksmen. MacIvers and Morisons also distinguished themselves.
[178] But the sons and daughters of crofters had to await the provision of education in English before they could rise
• [871] in trade, learning or war; hence few Lewismen of the greatest Lewis name, MacLeod, achieved eminence until the twentieth century.

175 As for the peasantry, the interposition of a new or 554 enlarged class of tenantry between themselves and the 565 superior must have meant that they had to labour on the 427 tacksman's home farm, and no doubt pay more in produce or cash. Hence the Gaelic saying that if the position of the small (joint) tenants was bad, that of the subtenants was worse, "the Evil One itself". Following the long fight with the Fife Adventurers, hardship may have been greatest where mainland tacksmen were placed above the joint tenants; but even under MacAulays and MacIvers rents may have been raised and some of the joint freedom lost which was still enjoyed in Ness. Whatever adjustments had been made in an earlier period had to be re-made with the beginning of Seaforth's new order.

In the following generations, contradictory accounts of lairds, factors and tacksmen are given by contemporary observers. Certain of these insisted that, given the poverty of the lands as a whole, the chiefs and landlords, factors and tacksmen, were the saviours of their people. Yet even among those who supported authority in general, there was [113] [1] Charles Booth, Zachary Macaulay, 1934.

175 Such are the mingled traditions of the Highland 701 regiments which served in so many wars, for right or for wrong. Of all the desperate alternatives before the Gael
[614] —famine at home, semi-slavery in the factory towns, death-stricken sea voyages, pioneering in the forested hills of Eastern North America, or war, it was this last which offered the men not only the trappings and glamour of clanship but continuing fellowship. In the regiment a Gael was among friends. Modern civilisation offered him no other life promising social continuity and the hope of a return to croft and township, "if death should spare him".

175 It would be wrong to suggest that only the gentry could 701 rise to command, for as English and literacy were acquired, 565 the sons of small tenants received commissions. British 554 military discipline has too often driven a breach between the men and the non-commissioned officers, spoiling the [103] latter's fitness for higher leadership. But among Highlanders "the bond of faith and affection" led naturally to commissioned rank. For generations, historic precedent [178] was carried on in living tradition.[1] Given education, the sons of Island crofters have risen to command on land and
• [871] sea; but education came late.

CONCLUSION

175 Thus in the 'little commonwealths' of the farm-hamlets 621 grouped within the township, personal right and equal 631 shares were balanced by common duty, summed up in the principle of duty-right or service. In one can only cite 577 examples. For instance, descendants of his neighbours in Strath Spey told 614 me that my paternal grandfather, as a penniless lad speaking Gaelic and English (in which he was literate), enlisted in the Black Watch about 1829. He was known as a N.C.O. for his power of quiet, reasoning discipline. He thrice refused the offer of a commission, which was then given to others, of whom more than one rose to high command in the battalion.

[1] The tradition of leadership calls for respect, but it

121 to the world within. Above all, harmony of relations, at 771 every stage of life, in man and woman, was felt to pre-181 figure relations with the Divine. The religious poetry of which the Gael were the creators and heirs, promoted courage and calm. True, its very power could lead to superstitious respect for mere forms of words, debased as 'magical' charms. Such misuse was 'superstitious', being false in itself and falling short of the clearest thought, the highest aspiration, of the time and the community. Worse still, use with evil intent could concentrate ill-will and evoke mutual fears. Yet at its best, thought was clearer, less confused, than is commonly imagined. To the aspiration and attainment of the Gael—in congregation or solitude, in meditation or labour, in love and faith or in works—the fragments of their oral heritage bear witness.

(c) LITERACY AND EVANGELISM: 'THE MEN' AND THE DISRUPTION

175 From before 1680 "a school for the gentlemen's sons 178 and daughters" was open in Stornoway. Latin and English were taught, and a century later even Greek had
• 871 been added, as recorded by W. J. Gibson, for many years Rector of Stornoway's high school, the Nicolson Institute, in his Education in Scotland, 1912 (chap. v). Particularly towards the end of the eighteenth century, the Gaelic School Society and other bodies, like the Society for the Propagation of Christian Knowledge, sent out schoolmasters to teach the reading of the Scriptures. Industrial schools were set up at the same time by Lady Seaforth, to teach spinning [671] by the wheel, replacing the slow distaff. It was not till nearly a century later that teaching of English was widely taken advantage of—partly by the compulsion of the 178 Education Act of 1872, for the people "did not want to give their children wings to leave them".

• 871 The reading of Gaelic progressed fairly rapidly after [671] 1800, in order that the Bible might be read. By 1833 something like one in three or four of the population, or more than half of the younger people, could read Gaelic. The Hon. Mrs. Stewart-Mackenzie of Seaforth, it seems, had a 'warm sympathy' both with teaching to read the 175 Scriptures and with evangelical preaching. The coming
114 to Lewis in 1824 of the first evangelical minister, the Rev.
793 Alexander MacLeod, an Assynt man, is described in his memoir in a striking volume, Disruption Worthies of the Highlands, edited by J. Greig (1877).

175 "At the distance of more than half a century it is not 771 easy to form a conception of the religious and moral
condition of Lewis previous to the year 1824. The present 793 writer has heard a still living minister of the Free Church, who is a native of Uig, declare publicly that only two or three copies of the Bible could be found within the wide extent of the parish, and that he himself travelled a journey in search of a copy of the blessed book, and all in vain. . . . The densest intellectual and spiritual darkness held universal sway. Notwithstanding the pleasing features that characterise Highlanders, even in their most primitive condition, this state of things could not fail to be attended with baleful fruits. Despite their constitutional warmth of heart and loyalty of nature, unbending fidelity to what they esteemed to be honour, and their unbounded kindness and hospitality, many gross vices were found commingling in the characters and lives of the Lewis people. For, however strange it may appear, at the first prayer-meeting

[1] Quotations to this effect, dating from the Old Statistical Account until 1883, are given in the Brand Report of 1902.

178 and savings were sent by emigrants who remained faithful 433 to parents and home.
167 If it be asked why most of the people kept to their Island home in spite of its poverty and earned so little 175 away from it, one answer must be that their native tongue formed a barrier encircling them as a community at home 178 and cutting them off from the rest of the nation. Seventy-197 five years ago the new Education Acts were not yet in full operation. Comparing the relative well-being in the [671] Shetlands with the extreme poverty in the Hebrides at that
• [871] time, a northern agriculturist wrote that in Scotland, only in the Hebrides "is the food obtained by the peasant
[511] occasionally so scanty" as to be unable "to maintain a [184] labouring man in vigorous health". Inquiring why there should be so great a difference between the Shetlanders 175 and the Hebrideans, living in similar, distant isles, he 178 wrote, "We think the answer may be given in one word—197 language. . . . The population of the Hebrides cling to their ancient Gaelic with consequences most disastrous to 182 themselves. . . . It handicaps them in the race for life . . . is a hindrance in the cities and a check to the emigration of both sexes to those world-wide regions where all who speak the English tongue find themselves at home."[1] He concurred with the Census Report of 1871, which stated: "The Gaelic language may be what it likes, both as to antiquity and beauty, but it decidedly stands in the way of the civilisation of the natives making use of it, and shuts them out from the paths open to their fellow-countrymen who speak the English tongue". The Report concludes: "It ought therefore to cease being taught in all our national schools. We are one people and we ought to have but one

[1] James Mollison, in the Highland and Agricultural Society's Report on the Present State of the Agriculture of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1878), pp. 136-38.

CONTINUED ON NEXT FICHE

Religion has done more to keep the Gaelic language 771
ive than any of the numerous outside agencies dedicated 191
the preservation of the language, such as An Comunn 186
idhealach, a national organization which sponsors a series 575 local, regional, and national programs in an attempt to intain and stimulate an interest in the Highlands and their ngs and stories. Except in Portree and at Dunvegan, church 191 rvices are mostly conducted in Gaelic. The newcomer who 774 shes to attend church services in the crofting areas, and had better, must either learn Gaelic or be content with e few words the minister may speak in English for his nefit if the minister is aware of the presence of someone o does not "have the Gaelic." Some might feel that this rude since most Skyemen are bi-lingual, but the crofter ens to think quicker in his own tongue. Many crofters' 871 ildren learn English only when they begin to attend school pick it up from an older sibling who is going to school.
mily worship is almost always in Gaelic, unless there is 782 visitor. We have already seen that the family worship the time of death is in Gaelic or in Gaelic and English.
nin we have a parallel with Wales, in that Welsh has been inly preserved through religion.[19]

Making Gaelic the language of their religion has, 191 wever, led to several problems. It has weakened township 771 idarity on occasion. There are many isolated townships 621 yond the reach of a minister. In one of these remote

[19] Ibid., p. 129

The growth of the population ended with a prolonged famine. 161
The proprietors, finding that the people's only justification 731 for crowding the estates and looking to their landlords for 429 help were some nebulous customary usages, facilitated the decline by disregarding custom and throwing as much land into sheep farming as was possible. While evictions were not new, 427 only after the famine did they result in an absolute reduction in numbers. The Sgiathanach, fettered by a lack of capital 182 and an inability to break with the past, could not make the final adjustment required by the process of commercialization, specialization. In addition to emigration, the Clearances 167 and general economic hardship forced a postponement of 582 marriage. There was neither land nor regular employment to 469 provide a livelihood.

Later in the nineteenth century new influences began 161
to play a role in the continuing decline of the population. 167
Following the passage of the Crofters' Act, the nature of 178 emigration changed. Seasonal migration became negligible. 427
The provisions of the Act, and ensuing legislation, made it 171 possible for a man to remain away during his active years and return to the parental croft to spend his old age. The ex- 871 tention of education not only equipped the youth for life in the larger society but also created demands for objectives which could not be attained at home under the existing order.
Thus, as in the period of population growth, the persistence of 161 many features of the old traditional culture, and the renewed 167 importance of others, were factors of no little consequence. 182

872

872 ELEMENTARY EDUCATION--tutorial education; primary schools (e.g., private, parochial, public); periods of instruction (e.g., terms, vacations, hours per day, days per week, weeks per year, years required for graduation); compulsory or voluntary attendance; objectives (e.g., universal literacy); curriculum (e.g., subjects and their progression); grading and advancement; educational aids (e.g., textbooks, stationery, blackboards); ceremonial (e.g., graduation); special institutions for very young children (e.g., nursery schools, kindergartens); etc. See also:

Books and writing materials	21	Ethical ideals	877
Religious beliefs	77	Circles	641
Traditional history	173	Arithmetic	803
Reading, writing, and spelling	319	Ethnogeography	623
School buildings	346	Informal transmission of social norms	867
Music	533	Teachers	876

288 the automatic shuttle; all other processes have been 198 built into the design of the Hattersley loom (cf.
402 Thomson 1969). In other words, weaving does not entail 288 very specialized skills and is not difficult to learn.
463 A sailor can come home and learn to weave in a short period of time, or pick up the trade again with ease
after having been absent from the loom for a long time.
571 Neighbors substitute for each other when someone is ill 573 if a tweed is "urgent." Wives help their husbands, and young boys their fathers and uncles. Such low-level specialization and substitutability are complementary to crofting activities and the maintenance of neighborhood ties, and may be seen to favor continuance of the occupation of weaving.

804 The Lews Castle College in Stornoway, established 286 as a technical college in 1953 in a building that was 467 formerly the home of Sir James Matheson, offers training courses in weaving for adults which last for ten weeks
and qualify a person for membership in the Weavers
Union (cf. Stornoway Gazette, March 16, 1968). The 872 college also sends weaving instructors to all the public schools on the island to instruct young boys in the 654 rudiments of weaving. The Highlands and Islands
286 Development Board have in the past offered loans and 288 grants with which to purchase looms, and government aid has protected the mills.

873

873 LIBERAL ARTS EDUCATION--existence, number, and variety of institutions on the secondary and college levels devoted to instruction in the liberal arts; special objectives (e.g., inculcation of aristocratic ideals, preparation for democratic leadership, refinement of personal tastes, preparation for rational choice of careers); sources of financial support; administration; scholarships; curricula; courses and terms; educational aids (e.g., libraries); grading and advancement; degrees; ceremonial (e.g., commencement); student organizations; extracurricular activities (e.g., sports, politics, debating); special institutions (e.g., finishing schools, adult education); etc. See also:

Fine arts	80	Esthetic ideals	817
Humanistic studies, philosophy, and science	81	Public lectures	844
Ideas about nature and man	85	Student uprisings	864
Cultural participation	186	Mathematics	868
Libraries	217

197 One of the 793 richest sources of Gaelic vocabulary now available is 779 the Gaelic Bible, but many villagers, especially the younger ones, complain that they are unable to understand
many of the Gaelic words used by the minister in his sermon.

197 Although provision for teaching Gaelic in the schools
871 was made in the Education Act of 1918, only within the last ten years have schools incorporated classes in which Gaelic is taught at both primary and secondary levels.
Gaelic is taught as a foreign language like French or Latin
rather than used as a medium of instruction, which would require a much larger vocabulary than most teachers possess.

815 The present schoolmaster in Shawbost differs from past
651 schoolmasters in that he addresses the children by their Gaelic names,[2] and devises projects intended to encourage
a sense of pride in "Celtic culture."

873 The Department of Celtic Studies at the University of 197 Glasgow, which includes in its staff a Lewis poet and 185 several Scottish Nationalists, is described as "progressive."
According to an islander who is a student in the Department,
"They believe that if Gaelic is to survive as a language,
it must be written as it is spoken. At school we were taught to write 'proper' Gaelic, Gaelic that's considered

[2] Persons who come from Gaelic-speaking areas are addressed and referred to by Gaelicized names, such as "Murchadh" rather than "Murdo," and usually these names take the form of patronymics, which may or may not include nicknames (for example, Iain Dhomhnuill Bhain, i.e., John the son of fair Donald).

873 old-fashioned if you were speaking it. I wrote like that 197 in my first few papers, and my professor stroked through 185 words and asked, 'Would you say that?' We can even put in an English word now and then."

197 One result of this restriction in the scope of 185 experience in which Gaelic is used, and of the treatment of Gaelic by government bodies and voluntary associations as a rare zoo animal that must be preserved rather than allowed to change, is a decline in written creative 197 expression in Gaelic. There are perhaps three major 536 writers of Gaelic plays in Scotland, whose major battle is to be considered serious writers rather than colorful freaks or queer saints out to redeem Gaelic culture. "Once you become self-conscious about the language you speak," says one writer, "the language is dead." It has then become an artificial showpiece, a museum relic instead of a living, changing, flexible human tool.
197 Outside the village the maintenance of the Gaelic language
186 and other customs identified with "Celtic culture" occurs [571] mainly as a result of interaction between "Gaels" and "Galls" (a Gaelic word meaning outsider or foreigner), as Gaelic speakers become self-conscious of their distinctiveness and either abandon their heritage (for example, MacIver 1968) or invest in it.

Chapter 7

Conclusions:

Summary and Theoretical Considerations

A. Summary

105 Crofting townships of the Highlands and Islands of 131 Scotland are within a few hours' travel of the major cities [484] of Britain. An extremely high percentage of the young [873] people in the crofting counties attend universities and other institutions of higher education. Politically, [641] administratively, economically and in other ways, the crofting population participates in the larger urban-industrial society of Britain.

105 Despite this participation, the township-qua-village-632 community is a relatively strongly bounded system. This 521 thesis investigates factors contributing to the strong [121] boundedness. From a relatively self-sufficient economic 105 unit using agricultural practices suited to the extensive
198 cultivation of marginal land by smallholders, the township 632 has during recent decades changed to one dependent on 241 goods and services provided by the larger society.

105 Crofting activities nevertheless persist, in part because 241 of the incentives offered by government bodies such as the 654 crofters Commission and the Department of Agriculture. The

*159 Aberdeen. All the children were encouraged to get as much education as they possibly could. "I worked so hard in domestic service," says Seonag, "I wanted my children never to have to do the same kind of work. Anna is starting her first summer job in a hotel in [873] England. She's just finished six years at the Nicolson [the secondary school in Stornoway, which is attended by all town children and by rural children who have scored well on examinations which they take at the age of 11 or 12]. She finds the work very hard, from 5:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. She said on the phone the other night she was glad she had a good education and wouldn't have to do this all her life." Anna is the youngest of the family. She wants to study French and German at a university in Aberdeen, which would involve spending a year on the European continent.

"I would rather live in a city," says Seonag. "I would pack up and leave the island tonight. But my husband would never leave. He's much too involved with the croft."

"Leave the island?" says Anna. "Of course. I've always had the idea that I was going away."

Mairi Inis Dubh

Mairi Inis Dubh is in her late 20's, and lives with her husband and baby son in a house built recently on the

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

824 useful crofting ancillary which, unlike many others, is soundly
381 based on a definite commercial demand. Various industries use the extracted acid for some 150 products. The Scottish alginate industry, the second largest in the world, is based on the process of E. C. Stanford, who discovered alginic acid in 1883, though today modern methods are used. For raw materials it has turned to the old kelping shores of the Hebrides and Northern Isles. On the island it has a factory at Keose on Loch Erisort, a site chosen for the easy access afforded to puffers; the factory receives the weed, dries, mills and bags it, and the boats then carry 200-ton loads to Girvan. The factory itself involved some £30,000 of [433] capital layout and has a capacity of 120 wet tons per week—4 wet tons producing 1 dry milled ton. About a dozen Harris and [137] Lewis crofters gather the seaweed crop, the most useful type being bladderwrack or rockweed (ascophyllum nodosum), from the shores at Loch Erisort, East Loch Roag and Bernera in Lewis, [493] Husinish and Scarp in Harris, and Loch Seaforth. Where there is road access the weed is cut by sickle and loaded into a lorry, but more often it is cut at low water to be floated with the incoming tide and rafted to Keose, hauled by motor boat.

241 A product of the land not readily associated with the Hebrides is bulbs. Bulb-growing deserves a mention, however, if only be-[803] cause the experiment to see whether it could become a commercial possibility in Lewis was carried out by the children of Lionel (Ness) Junior Secondary School. The MacAulay (Rhodesia) Trust made an investment of £150 to cover initial expenses, and success followed. When the original project was completed it was extended, sales bringing the school a useful sum. But an attack of disease brought production to a standstill in 1966.

312 Another small industry is the aerated-water plant at Ness, which is operating with reasonable success, and could do better if 228 imports of aerated waters from abroad were reduced. A number of recent surveys made in the island have found great interest in such activities as shell-fish processing in Harris to produce semi-286 preserves, using mostly cockles and mussels. Local knitting already has a name for its products and a potential for extension on a *[195] commercial scale; this latter began in late 1966. Some forty years ago knitting specialists went to Lewis to investigate the possibilities

A HARRIS VIGNETTE

621 has direct or indirect communication with Glasgow, Stornoway 63 and North Uist. In summer a thrice-daily bus runs to Stornoway, [505] and once a day a bus makes the round trip of East and West [494] Harris. The township, linear in pattern, east to west, includes six-[361] teen shops which cater for most of the needs of the population
[364] within reasonable travelling distance; it also has two cafés, a [368] post office, a licensed hotel, a hall for social functions, a masonic hall and two churches. The Sir E. Scott School here is [873] the only secondary school in Harris with an academic stream. Most of the working population is employed in the service industries, the professions and the tweed industry. Tarbert was a [504] fishing port of some significance in the past, and is now a refuelling point for ships.

464 The absence of organised industry on a large scale, such as [167] Lewis has, is a factor which tends to bring nearer to reality any desire on the part of Harris natives to leave their native soil. There are small pockets of industry, but these are only dabs of easing 463 ointment on the excessive unemployment sore of 27 per cent. The [241] main occupation is of course crofting, the income from it being [434] augmented from a variety of sources. Some crofters concentrate on the production of Harris Tweed, perhaps using the wool from [286] their own sheep; the natural dyes from the lichens which grow
[386] on the rocks and from other plants are still used occasionally. Others specialise in knitwear. Recently shell-craft and wood-turning have been added to the traditional crafts, with a view to the [226] tourist market. Fishing, of course, plays a part in the economy in some communities. The interest of such organisations as the Scottish Country Industries Development Trust has been concentrated on the potential in shell-fish processing, and the production of knitwear on a larger scale than exists at present. Road-[464] work gives employment to about thirty men, but is of course seasonal.

316 An apparently bright light on the employment horizon showed itself in 1965, with the opening of a quarry at Lingerbay. The mineral quarried was anorthosite, a white granite used as an abrasive in cleaning products. A 99-year lease was taken out by a subsidiary company of William Robertson (Shipowners) Limited, Glasgow. But the quarry was closed in 1967 due to lack of orders.

ONTINUED
FROM PRECEDING
FICHE

175 language." Many Islanders wou
178 ment that Gaelic was a barrie
It was not only Lowland schoolm
197 but an educated, sensible class o 182 used the strap on the palms of their good" because they could
(511) An active Lewis country schoolma
175 rural knowledge and experience, s
197 I have suffered through life fro
Gaelic. If I had my way, I wou
• 871 every child I heard speaking Ga
Had the Island School Boards
sistently taught with English, the 114 One may not only disagree s 197 the strap—but hold that enlight both worth while culturally a 871 intelligence without interfering three Rs, and of secondary and 153 Lewis recent non-verbal tests in a mean intelligence quotient dep 153 The conclusion seems to be that 197 the Gaelic school child is still at to other school children. But e 182 child's development would seem 121 his response to his rural enviro

For this the school tests and th
fully provide; nor do the tests
Islander suddenly finds himse
175 factory or abroad in city streets
197 is the economic drawback of a la

182 [1] Christina A. Smith, M.A., B.Ed., M in Gaelic and English. (Scot. Council o (113) (London, 1948); J. L. Campbell, Gaelic 1948).

uld agree with the stater to economic progress.
asters, ignorant of Gaelic
of men in their day, who the little children " for not understand English.
ster, who had considerable said to me: " I know what om being brought up on uld punish [with the strap]
elic in the playground! " wished Gaelic to be coney could have prevailed.
trongly with the means—ened bilingual teaching is nd also of assistance to with use in English of the higher education. Yet in English and Gaelic show
ressed by about 15 points.[1]
under the present system
a disadvantage compared ven more important to the n to be the expression of nment in his own tongue.
e educational code do not of life when the adolescent lf at work in a Glasgow
. What concerns us here
ck of ready English among

ental Testing of Hebridean Children Research in Education, vol. xxvii in Scotland (and ed.) (Edinburgh,

APPENDIX III

623 for planning preceded by adequate survey became publicly 633 recognised, this crisis seems to have caused a change to con-
433 structive policy on the part of the Trust. It led to the election 361 of a new member of the Trust on a planning platform, and to a general searching of heart and mind in the community.

(184) Meantime the movement for town planning which had spread from the bombed cities to the rest of the country, led to a closer co-ordination of planning aims between the Trust and the Town Council, and there is real hope of progress in collaboration with the County Council as the statutory planning authority.

In brief, the opportunity arose for the Trust to frame a comprehensive policy, one binding together the objects separately listed in the Deed, " to promote the material and social welfare of the community ". The ' material ' provisions of the Deed allow for the promotion of industry—including fishing, of course—of agriculture and afforestation, and of communications by land, sea and air. Medical service is not forgotten. The encouragement of social life and education is foreseen, and bursaries may be provided to enable deserving scholars to proceed to secondary schools and universities.

185 It is felt by far-sighted citizens that these aims should be properly co-ordinated. Development of resources and social life, they feel, could be combined with education and training deliberately designed to equip young people to return to the Island and use their capacities to serve their own community.
(311) Thus among the development schemes which have been mooted are the reclamation of peat, the reclamation of the sandy inlet just north of Stornoway, and local afforestation.
(871) All these technical jobs require training, at the levels of engineer and skilled foreman or working hand. Bursaries might take
(168) the form of education for such rural tasks. The ' export ' of talent may be necessary when no outlet is possible at home, but in the end it can drain away the community's youth. Hence a policy for the return of talent is required. For fishing, for industry and particularly for the weaving arts, training is required in preparation for possible careers at home. Lastly

[Kershader]

(b) From New Year to mid-April most sheep are kept on the common grazing. Practices, however, are irregular; some flocks are usually hand fed, others only rarely. In the former case they heft near the upper limit of their home croft and remain fairly close at hand. Most crofters hand-feed their lambs, probably housing them at night, allowing them hay in the morning and turning them on to the common grazing in the evening. All this naturally depends on weather conditions.

(c) From mid-April to May, lambing takes place on home parks.

Most crofters let their ewes-with-lamb out at one date.

(d) At the end of June, gimmers and wedders are clipped.

(e) In mid-July the ewes are clipped.

(f) The lambs are weaned in the first and second weeks of August.

(g) The dipping takes place in October and the rams are brought on the crofts.

There is no general sale time, sheep being sold or slaughtered at all seasons. There is no club stock, but all but one of the Kershader crofters, along with crofters from neighbouring townships, take full advantage of the arrangement, first established in 1941, to graze sheep at 2/- per sheep and 1/- per lamb in Park Deer Forest. Hence irregularities of rhythm are introduced or exaggerated.

Sheep are not particularly profitable: in general, wedder fleeces give 3½ to 4 lb, ewe fleeces about 3 lb, and the wool is sold to the Stornoway mills and to the Wool Marketing Board. Average sheep carcase weight is reckoned to be 41 lb. and the price rarely rises above £3 and almost never above £4. Braxy and fluke are kept under by medicaments but remain potential dangers; 'Black leg' is still a serious problem. Many sheep are drowned in the bogs in Spring and late snows (1955, 1958) are disastrous for lambing.

Under-employment is a serious problem in Kershader. There are nine males classified as full-time crofters, but probably only four of these (two on one croft) are in fact in this category, and of the total of thirty males with their homes in Kershader, only fifteen of the insurable population are permanently resident. There are twenty-eight females with their homes in this township, but on only six crofts do any of twenty permanently resident females help with croft work. Local ancillary employment consists of weaving, fishing (for domestic consumption only) and work on the roads. Boats, one with outboard motor, are owned by three crofts. The only resident professional worker is a nurse. Ancillary employment must be, and is, sought away from the township. As a result, of the 73 persons recorded as having migrated since 1939 or as being resident, periodically away and permanently away in 1958, 19 have left the area for good, 4 are permanently away, 8 periodically away, and only 43 are resident. Only one person has entered the township since 1939. The age structure of the population, too, is far from the optimum. The school in Kershader, which had 20 pupils in 1873, reached a peak of 110 in 1907 and declined to 28 pupils in 1953, now has but 17, although it serves Caversta, Garyvard, Kershader and Habost. Maximum population was attained in 1881, but the total remained fairly constant till 1911, after which decline was marked. Since 1950 this decline has markedly increased.

It will thus be seen that the most serious problem facing Kershader is that of stabilizing the population and giving it a stronger economic basis. Apart from the potential development of tourism, fishing, weaving and other home industries, the only possible occupation is in agriculture with perhaps a little forestry. Forestry, though important as shelter provision, cannot be a practical proposition in large blocks or on a large scale, as it would dislocate the

[Marivig]

There are only fifteen cows, two yearlings and four calves in the township, and the crofters with no cow rely on neighbours, or on tins, for their milk supply. All but two of the crofters keep sheep, there being four hundred and eleven ewes, one hundred and eighty-five sheep and two hundred and thirty-four lambs belonging to the township. The common grazing (including the off-shore islands which are grazed by five different crofters each year) is used for the sheep in summer, while all but one of the crofters winter their sheep within the township dyke on the crofts. Most crofters keep hens, and surplus eggs are sold to the Stornoway vans.

Peats cut on the common are transported by lorry to the crofts, while peats from the north end of the peninsula separating Loch Marivig from the sea must be carried in creels.

Nearly every crofter owns a rowing dinghy which is moored in the loch off the end of his croft, and with this supplements the family food supply. One herring boat, operating nightly from Stornoway and returning to Marivig at weekends, is all that is left of a fairly large fleet which operated before the war. A second boat, unused for two years, lies shored up on the beach, and two others are wrecks. Over fifty years ago there was a curing station at Marivig. One crofter fishes lobsters during the winter and markets them in London.

Of the other crofters, only two supplement their incomes by weaving, one by working on the roads while several men work partly on the crofts but are periodically away whaling in South Georgia, fishing, or on hydro-electric schemes. Several others are in the Merchant Navy. The gradual migration from Marivig, especially of the young people, is reflected in the high average age of the permanent residents, and in the numbers in the school - over one hundred pupils in 1900, thirty-nine (including sixteen from Calbost) in 1946; but only nine (none from Calbost) in 1958. The young people leave the township to train or work on the mainland (generally in Glasgow) or in Stornoway, while their elders accept the view that "there is nothing for the young people here".

The township has a Post Office and telephone kiosk which also serve Calbost, while lack of a shop is partially compensated by a choice of four vans from Stornoway and one from Gravir. There is a daily bus from Gravir via Marivig to Stornoway and back: the return is over 10/-. The road which reached the township from the west in the late 1920's has a tarred surface and is much better than the later road southwards to Gravir which is untarred. There is no church in Marivig and most of the population attend the Free Church in Gravir.

Within the township the two arms of the township road serve all but two of the crofts and the sites of the newer houses, few of them more than thirty years old, tend to be near the road, while the ruined houses found on most crofts are often nearer the sea. Only two thatched houses remain and the other inhabited houses are built of stone roofed with asbestos slate, or of corrugated iron. All the crofts are supplied with electricity from the grid, but very few have a piped water supply: rainwater is collected from the roofs and piped for washing, with a separate piped supply from a well for drinking. All other houses draw water from wells.

The stormy winter weather, rocky terrain and poor soil are all blamed by the residents for the drift of population away from the crofts, but those who remain have little incentive to work the crofts more efficiently owing to the very hard labour involved. It is suggested that with more intensive cropping and more cattle, each croft could make a comfortable profit and surplus milk, potatoes and eggs could be marketed in Stornoway - the milk replacing that at present brought from the mainland. Such development, perhaps on a co-operative basis, together with a revival of the fishing industry and introduction of a tourist industry, by building a small hotel or guest house and attracting anglers as well as those who simply wanted scenic beauty, might bring prosperity back to a township which otherwise may well be derelict in the next twenty years. But the capital required for the two latter enterprises is not available within the township.

include all small tenants in Scotland. The landlords have lost their right to evict a crofter for breach of conditions. Since 1911 only the Land Court, which replaced the Crofters Commission, can remove a tenant who is guilty of bad husbandry. Moreover, such action can only be taken after the general circumstances of the crofter and his need of the croft for a home have been considered. To date, no Highland crofter has been removed. In fact, security of tenure has been carried to the extreme that the individual no longer has to reside in Scotland much less on his croft. Although this change is now regarded as inadvertent, the courts have ruled in favor of the small tenant. The only remaining functions of the landlord in estate management are to collect his rents and pay compensation should a tenant desire to leave. Both the rents and the compensation are determined by the Land Court.

Accompanying the integration of the Island with the national scene, politically and economically, were extensions of social services. Prior to 1872 education was the responsibility of the church, charitable agencies, and, especially in the Highlands, the local proprietors and their financially secure tenantry.[83] Although the parish school system was national, the administration of each parochial school was local. The ideal of a school in each parish was neither adequate nor easily obtainable. The result was a few regularly taught schools.[84]

[83] OSA, XVI, 156-157, 226, 539; XVIII, 188; XXI, 430.

[84] James MacDonald, op. cit., pp. 771-774.

The substantial tenants had their own private tutors, but the people, in general, received only informal schooling until well into the nineteenth century when several charitable societies entered the field.[85] All schools were essentially religious. The act of 1872, and subsequent legislation, changed the program and made education compulsory for all. It was not until the end of the century that adequate facilities were available and the system began to function, with the beginning of free education.[86]

Informal control within the community was augmented by the establishment of a rural police force, with headquarters in Portree and local stations at convenient points around the Island. Health and welfare became a responsibility of the state. A regional medical plan provided doctor's care and hospital facilities for all regardless of means. Old age pensions were granted to the elderly. Later, the scope of assistance for the infirm, aged, and the poor, and the unemployed was increased. Thus, the government continually usurped many of the functions of the family and the local group, especially following the abolition of the parish council in 1929.[87] Although the parish councils, or the still older parochial boards, had no legislative powers, they did handle welfare and, until 1918, education. Now, in 1929, a Skye

[85] NSA, pp. 233, 281, 294, 298, 312, 321, 355.

[86] Napier Report, p. 70; and Norman MacLean, Set Free, p. 211.

[87] C. De B. Murray, How Scotland Is Governed (Glasgow: Art and Educational Publishers, 1947), pp. 118-136; 195-196.

867 A girl also makes an early pretense at assuming her role.
462 While a boy is never seen helping within the house, and, therefore, his duties begin later, a small girl soon begins to help make beds and do the cleaning. If she is an only child, or has been left behind by her brothers who have left the Island, she is expected to take their place on the croft. In any event, she will be taught how to milk, how to plant a garden, and how to help in all other tasks of crofting, except cutting [567] corn and shearing. She learns at a very early age and in diverse ways that the primary role of a woman is to serve the needs of man, some man, throughout her life, unless she is strong enough to live alone.

Learning the virtues valued by their parents and the community, as well as the tasks essential to crofting, both boys and girls are indoctrinated with the ethos of the Islander long before they can understand the importance of their object lessons. They are separated by more than the division of labor of their parents. As we shall see, the almost unaltered status values of the culture relegate males and females to two different, but complimentary, spheres of activity.

871 As they progress in school, conflicts begin to develop.
155 In one way this is inevitable. Until 1953 there was no attempt to teach the children anything that would directly relate to the life expected of them on Skye. In particular there were no agricultural subjects. Even now, there is but one travelling teacher of agriculture to serve the entire

871 island. Being taught about the larger world beyond, most 155 children begin to show exasperation with the croft and the 157 duties it imposes. At first they become reluctant to do their 155 chores after school hours or on holidays, or unable to escape the strong authority of their fathers, they do the work grudgingly. This is especially true of those who are planning to go to a university. While many boys take an interest in the stock and like to plough, if there is a tractor, they frequently complain about the slow pace, the boredom of the long winters, the restrictions on their time, and the weather--above all, the weather. Girls are no less outspoken. In particular, the girl who has been left behind by her older brothers and sisters to care for the parents will feel that such a life leaves much to be desired. She learns of another, entirely different life in school, and she hears her siblings tell of this new life when they return for a visit. Naturally, she begins to think digging potatoes is beneath her dignity. The most frequently heard complaint is, "You can't dress out here." The underlying conflict for both boys and girls in their teens seems to be one between a desire for adventure or opportunities for individual choice and the routine, circumspect behavior expected of them.

593 Added to this desire is the realization that they may 882 not really be needed at home. The small crofter with a piece of land hardly larger than a German laborer's garden can handle all the necessary chores by himself or, at periods of peak activity, with the cooperation of his wife and his neighbors. A medium sized croft may provide work for one, two, or even

We have already seen where some of the crofters sons 167 and daughters have gone - all over the world. It may be of interest to indicate the fields which are attracting the present generation. In Scotland children graduate from school at [871] fifteen or, if they have qualified for the university training course, at eighteen. Let us see what happens to those who leave school at fifteen. A reasonable number of the boys go [875] back to the croft, but the school teachers usually try to guide the best students into other fields. Since there is a very 167 limited choice of skilled or semi-skilled jobs on the island, 464 this means they will go to a city in southern Scotland and find an apprenticeship, either on their own initiative or under the Ministry of Labor training program. The favorite trades are mechanics, electricians, and carpenters. A few go to sea, especially as stewards and wireless operators. Every now and then a boy will become a male nurse, a police cadet, or an office worker. Hotel service, laboring, and especially, truck driving, at home or away, attracts many. Girls leaving school at fifteen often go back to the croft for a year or two and then move away. The best girl students either go into office work or take advantage of the Ministry of Labor apprenticeship program, especially in dressmaking, hairdressing, and domestic science. Some go to pre-nursing schools. Others find employment in stores or hotels on Skye or in Lowland Scotland.

At eighteen it is very difficult to keep a boy at home. 167
Those who have remained and have not taken a university course 702

875

875 TEACHERS--number of general and specialized teachers; degree of training and proficiency; social status of teachers (e.g., prerogatives, disabilities); mode of selection; fees and salaries; tenure and advancement; degree of academic freedom; organization (e.g., associations, unions); extracurricular activities (e.g., research, community activities); etc. See also:
Government pensions . . . . . 667 Normal schools 874

288 finished lengths of tweed. For a tweed to be classified
463 as "Harris Tweed," it must be hand-woven by Outer [424] Hebrideans in their own homes, but the weavers are 288 essentially employees of the mill. All the large Harris Tweed mills in Lewis, except the one in Shawbost, are located in Stornoway. A few smaller businesses, which design and market tweeds but have no elaborate machinery to process the tweed further, are scattered throughout the island.

621 The village of Shawbost is composed of 169 households,
162 of which 110 are headed by "crofters," persons recognized
[429] as legal tenants of a croft. Of the remaining 59
[361] households, 16 rent houses which were built and are maintained by the County (called "council houses"), 11 have erected houses on the crofts of relatives, and 463 32 have built homes on the common grazing lands. Non-241 crofters participate in the agricultural activities of the township. It would not be unusual, for example, for a non-crofter to serve as the clerk of a grazings committee.

342 In North Shawbost, one croft house and two non-[172] croft houses are used only when the owner returns to Shawbost from the mainland for a holiday. The school-
• [875] master lives in a house adjoining the school, and the [193] minister in a manse located between Shawbost and the neighboring village of Bragar.

197 One of the
793 richest sources of Gaelic vocabulary now available is 779 the Gaelic Bible, but many villagers, especially the younger ones, complain that they are unable to understand many of the Gaelic words used by the minister in his sermons.

197 Although provision for teaching Gaelic in the schools
871 was made in the Education Act of 1918, only within the last ten years have schools incorporated classes in which Gaelic is taught at both primary and secondary levels. Gaelic is taught as a foreign language like French or Latin, rather than used as a medium of instruction, which would require a much larger vocabulary than most teachers possess.

• [875] The present schoolmaster in Shawbost differs from past
[551] schoolmasters in that he addresses the children by their Gaelic names,[2] and devises projects intended to encourage a sense of pride in "Celtic culture."

873 The Department of Celtic Studies at the University of 197 Glasgow, which includes in its staff a Lewis poet and 185 several Scottish Nationalists, is described as "progressive." According to an islander who is a student in the Department, "They believe that if Gaelic is to survive as a language, it must be written as it is spoken. At school we were taught to write 'proper' Gaelic, Gaelic that's considered

[2] Persons who come from Gaelic-speaking areas are addressed and referred to by Gaelicized names, such as "Murchadh" rather than "Murdo," and usually these names take the form of patronymics, which may or may not include nicknames (for example, Iain Dhomhnuill Bhain, i.e., John the son of fair Donald).

871 Education in the local school has included a great
• 875 deal of religious instruction; in other words, religious
771 and educational spheres commingle. Because of the [466] relative prestige which the teaching profession offers to persons from the island, and because the islands are considered "isolated" by most persons looking for jobs (teaching posts on the island include an added sum which is designated as "isolation payment"), most of the island's teachers are themselves islanders. Education [554] is one method by which one's position in the community is elevated. The high status derived from having advanced education also reflects favorably on the parents and position of the family. But teachers and others who return to the island are expected not to deviate from island norms in important matters, such as fundamentalist religious beliefs; hence teachers tend to perpetuate fundamentalist religious beliefs within the classroom.

871 Formerly the minister visited the school once each 771 year to examine the children on their catechism, thus
773 testing the state of religious instruction in the school.
178 Several years ago this practice was stopped by the education authorities of the County Council, and the minister now gives a sermon in the school about once a month but is not allowed to examine the children. Many ministers are dissatisfied with the arrangement, as they are afraid that

*175 mainder of Scotland where, under the school boards, education 871 became both free and compulsory.
656 In Lewis the school of real significance to the island was, and *175 still it, the Nicolson Institute, founded by Alexander Morison
871 Nicolson and opened in February 1873, supported by bequests
159 from him and his brothers. Nicolson's grandfather was the founder of the Lewis fish-curing trade, and was also shipowner and farmer. Alexander was the fifth of six sons and was educated in Stornoway parish school and in Glasgow High School. He served an apprenticeship as an engineer with Thomson of Clydebank. Later he entered the service of the Chinese Government and established himself with a partner of a shipbuilding and foundry business in Shanghai. In 1865, in his thirty-third year, he was killed in a boiler explosion in one of his new ships going a trial run. His ideal of establishing a school in Stornoway was subscribed to by his brothers who were a widespread family: Yorkshire, Mississippi, Western Australia, Tighnabruaich (Scotland) and South Africa.

*175 The first headmaster of the school received £82 per annum, 871 plus the school fees, which ranged from 2s 6d per quarter in the
• [875] lowest classes to 5s in the highest. The fees covered reading, writ-[465] ing, arithmetic, geography, English, history and English grammar and composition; when Latin, Greek, French and mathematics were taught, an additional shilling was charged for each subject. But the teacher was always bound to teach gratuitously twenty pupils selected by the Nicolson Trustees. In 1888, the school was handed over to the school board. In 1901, by a Decree of the Court of Session, its name, previously the Nicolson Public School, was changed to the Nicolson Institute. In 1898, the first boys went straight from the Institute to university, a trend that has not ceased since (see Chapter 8).

*175 As far back as the turn of this century a recommendation was 874 made for the provision of technical education on the island. A 871 report on the subject of Higher Education in Lewis (1900) stated: 'Regarding the practical or scientific aspect of education . . . there is a clamant need of a central Technical School in Lewis . . . the local resources are quite inadequate for the establishment of such a school, or its maintenance, on an effective basis. Such popular technical instruction as Household Economy, Wood and Iron change in the use of the grazing land or a desire of the young 561 men to fence the crofts in an effort to improve the individual 888 676 crofts the old men must have their say. Through their position in the churches, the old men also are the paramount source of social control, preserving their traditional habits and statuses, including a severe limitation on all social activity of a frivolous nature. This religiously sanctioned control is strengthened by the inability of the youth to form a solidarity. Indeed, one of the most serious limitations of the society of Skye is the small number of young men and women, boys and girls and the few opportunities which they have to come together as a group. The functions of the old men's age grade are identical with those described for the Irish small farmer.[21] Another 794 social circle is composed of the affiliates of the same religious [474] sect. They are mainly a mutual aid group.

Although the status equality noted in the township for 554 all of the same sex and age carries over to the larger community, there are always a few people who have an achieved status. The [793] minister enjoys high social prestige as the spiritual guardian of the people. The doctor is valued for his role in caring for [759] the people's physical well-being. The school teacher is re- [875] ● spected because he educates the youth and often acts as a spokeman for the group. If there is a member of the landed gentry, [545] he will be accorded the highest status in the area. It is [555] interesting to note that the achieved status positions are most often filled by newcomers to the island. The shopkeepers and

[21] Arensberg, op. cit., pp. 125-139.

We have already seen where some of the crofters sons 167 and daughters have gone - all over the world. It may be of interest to indicate the fields which are attracting the present generation. In Scotland children graduate from school at [871] fifteen or, if they have qualified for the university training course, at eighteen. Let us see what happens to those who leave school at fifteen. A reasonable number of the boys go [875] ● back to the croft, but the school teachers usually try to guide the best students into other fields. Since there is a very 167 limited choice of skilled or semi-skilled jobs on the island, 464 this means they will go to a city in southern Scotland and find an apprenticeship, either on their own initiative or under the Ministry of Labor training program. The favorite trades are mechanics, electricians, and carpenters. A few go to sea, especially as stewards and wireless operators. Every now and then a boy will become a male nurse, a police cadet, or an office worker. Hotel service, laboring, and especially, truck driving, at home or away, attracts many. Girls leaving school at fifteen often go back to the croft for a year or two and then move away. The best girl students either go into office work or take advantage of the Ministry of Labor apprenticeship program, especially in dressmaking, hairdressing, and domestic science. Some go to pre-nursing schools. Others find employment in stores or hotels on Skye or in Lowland Scotland.

At eighteen it is very difficult to keep a boy at home. 167 Those who have remained and have not taken a university course 762

a former school teacher. The present sponsor and chairman 573 is his successor. The teacher is automatically rated socially 875 ● because of his important function, educating the children of a 554 people who value education, and his university background. Further, he is from the Outer Isles and, therefore, is not expected to conform to all the traditional norms. Were he a Sgiathanach he probably would not accept the office for it would conflict with older and far deeper values.

The Glendale club farm is administered by a committee 573 of five, a secretary, and a chairman. Here all are crofters 241 554 from the several townships. All, therefore, are equals. Who, 794 then, might they have for a chairman? They have selected an elder of the church. A church elder is the highest lay official in church government and, on Skye, one of the oldest men in the neighborhood. As one man asked, "If you can't respect an elder, who can you respect?"

Selecting members for the committee and electing a secretary 573 is a real problem. Each man serves for three years. How the 241 original committee was formed I do not know, but I had an 554 opportunity to see how vacancies are filled. In 1953 there were three vacant posts. Parliamentary procedure has been introduced, but it finds limited expression. For two of the seats, the retiring members were "re-elected;" a crofter nominated them and after a long pause another man seconded the nomination. No vote is taken; silence means unanimous consent. A story slightly off the point illustrates this. At the same meeting the committee's stock report was read. Following parliamentary procedure, it

793 while only the Church of Scotland ministers will assume roles 554 in government, on the district council or the county council, on the education committee, and similar bodies, they have not been given higher status than the ministers of other denominations, who firmly believe the function of the minister is only to correct the public servants when they err.

759 The doctor is coming to fill a status held by no other 554 person, except the county people, the landed gentry. Tra- 793 ditionally, they have ranked second only to the minister, but there is a marked trend to accord them more and more status. The doctors, of course, are less restricted in their social activities and can participate more fully in secular affairs than the ministers. They have a wider range of interaction, entering the homes of all regardless of sectarian differences. In Glendale there is no question about the relative positions of the minister and doctor, who lives in Dunvegan. In Kilmuir on the other hand, the doctor is vying with the ministers. He is always addressed by his title, but often, at least in indirect speech, he is Doctor (Ian) rather than Doctor MacLeod. Many of the doctors on Skye have begun to form a cleavage between their families and the crofters. They are sending their sons to private schools. The ministers' children attend the local schools.

875 ● The school teachers also enjoy high prestige status. 554 They are always addressed by their surname, prefixed by 576 mister, even by older men whom they call by their Christian names. One newcomer was especially struck by this careful distinction. During the war when Skye had its own little 87 army, he came to know many of the old crofters quite well. 554 Finally, he came to use personal names when speaking to them 57 and asked to be called by his first name. The people explain that they might be older than he, but he was too important to be spoken to as anything other than mister.

The tradesmen and the shopkeepers in Glendale and 554 Kilmuir are not any different from any other man. They are not specialists. They are part-time crofters. We have to turn to Portree to see what status position they fill in the society of Skye. I might just add that they are on a first name basis with their neighbors, and, like the crofters, they are known beyond the neighborhood by their first name and township, such as Ian Borve or Murdo Stein.

To summarize, there is additional evidence for cultural continuity in the structure of the neighborhood. The extended family, although very unstable and, therefore, somewhat amorphous, is still a reality in the minds of the people. It still has two functions which it must have had in the remote past: seeing that all are cared for and given a decent burial. The description of status noted for the township carries over to the neighborhood, as does the underlying status equality and need for unanimous consent. Among the crofters leadership is still undeveloped. The old men can enforce conformity but they cannot lead. Although prestige ranking is developed, in the form of the achieved statuses of ministers, doctors, and teachers, it is significant that, except for the minister in Glendale, all holders of prestige status are l be called into National Service. It has become very d to obtain a deferment. One reason is that the govern-t believes too many have been dodging their obligation.

re was a man, for example, who applied for a deferment
his son on the ground that he was needed on the croft.
inarily the boy might have been deferred, but not when the icer found his father was collecting unemployment compen-ion. The most popular field for girls at eighteen is sing. One family has sent three girls through nursing
ool. Another popular profession, for both boys and girls, teaching. The boys who go to university take their degrees pure science, medicine, and agriculture.

There is an interesting contrast here between the Highlands the rest of Great Britain, especially England. In England working men consider sending their children on to college.
Skye, the majority of those who go to the university from local schools are from poor homes. The landed gentry send ir children to preparatory schools in England, and most of doctors send their sons to private schools. Somehow the s and girls from the crofts scrape through. An additional t I might mention is that despite the government's interest maintaining the Highland population because, among other sons, it is a reservoir for the armed forces, very few boys even fewer girls voluntarily select a military career.
eed, few men have seen service with the Army or Navy. The viously mentioned sample of the marital status of males also ealed that only 57 of the 270 men have seen active service units other than the Territorial Army or Home Guard. This 874

874 VOCATIONAL EDUCATION--institutionalized vocational apprenticeship (e.g., skills thus taught, terms and conditions of apprenticeship); number and variety of educational institutions specialized for vocational training; general types (e.g., trade schools, correspondence schools, professional schools); special types (e.g., barber schools, secretarial schools, radio schools, police schools, social work schools, business schools, journalism schools, agricultural schools, military schools, art schools, normal schools, engineering schools, divinity schools, law schools, medical schools, graduate schools); sources of support; administration; courses and curricula; degrees; facilities; etc.

See also:

Occupational specialization	463	Physicians	759
On-the-job training	466	Priesthood	793
Craft guilds	467	Applied science	816
Lawyers	693	Informal transmission of skills	868

288 the automatic shuttle; all other processes have bee
178 built into the design of the Hattersley loom (cf.
402 Thomson 1969). In other words, weaving does not ent 288 very specialized skills and is not difficult to lear 463 A sailor can come home and learn to weave in a short period of time, or pick up the trade again with ease
after having been absent from the loom for a long ti [571] Neighbors substitute for each other when someone is [593] if a tweed is "urgent." Wives help their husbands, young boys their fathers and uncles. Such low-level specialization and substitutability are complementar
to crofting activities and the maintenance of neight hood ties, and may be seen to favor continuance of t
occupation of weaving.

874 The Lews Castle College in Stornoway, establish 286 as a technical college in 1953 in a building that wa [467] formerly the home of Sir James Matheson, offers trai courses in weaving for adults which last for ten wee
and qualify a person for membership in the Weavers
Union (cf. Stornoway Gazette, March 16, 1968). The [872] college also sends weaving instructors to all the pu
schools on the island to instruct young boys in the 654 rudiments of weaving. The Highlands and Islands
286 Development Board have in the past offered loans and 288 grants with which to purchase looms, and government
has protected the mills.

175 827 463 [205] Whatever the rationalization, cobbler fathers begot cobbler sons. The present postmaster's grandfather was the first postmaster in Shawbost, and when help is needed in delivering the mail it is the postmaster's first [767] cousins who are likely to help out. As late as the 1950's, the township still had its own undertaker, a man who had learned from his father the art of laying out and dressing the body but who didn't like the job very much and was happy enough to turn it over to an undertaker who traveled from Stornoway.

463 [232] The island has had a veterinarian, based in Stornoway, for the past 30 years or so. Earlier, certain blacksmiths and farmers treated ailing livestock when the crofters [278] [755] needed them. For human ailments, there were many cures by plant and spell.

463 326 The man who was the last village blacksmith died not long ago. His smithy was in the center of the village. [342] His home and smithy were mortared stone buildings with corrugated iron roofs that were once estate houses for the men who worked the experimental farm established by Sir James Matheson in what is now New Shawbost. The blacksmith was also a shopkeeper and butcher. As a 463 326 874 blacksmith, his work was principally shoeing horses and making harrows and peat-cutters, which he did with the aid of one and sometimes two apprentices. One of his

463 326 874 [204] [521] One of his apprentices was his sister's son, who built another smithy not far away. "This was the center of gossip. People gathered there while he shoed horses that came from Barvas to Carloway."

444 178 A number of shops were established in Shawbost that sold clothing, cooking ware and groceries. At [494] one time they numbered six altogether. These shops also ran the first buses between the village and [477] [443] Stornoway. Gradually these businesses disappeared because of competition with larger companies. Mobile grocery vans and butcher shops and bakers began coming in the late 50's, and gradually took over the trade in large parts of the island, undercutting the local busi- 178 434 571 621 nesses. Income from weaving had already weakened self-sufficiency derived from the intensive use of land and sea and also weakened the formerly heavy reliance on local ties and mutual aid. Today an army of town- 44 463 178 [472] [484] dwelling entrepreneurs and employees constitute a major proportion of the traffic on the island roads. Grocers, fish dealers, bakers, sellers of soft drinks, garbage collectors, insurance salesmen, mobile banks, coal dealers and others extend goods and services from centralized sources to a market which has money to pay for them. The island's participation in this extensive market system is affected by its marginality to the

EDUCATION

Work, and Practical Navigation and Seamanship would be leading features.'

For many years afterwards technical education was available only on a voluntary evening-class basis. For instance, in September 1920 the Lewis School Management Committee offered evening classes in motor driving and maintenance, mathematics, dynamics, English, arithmetic and handwork in wood and metal. They were well supported and classes continued at sporadic intervals from that time. The plans for the present Lews Castle Technical College were passed in May 1948, after a lot of argument. Today the college has proved its worth; it is a centre of technical education in navigation and seamanship, weaving and textiles, building, engineering, and other pursuits important to the people of the Outer Isles.

In 1973 the Nicolson Institute received the Freedom of the Burgh of Stornoway, in recognition of the school's centenary which fell in that year. The event strengthened the 'town and gown' relationship which has always existed between the Burgh and the School, even more so today when the pupils participate in much of the social and cultural activity in the town.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

the nature of stopgaps in the younger, formative years and do not offer progressive training for the eventual chosen career. As an example of this, a number of island girls come to Stornoway to work in local shops and then leave the island after two years or so to take up hotel work or nursing on the mainland; many boys leave the island for apprenticeship training in trades which now require evening-class, day- or block-release educational classes. About fifty young persons leave the island each year under the Training Allowances Scheme of the Youth Employment Service, which financially assists them to live in lodgings while working away from home.

Most of the employment categories in the island of course employ less than a handful of people, either full-time adults or time-serving apprentices; they are fully staffed very quickly and opportunities arise only when an employee dies or leaves the island, or—more rarely—when an increased demand for a service (for instance television engineering at one time) creates vacancies for apprentices.

623 The Trustees of the Stornoway Trust have not found 423 it easy to meet the cost of keeping up the valuable property
427 of the Castle and Park, nor to carry the burden of its rates, 178 no adequate income being available for the purpose.
874 Today, however, Leverhulme's gift is being put to good 311 use as a Technical College, opened in September 1952.

Division of the available farms, after providing about 427 200 small crofts (of ten acres or so), still left the problem
362 of finding legal homes on legal tenure for the remaining 656 cottars and squatters.[1] The Department of Agriculture arranged to feu plots of 'skinned land' on the outrun of certain townships, including one in the extreme north and others in Lochs. About 200 of these little holdings with potato ground were provided. On the holders' behalf the Department feued land from the owner, after obtaining the consent of the Common Grazings Committee of the township and permission from the Land Court for 'resumption', i.e. for enclosure of a portion of the common. The legal and administrative procedure involved may seem disproportionate to the economic value of the holdings. Yet difficulties of law and custom had been allowed to go from bad to worse during the past eighty years; and these difficulties were overcome.

362 To encourage better housing in the crofting counties,
652 loans are made to 'crofters and fishermen feuars' person-
[342] ally. Local stone, or latterly concrete, is used, and much of the building is done by the 'man of the house' himself, and his friends. From 1920 to 1940, nearly 1200 loans were made in Lewis and Harris for the erection (or improvement) of houses, and in a few cases for the erection [162] [1] Estimated at 1200 to 1500 shortly before, the open question was whether subdivision during the previous eighty years was to be recognised and accepted.

glens a family, newcomers to Skye, prevailed on the local 191
school teacher to hold a Sabbath school for the children. 771
The local missionary objected. If they were going to have 621
Sabbath school, it should be in Gaelic. His prestige and control over the population secured his position. The children of the people who originated and organized the program were excluded because they did not "have the Gaelic."

Another problem which is beginning to stem from the 191
use of Gaelic as the language of religion is the difficulty 793
of securing a minister. Traditionally, it was an ideal to [183]
send a son to study for the ministry. This ideal remains, [874]
but in the last few years only one young man from Skye has shown a desire to become a minister. Indeed, the majority of ministers on Skye are not Skyemen. I believe the only minister who serves his own neighborhood, the neighborhood in which he was born and raised, is the Free Presbyterian minister in Glendale. It is becoming more and more difficult to fill charges as they go vacant. Each year several Highland charges are changed from "Gaelic essential" to "Gaelic preferred." If we go beyond the role 121
of religion as it orders human relationships, through its 771
more formal aspects, and consider the influence of religion 626
on the secular behavior of the Sgiathanach, we can come 178
closer to an understanding of why the youth are slowly turning away. At the same time we shall be able to round out our picture of the expression given to the Presbyterian ethic on Skye.

scriptions flowed in. In 1709 the Queen granted Letters Patent under the Great Seal for erecting certain of the subscribers into a corporation. Thus did the SSPCK come into being, with an initial capital fund of £1,000. Its progress was rapid. In 1711, it supported twelve schools; in 1795, 323 schools. In addition to paying the teachers' salaries, the Society supplied the children with school books, established public libraries in various parishes, and defrayed the expenses of printing Gaelic Bibles and other books.

Harris here enters in an interesting sideline. In the records of the Presbytery of Mull, 1730, it is reported that 'Mr M'Aula . . . carried off the library to Harris, because he was not paid for his expenses in bringing them [the books of the Society] to Coll.' This MacAulay was the great-grandfather of the English man of letters, Lord MacAulay.

The Gaelic School Society was founded in 1811 and existed until 1892. It supported a large number of schools, as the desire for education had exceeded the capacity of the SSPCK. In 1796 there were two schools and a spinning school in the parish of Stornoway. The minister of Barvas, writing in that year, says that there had not been a parochial school in that parish for many years, but that there was a Society school at Ness, attended by about twenty pupils, instead of treble that number had all the children been made to attend. The minister of Uig stated that three spinning schools were established there by Lady Seaforth, but he does not refer to ordinary schools in his parish at that time. According to the minister of Lochs, a parochial school was built there in 1795, and a Society school some three years earlier.

By the middle of the nineteenth century matters had improved considerably, though there were still complaints that education was not appreciated. In fact, education tended to be discouraged for a very practical reason. Back in 1811 an observer in the island stated in his report that the great mass of the Lewis people would not send their children to school. 'When reproached on this head they answer "If we give them education, they will leave us."' Seventy-two years later (1883), the Napier Commission was told that 'Sir James (Matheson) supported and contributed to seventeen schools in the Island, many of which he built with teachers' mainder of Scotland where, under the school boards, education became both free and compulsory.

*175
871
656

*175
871
159

In Lewis the school of real significance to the island was, and still it, the Nicolson Institute, founded by Alexander Morison Nicolson and opened in February 1873, supported by bequests from him and his brothers. Nicolson's grandfather was the founder of the Lewis fish-curing trade, and was also shipowner and farmer. Alexander was the fifth of six sons and was educated in Stornoway parish school and in Glasgow High School. He served an apprenticeship as an engineer with Thomson of Clydebank. Later he entered the service of the Chinese Government and established himself with a partner of a shipbuilding and foundry business in Shanghai. In 1865, in his thirty-third year, he was killed in a boiler explosion in one of his new ships going a trial run. His ideal of establishing a school in Stornoway was subscribed to by his brothers who were a widespread family: Yorkshire, Mississippi, Western Australia, Tighnabruaich (Scotland) and South Africa.

*175
871
[875
[465

The first headmaster of the school received £82 per annum, plus the school fees, which ranged from 2s 6d per quarter in the lowest classes to 5s in the highest. The fees covered reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, English, history and English grammar and composition; when Latin, Greek, French and mathematics were taught, an additional shilling was charged for each subject. But the teacher was always bound to teach gratuitiously twenty pupils selected by the Nicolson Trustees. In 1888, the school was handed over to the school board. In 1901, by a Decree of the Court of Session, its name, previously the Nicolson Public School, was changed to the Nicolson Institute. In 1898, the first boys went straight from the Institute to university, a trend that has not ceased since (see Chapter 8).

*175
874
871

As far back as the turn of this century a recommendation was made for the provision of technical education on the island. A report on the subject of Higher Education in Lewis (1900) stated: 'Regarding the practical or scientific aspect of education . . . there is a clamant need of a central Technical School in Lewis . . . the local resources are quite inadequate for the establishment of such a school, or its maintenance, on an effective basis. Such popular technical instruction as Household Economy, Wood and Iron

876

DUCATIONAL THEORY AND METHODS--dominant and alternative theories of ducation; favored methods of instruction (e.g., collective recitation, rote emorizing, systematic classification, case analysis); system of rewards
.g., praise, prizes); prevalent and eschewed methods of punishment (e.g., idicule, corporal punishment, deprivation of privileges); special techniques r handicapped and backward pupils; educational psychology; examining and sting methods; use of visual and auditory aids, degree of individuation in struction (e.g., cultivation of uniformity, encouragement of independence and itiative); educational experiments and innovations (e.g., progressive educaon); etc. See also:

Informal techniques of instruction	86	Social control	626
Evidence on habit formation	153	Ethnopsychology	828
Educational motion pictures	546

464 on the island she had spoken English in school and had 197 not given much thought to which language she was speaking.
186 "I suppose it was because the other girls couldn't under-571 stand us. They always used to mimic us, making noises like they were talking it. It was nice to be able to talk about things and not have anyone else understand, especially when they teased us so much."

197 But on the island itself, the number of persons
178 speaking Gaelic is declining; and the scope of the language, [92] i.e., the range of situations to which it applies (as reflected in the diversity of vocabulary used), is becoming [196] more restricted. A psychological experiment in which the [191] semantic differential was used to study the organization of English and Gaelic vocabulary in the cognitive processes of Gaelic speakers suggests that Gaelic speakers are not bilingual but monolingual in particular situations (Macleod 197 1966). Gaelic is the language of hearth, home, family and 191 community. English is the language of education, the business world, and various transactions with the larger 197 society. Most Gaelic speakers spoke only Gaelic when they 871 entered school, but were required to speak only English in 191 the classroom. One islander recalls, "The first English
• [876] words you learned were 'Sit' and 'Stand.' Those were the days you got strapped if you spoke any Gaelic." Children ooo were addressed by their full English names. One of the 877

877 STUDENTS--composition of the student body; number of general and specialized students in an academic institution; organizations and associations (e.g., student unions); leadership; social status of students; sources of financial support (e.g., private funds, scholarships, fellowships, etc.); degree of academic freedom; extracurricular activities; living and dining accommodations (e.g., dormitories, off-campus housing, sororities and fraternities, etc.); student-community relations; student-faculty relationships; group values and behavior characteristics (e.g., political and social activism, etc.); etc. See also;

Adolescence and adulthood	88	Ethical norms	577
Adornment	30	Individual behavior characteristics	16
Athletic sports	526	Informal ingroup justice	627
Brawls and riots	579	Sex	83
Community structure	621	Socialization processes	86
Delinquency	738	Social relationships and groups	571
Dress	291	Social status and roles	564
Drinking	273	Sodalities	575
Drug use	276
Education	87

16 accordingly small. In Lewis in 1970, 211 babies were born, and 264 people died. In the 1961 national census, Shawbost had a population of 598; ten years later, the population was only 515. The significant community of interaction, however, includes a much greater number of people than are indicated by these statistics, because the roles which absentee members play in their community are important. The figures in • [877] Tables I_A^3 and II_A^2 do not include five males and three females in the 5-14 age category or six males and three females in the 15-24 age category who live away from home during the week to attend schools in Stornoway,
but who return home during the weekend and for holidays.
[464] The statistics also omit eighteen males and eighteen females in the 15-24 age category; fifteen males and seven females in the 25-34 age category; four males between 35 and 44 and two males and two females between 45 and 54 who are away from the village working but are as yet unmarried. These temporary exiles return for long or short periods of time, to weave or work in the mill, to care for aged parents, and to vary their diet
of living until they become restless and set off again.
[521] Their roots are in the village, and during the times when they are physically absent they are kept alive in ooo the electrical storm of the village gossip system. To $\frac{1}{A}$, $\frac{2}{A}$, [See pp. vii-viii respectively--Analyst]

For example, 46
a Widow Catherine lost "one red 175 mare and foal (L10), one dun cow (L3/10), and one dun 427 heifer (L1/10)." One family is said to have paid rent [435] by being fiddlers for "the castle" (the home of Sir [551] James Matheson), thus earning the patronymic, "Fiddler." Their income stopped abruptly when the fiddler at the time, a great-grandfather of descendants now living, converted to the Free Church and smashed his instrument.

In 1899 and in 1905 it was noted in the rent ledger
that two crofters wanted "first chance of a vacant croft [628] in the township." In the first quarter of the century, [964] a conflict ensued between Shawbost and a neighboring township over the extension of a cemetery; land was too precious to take out of cultivation and give to the dead of another village.

173 A 65-year-old man recalls, "Men got their living 241 from the land and sea. They kept more cattle when I was [233] young. They used the dung of the cattle to fertilise the [239] soil. The entire croft was used. My father's croft was only 2½ acres, but he worked it well and harvested eight stacks of barley to see us through the year." There were 173 a number of kilns to dry grain, and mills along the streams 213 to grind the barley. The "old Norse mill" which was 257 recently rebuilt by the school children as a school project [251] was in operation from 1920-1934. "Then the tweeds got [877]

TABLE VIII

EMPLOYMENT OF MALES IN WORKING AGE GROUP (15-64)

462
464

(Figures in brackets are percentages)

	15-44	45-64	Total
Fulltime Croft Work	20(9)	51 (29)	71 (18.0)
Croft Work and Regular Employment	33(14)	43 (25)	76 (19.0)
Croft Work and Occasional Employment	2(1)	12 (7)	14 (3.5)
Non-crofting Employment	15(7)	14 (9)	29 (7.0)
Unemployed or sick	10(4)	12 (7)	22 (5.5)
Total Resident Population	80(35)	132 (77)	212 (53.0)
Seasonally Employed Furth of Park	29(13)	11 (6)	40 (10.0)
Schoolchildren (15-18)	8(3)	-	8 (2.0)
Students	2(1)	-	2 (0.5)
National Servicemen	8(3)	-	8 (2.0)
Sick	1(1)	3 (1)	4 (1.0)
Total Seasonally Absent	48(21)	14 (7)	62 (15.5)
Regular Employment Furth of Park	99(44)	26 (16)	125 (31.5)
Total Regularly Absent	99(44)	26 (16)	125 (31.5)
Totals	227(100)	172 (100)	399 (100.0)

[877]
[701]
[164]
166
167
464

/p. 10-A/

TABLE XX

| | MALES | | |

88

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

as the days lengthened during Christmastide, old style, it may be called " The Rune of the World's Light ".

The world, ere came the Son of God,
was black, a bog forlorn :
Void of sun, moon or star,
void of body, heart or form.

'Twas Mary Mother lowly kneeled,
and gave the Inmost Being birth ;
Darkness and tears were driven afar,
the guiding star rose over earth.

Light on the land, the deep illumed
from sullen pool to ocean stream ;
Grief was laid and joy was raised,
with praise and hail and harping free.

Light on the hills, light on the plains,
light o'er grey-green sea and firth ;
Light o'er all the world as one,
the hour God's Son came down to earth.

(p) THE CYCLE OF LIFE

The stages in life's sequence are marked by noble runes, of baptism, initiation in adolescence, betrothal and marriage, childbirth, and of confession and consolation in trials throughout life and, at its close, of farewell. As might be fitting, the benedictions were given by either man or woman : to a child by a parent or elder ; to the young and strong by the wise ; and by lovers to one another. And in the past, especially in trial, the ' soul-friend ' ministered —an anam-chara, a neighbour chosen from lifelong friendships for steadfastness and understanding.

At birth a babe was baptized ; and in the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit the nurse placed three drops

882

882 STATUS OF ADOLESCENTS--cultural definition of adolescence (e.g., age limits); beliefs and attitudes about adolescents; prerogatives and disabilities of adolescents; relaxing or tightening of social control for each sex; residence shifts at puberty (e.g., removal of boys to men's house or to home of a grandparent or maternal uncle); readjustment of social relationships; etc.
See also:

Age stratification	561	Social control	638
Men's clubs	575	Legal liability	672
Residence rules	695

island. Being taught about the larger world beyond, most children begin to show exasperation with the croft and the duties it imposes. At first they become reluctant to do their chores after school hours or on holidays, or unable to escape the strong authority of their fathers, they do the work grudgingly. This is especially true of those who are planning to go to a university. While many boys take an interest in the stock and like to plough, if there is a tractor, they frequently complain about the slow pace, the boredom of the long winters, the restrictions on their time, and the weather—above all, the weather. Girls are no less outspoken. In particular, the girl who has been left behind by her older brothers and sisters to care for the parents will feel that such a life leaves much to be desired. She learns of another, entirely different life in school, and she hears her siblings tell of this new life when they return for a visit. Naturally, she begins to think digging potatoes is beneath her dignity. The most frequently heard complaint is, "You can't dress out here." The underlying conflict for both boys and girls in their teens seems to be one between a desire for adventure or opportunities for individual choice and the routine, circumspect behavior expected of them.

Added to this desire is the realization that they may not really be needed at home. The small crofter with a piece of land hardly larger than a German laborer's garden can handle all the necessary chores by himself or, at periods of peak activity, with the cooperation of his wife and his neighbors. A medium sized croft may provide work for one, two, or even three children, but this will only be for a few weeks in the spring and autumn. The large crofter, who has only recently appeared, is the only one who can use one or two helping hands all through the year.

One may logically ask, what if the thought that they are not needed never occurs to the children and they resolve the conflict of individual expression and subservience to the father and the group? The answer is an ever increasing number have at least one more important decision to make. As the boys grow into young men, they must decide whether or not they will remain bachelors, which remaining with the parents means, or found their own families of procreation. Girls must similarly decide between spinsterhood and marriage. There is no pattern on Skye, like that found in Ireland,[12] for turning over the croft to a son, much less a daughter, while the parents are still alive. Some, of course, marry after their parents die, but often it is too late for them to have children. The township of Borneskeig, for example, has not celebrated a birth in years; there simply are no children and none to come. Other men and women feel it is too late for marriage when they get possession of the croft. I doubt that there is a single township on Skye which does not have at least one bachelor or spinster. Totescore has earned fame as being a township of bachelors. Commonly, a brother and sister live together on the croft.

[12] Arensberg, op. cit., pp. 72-79, 85; Arensberg and Kimball, Family and Community in Ireland, pp. 123-144. There are, of course, many comparisons which could be made with the Irish small farmer, but most of them would apply to peasants everywhere.

requirements of adulthood, and also old age, are still boys and girls.

Status Equality within the Township. The ascription of status on the basis of age and sex has resulted in a straightforward system of status. The facts are simple. Men are the social superiors of women. Youth are socially inferior to their seniors. Men, or women, of a common age category are equals. We shall now examine a few interpersonal relationships to see how the system operates. Unless a man and his wife are eating alone, women never eat with men. They wait until the men have finished before taking their meal. When neighbors come to visit, the man of the house does not rise for a woman. He does rise for a man and shakes him by the hand. The woman of the house, on the other hand, rises for both men and women. Furthermore, when a couple comes to call, the woman greets the man first. Only after he has been offered a chair does she greet the woman. Young people are seen but seldom heard. They do not speak unless addressed.

All societies allow some deviation from traditional norms of expected behavior. On Skye, as elsewhere, excessive deviation is censured. Neither increased opportunities for education nor the steady flow of Skye men and women to the four corners of the earth, accompanied by the slow returning trickle, have disturbed these fundamental values. Like the youth who leaves home to achieve upward mobility through outward mobility, the man who returns must conform to the traditional norms, which he learned as a child, or be regarded

883

883 ADOLESCENT ACTIVITIES--behavior patterns characteristic of adolescents (e.g., dating, loitering); economic activities expected of adolescents; adolescent organizations (e.g., work groups, cliques, bachelors' clubs); adolescent recreations (e.g., expeditions, picnics); adolescent problems (e.g., reactions to social pressures for adult behavior); etc. See also:

Cliques, gangs, clubs, and visiting	57	Mutual aid	476
Welfare organizations	74	Athletic sports	898
Socialization	80	Dancing	536
Education	97	Courtship	584
Slang	195	Juvenile delinquency	674, 738
Loafing and loitering	661	Premarital sex relations	838
Child labor legislation	688

1: Parman E-4,5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Shawbost

233 "You got away from village life when you went to 829 the sheiling. The youngsters ran wild. Everyone talked more freely somehow. It didn't feel like a Sunday out 233 there--the minister couldn't see that far. Only the • 883 young men and women in their late teens or 20's were out at the weekends. They would send the younger ones home. They came out in their good clothes, from Saturday night to Monday morning. Groups of young people walked out and back together, the girls in one group and the boys in [533] another, joking and teasing. They sang the old songs and learned new ones from each other. Some were good at making up songs. You wouldn't believe how many people could sleep together in a single sheiling. It was a [829] heaven on earth. Everybody was one family. The hills were filled with the sound of voices."

233 Not every family in the village went to the sheilings. Some families had enough land within the township to graze their cattle. But they usually went out at the weekends, for the fun and company.

237 One of the most important products of the cow was 241 not milk but dung, which was used to keep the poor land
231 productive. Because people did not have the enriched
234 animal feeds available today, a cow might not have a calf, and thus did not give milk, for four or five years.

1: Parman E-4,5 (1970-1971) 1972 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Shawbost

293 village locations such as hotels and bothans (see Chapter [154] 6). Drinking situations provide an important opportunity for relatively uninhibited expression by males, and will be discussed further in Chapter 6.

522 The role of clown or "character" is well developed
156 in Hebridean townships. In an environment which encourages 154 quietly watchful and somewhat anxious, conformist behavior, the character is rude, raucous and outrageous, a bite of fire in cold waters. He represents a reversal of normal behavior. The villagers shake their heads, agree that he is impossible, but encourage him to continue, urge him on when he flags, and bring up his escapades for discussion during moments of boredom. There are usually several such characters in a village.

156 Reversal of low-profile and other "normal" behavior
154 is also allowed on particular occasions such as New Year's,
527 this time among all villagers. In the days of horses and
• 522 carts, boys went around the village on New Year's night
883 stealing carts and hiding them on the moor or down by the
[574] shore; today they steal gates. Between Christmas and [431] New Year's, groups of boys visit houses in their neighbor-hood, collecting tea, sugar, biscuits, or money to be used for a party in one of the houses. Such boys are called 796 balaich na bannagan, or boys of the bannag. In some 431 Gaelic-speaking areas, bannag refers to a gift that is 184

2: Thompson H-4,5 (no date) 1973 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Lewis and Harris

PRESENT INDUSTRY

of a knitting industry based on the crofters, who would use Lewis 286 yarn and produce knitwear in addition to their woven fabrics. 175*
However, it was found that the yarns used for Harris Tweed were unsuitable for knitwear, not being given sufficient twist in the spinning: before women use this tweed yarn for knitting, it is common practice to twist two or more threads of yarn together on a hand spinning-wheel.

Little in the way of craft work is done on the island, mainly 463 because of the lack of indigenous materials which could be used to produce typically-island items. Marram-grass has been sug-[139] gested as being suitable for making agricultural wind-breaks, and [135] close-woven basket-work. Shore-stones and pebbles are plentiful both in quantity and variety of type and colour.

Small employment outlets on the island are marine and motor 396 engineering, mainly based on Stornoway, and boat-building. This [464] latter is a small but socially-significant firm in Ness with products with a high reputation. Construction and general building is of some significance, one of the most enterprising firms being built up literally from scratch so as to become a highly-successful island business.

The unemployment problem

The island's unemployment problem is as much a matter of 464 concern today as it has ever been, averaging about 25 per cent annually (representing well over 1,000 people) compared with the Scottish mainland figure of 6.0 per cent; the contemporary figure for Britain is around 3.0 per cent. While unemployment as it 464 affects adults is serious enough, unemployment among teenagers 883 • threatens the community's whole future. The island has its Youth Employment Officer, who has an unenviable task. Each junior and secondary school in the island is visited to interview school-leavers, at least once a year; employment advice is given and this is supplemented by Careers Officers' visits.

Such employment openings as exist over the island's limited spectrum are concentrated in Stornoway. They are, however, [462] mainly in shop work, mill work and hotel work for girls, with a few vacancies for apprentices in trades generally associated with building construction. Most of the jobs offered are very much in

2: Thompson H-4,5 (no date) 1973 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Lewis and Harris

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

• 883 464 the nature of stopgaps in the younger, formative years and do not offer progressive training for the eventual chosen career. As an [166] example of this, a number of island girls come to Stornoway to [462] work in local shops and then leave the island after two years or [804] so to take up hotel work or nursing on the mainland; many boys leave the island for apprenticeship training in trades which now require evening-class, day- or block-release educational classes. About fifty young persons leave the island each year under the Training Allowances Scheme of the Youth Employment Service, which financially assists them to live in lodgings while working away from home.

464 Most of the employment categories in the island of course employ less than a handful of people, either full-time adults or time-serving apprentices; they are fully staffed very quickly and opportunities arise only when an employee dies or leaves the island, or—more rarely—when an increased demand for a service (for instance television-engineering at one time) creates vacancies for apprentices.

788
852
88

[For additional general information on runes and 158-192, passim.]

rites at various phases of the life-cycle, see category 796, pp.

the people of Skye, including many of the newcomers, 785 not been favorably impressed by Skye Week. The consensus 745 at it is not representative of Skye. For the Sgriathanach 541 Highland Games are alright, but the concerts, dances and ar festivities only cause ill feelings.

As might be expected social life is more vivid in Portree. 369
the members and the adherents of the Church of Scotland 715 ake of a number of recreational activities. In the winter 52 is badminton twice a week. In the spring and summer 534 is a little golf and tennis. The limitations are not ious; they are climatic. Then, too, there is shinty.
e already noted the existence of many clubs. There are 535 ar dances. Moving pictures take place twice a week. 544
f these activities are run by newcomers; the Skyemen have 447 e or less passive role. The "elect" of the two smaller 715 are, to say the least, very much disturbed by these 744
ities. What is worse, the children attend the dances 424
he concerts and the boys play shinty. They can find 853
n solidarity among those of their own age grade to out- 52
the threats of their elders. Apparently they find h security to be unaffected by the stern demonstrations of inister from the pulpit. When they marry, however, they 744 to repeat the pattern of their behavior, for now the 781
s are in a position to exercise control by withholding 626 sm from their children. Some may turn to the Church of
and.

Standing in marked contrast to Portree, in Glenisle the 885
ol by the aged is complete. There is not a single activity 715 [49]

at which the youth can join together as a sodality; hence, they 885 hardly ever have a chance to question the control of the "elect." 715
Only once in recent years has the control of the old people 578 been criticized. After World War II, the men who returned to 885 the neighborhood wanted to erect a village hall. This threatened 626 both family unity and the solidarity of the neighborhood. The young people were divided between the time honored obligation to honor their parents and their own desires for a fuller life.
The parents were torn between religious beliefs and their affection for their children. The minister and his elders were faced with a situation which threatened the fundamental tenets of the faith and the continued ability of the religious expression to sanction the existing order. How strong are age controls? The youth did not get their village hall. Many of [167] them left Skye for the Lowlands where social life is less restricted.

The difficulty is that until, say, forty years ago the 178 traditional outlets were sufficient. Middle-aged people 177 remember how the youth used to drop in on the old widow for 52
a visit on an evening and then make their way off in couples for a bit of courting. Two World Wars and the continuing program of National Service, not to speak of the influence of the schools, have given the youth a new perspective. They have spent one or two years in an environment where recreational activities are considered not only innocent but also wholesome.
The radio and magazines have contributed to the demands of the youth for amusements. As if this were not enough, there are

[26] Ness, Op. cit., p. 127

several agencies who have taken the task of bringing movies 178
to the remote crofters in the belief that the Highlander is 893
more likely to stay if he has a share in the life of the 177
Lowlander and the Englishman. These agencies want to "create" 52
a more adequate social organization."

Out of boredom, some young men try to add some spirit 273
to their lives by turning to "the drink." Although the 777 religion of the Skyeman is strikingly similar to that of the rural dweller in Tales, I found the Welshman and the Sgriathanach have quite different views on the subject of temperance.[26] All churches support temperance, from the 857 pulpit and from the kirk collections, but abstinence or 893 prohibition has never been accepted. Perhaps, their main 561 reason for consistently rejecting the idea is their want to base many of their decisions on Biblical directions.
There can be nothing inherently wrong in the infallible Word of God. Then, too, to the Sgriathanach, whisky is not Scotch; 273 it is the "water of life." The importance attached to the dram can be judged from its functions: it birth, marriage, and death. It is also the means of thanking a man for doing a favor which cannot be repaid. Thus, while abstinence is a major religious tenet for the Welsh, temperance is the aim of the Skyeman.

The temperance movement has had an effect, all over Scotland. The "pubs" are no more than a long bar set in a bare room. I was one who have spent time in England, where the local "pub" is a closely knit club for the villagers, frequently offer help without an expectation of payment. Nevertheless, 794

anonymous donations of food and casual visits make sure that 573 none of their number becomes absolutely destitute. In Glendale this religious clique merges with the person's "people and friends." Kilmuir has two religious cliques.

We have had ample opportunity to examine the age-grades 561
of Skye's society and in the next chapter we shall have a closer look at the functions of the age-grades, especially that of the old men. One of the most important weaknesses of the social structure, in my mind, is the lack of age mates 857
for children and adolescents. They find it difficult, almost 893 impossible, to come together as a sodality. In Kilmuir, for example, there are only fifteen boys under twenty in an area of ten square miles. A youth is anyone under forty. Of the [162]
total population 60 percent are over fifty. For this reason 561
the important age grade clique tends to merge with the re- 778 ligious social circle. The situation is much the same in Glendale. There the age-grade and kinship groups are intertwined with the kirk congregation.

Status Equality within the Neighborhood. The fundamental 621
status equality which we found for the crofters within the 634
township carries over to the neighborhood, but, as would be 571 expected, there is often a need for leadership in this larger group. Let us look at the two neighborhoods which I know best to cast light on the methods employed in the self-selection of a leader and the means of expressing leadership as a role.
Kilmuir has a Crofters' Club, which was originally formed by 573

884 MAJORITY--concept of legal majority if differentiated from puberty; criteria for its attainment by each sex (e.g., age); ceremonies of admission to full manhood or womanhood; readjustments of behavior and social relationships; etc. See also:

Sex	885	Full citizenship status	641
Age at marriage	885	Conception of legal minority	888
Celibacy	886

that the people of Skye, including many of the newcomers, 785
have not been favorably impressed by Skye Week. The consensus 745 is that it is not representative of Skye. For the Sgriathanach 541
the Highland Games are alright, but the concerts, dances and
similar festivities only cause ill feelings.

As might be expected social life is more vivid in Portree. 369
Her: the members and the adherents of the Church of Scotland 715 partake of a number of recreational activities. In the winter 52
there is badminton twice a week. In the spring and summer 534
there is a little golf and tennis. The limitations are not religious; they are climatic. Then, too, there is shinty.
We have already noted the existence of many clubs. There are 535
regular dances. Moving pictures take place twice a week. 544
All of these activities are run by newcomers; the Skyemen have 447
a more or less passive role. The "elect" of the two smaller 715
sects are, to say the least, very much disturbed by these 744
frivolities. What is worse, the children attend the dances 424
and the concerts and the boys play shinty. They can find enough solidarity among those of their own age grade to outweigh the threats of their elders. Apparently they find enough security to be unaffected by the stern demonstrations of the minister from the pulpit. When they marry, however, they 744
have to recast the pattern of their behavior, for now the 781
elders are in a position to exercise control by withholding 626 baptism from their children. Some may turn to the Church of Scotland.

Standing in marked contrast to Portree, in Glenisle the 885 control by the aged is complete. There is not a single activity 715
[49]

885 ADULTHOOD--conception of the prime of life; cultural definition of adult status; differential status and activities of adult males and females prior to and subsequent to marriage; concepts of the ideal man and the ideal woman; etc. See also:

Social status	884	Sex	885
Age-grade system	817	Activities of early married persons	886
Age stratification	881	Celibacy	886
Sex roles	885	Civil rights	641

COMMUNITY FROM PAST TO PRESENT PT. II

539 And so, after every good wish for days, years and life,
867 the Invocation closes: "Peter has come and Paul" . . .
869 the Disciples and the Archangels. . . . Jesus the mild and the Spirit of peace have come.

And the King of kings has come on the helm,
To bestow on thee their affection and their love,
A thousandth dait-se gratich sa ruin.

The ideal of choice maidenliness which this Invocation portrays, culminates in the thought of the loveliness that 867 was Christ. It rises, too, to stirring virility: "the island 539 at sea, the fortress on land", or "the step of the steed on the plain." Yet when all is said, it is a womanly image which prevails: after the fortress comes the well in the desert, and after the charger's step, the gracious calm of a floating swan. It is all the more significant that the Invocation was addressed both 'to boys and girls' in one isle, and 'to youths and maidens' in another. Not simply was boyhood taught to honour girlhood: ideal womanhood
was invoked to raise manhood itself to fullness.

885 Upon marriage, the husband replaced the maiden's
212 mood or ribon that bound her uncovered hair by the wife's 585 kerchief, am breid. Folded diagonally, its three-cornered 539 shape came to symbolise the Trinity, in benediction on the bride's head: "A poem to a bride, "now beginning her dual course", commences, "A thousand hails to her 538 illness. The short second stanza given stands out alone; the poem, 192 having assumed its climax by a rhythm sustaining the upward, sonorous movement, is hushed by its few simple words. In From the Hebrides, Mrs.
Kennedy-Fraser rearranged one or two of these lovely stanzas, as one of her "Songs with Music." Q. A. Cockin, The Songs of Craig and Ewe, out in 1932.

"The kerch is spoken of in many songs, in which a lover hopes to place it on his young love's head, or a husband presents in whisness as a token to his wife. When first I knew the Lewis, the kerch was still commonly worn under the more recent Lowland mutch, and either framed a young face, or an 198 old one, charmingly. The two have not quite vanished, though memories of what the kerch once symbolized are hard to find.

885 in thy kertch!" and counsels her to be hospitable yet wise,
539 and courageous though calm; to be frank yet tactful,
dignified though kind. The themes of this ode's melodious
885 verse recall the virtues of a wife enumerated mnemonically
538 in the acrostic which concludes the Book of Proverbs.
513 For in that, too, there is mention of "strength and dignity,
wisdom and kindness", and the poor are not forgotten as
the wife goes tirelessly about her work, sets her servants
to their tasks and sells her merchandise at a profit. Yet
the acrostic's emphasis on the wife's work and its gain reveal the writer as a shrewd citizen seeking to train a
wife to ceaseless exertion and business dealing, with her husband's private profit and public honour as a most important end! The singer of 'The Kertch'—man or woman, one cannot tell—thought of conduct not for its profit first, but for its virtue, and dwelt upon motive, mind
and heart.[1]

175 To tide over the supreme crisis of childbirth the mother 844 was strengthened in confidence, courage and calm. The need was the greater before modern midwifery. In Sutherland as late as 1908, a good professional nurse tending a difficult case of childbirth, anxious and powerless without
a doctor, found herself indebted to older wisdom. The patient's mother first filled a small basin with water into (788) which she put trinkets of gold and silver. "She then held
the basin to her dying daughter's lips, and made her drink
three mouthfuls of the water, each mouthful in the name
of Father, and of Son, and of Spirit, 'the three Persons
of the Trinity of kindness and power, Tri Pears na Trianaid chaoimh chumhachdaich'. Soon after, the child came . . .
(113)

[1] An Breid, 'The Kertch'. Carmina, No. 215. A short paraphrase by Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, set to a lovely air and refrain, will be found in From the Hebrides. First published (imperfectly) in Nether Lochaber by the Rev. Alexander Stewart (1883, p. 4) with delightful notes.

887

887 ACTIVITIES OF THE AGED--regimen of the aged (e.g., diet, exercise, rest); economic tasks performed by the aged; leisure time activities of the aged, sexuality in old age; professional activities of the aged; other functions and activities of the aged (e.g., ceremonial, political); etc. See also:
Dementia senilis of the aged . . . . . 89 Emotional and imaginary function
Autonic cause of extreme longevity . . . . . 168 of grandparents 890

233 were taken out to small huts in the central moorlands
233 for several months during the summer. These moorland
342 dwellings, called sheilings or airidh, were tiny stone structures, as small as seven by five feet. They had double stone walls filled with clay, and a rounded thatched roof. There were two doors opposite each other in the longer walls, one of which was filled with turf depending on the direction of the wind. A fireplace
[364] was built into one end of the hut; shelves in the stone [362] walls held basins of milk and other items; and the major part of the sheiling constituted a grass-and-heather-lined cavity which served as a bed. The sheilings were usually [361] clustered together near a stream, duplicating neighborhoods within the village.

221 Ploughing and planting were finished in the spring before the young men and women went off to the fishing, and before the cattle were taken to the sheiling. Some families went to the sheiling as early as March for a "fresh bite" of grass. Many went out in the middle of May, and returned at the end of July or beginning of August.

233 "During the week, young girls or boys stayed out on 857 the sheilings, depending on who was available in the 887 family; maybe old people who couldn't do anything else, 462

233 usually an old woman, as the women were responsible for 887 the milking, and the old men were usually fishing around 462 the village.

"We left for the sheiling early in the morning, taking bed clothes and food. I walked out with my aunt, who went back home in the morning. My mother came out with the provisions in the evening. If no one came out (513) that day, I went to sleep with someone else. You never slept alone. During the day we fished for trout or gathered small blackberries; or we looked for the nests of grouse and other birds. You would knit or read, and walk for miles to visit friends. The boys swam in the loch, and sometimes the girls pinched their clothes.
From the top of the hills you could see Stornoway, the hills of Lochs, Uig and the lighthouse in Hess; on some days you could see the distant hills of Caithness on the mainland. It's on the sheiling that I learned about other parts of the island.

"I remember watching the sun and trying to will it 512 to stay high in the sky, before our mothers came out from 233 the village to milk in the evening. They called the 234 cattle—'Troit, troit, troit'—and they carried the milk every day from the sheiling to the village, all those miles. The cattle knew their own sheilings; sometimes

233 costly, that the Common Market will soon drive up milk
345 prices, and that income from the weaving has become too 345 uncertain.
498

412 Many tools and techniques associated with crofting
198 have disappeared: the flail for threshing oats (two pieces of wood joined with leather); the sheepskin stretched over wood with holes burned into it, to separate chaff and grain; rope made of plaited heather and straw.
241 Each spring the byre was cleaned of its accumulated dung
234 and urine, and this was turned into the ground along
(234) with seaweed. Such tools and techniques remain among 173 the older villagers as a "memory culture" which may be
(397) mobilized under changed conditions, as when alternatives to crofting are no longer available or are too costly.
However, the longer crofting is neglected, the less it will provide an alternative strategy. "The artificial 241 fertilisers are ruining the land; that's why the 234 turnips are full of maggots and the potatoes turn to (233) water." As the rushes grow and clog the drains and streams—rushes that used to be eaten by the horses and cattle and which are now left untouched by the sheep—
the land becomes unfit even for grazing. "I'd rather work the land than the blinkin' loon, but we tried the potatoes, turnips and cabbage last year, and lost them all to the maggots. You lose heart after that."

As yet the tourist trade is almost entirely restricted to visiting relatives but many 484 houses offer suitable accommodation for people who would appreciate quiet holidays in 185 these very beautiful surroundings. The distance from Stornoway, the difficulty of obtaining varied food supplies - and the weather - are considered to be disadvantages! Passengers on a weekly coach tour from Stornoway are supplied with meals at an Ardroil house which has good access to the beach but otherwise the crofters show little interest in the possibilities of tourism.

162 In common with other crofting townships, the greatest problem here is that of an ageing population because the younger people seek employment outside their township. The 164 diagram illustrates the age-heavy structure of the permanent resident group and also the 164 numbers of the insurable population periodically or permanently away. The lack of suitable work for young women particularly, is also obvious. The ages of the tenants also illustrate this problem. Of the thirty-seven tenants here, twenty or 54% are over sixty-five. Serious, too, is the loss by emigration of people between fifteen and sixty-five. Of the total 'working population', 39% have left this region since 1939. The corresponding figure for Crowlista alone, the older settlement with smaller crofts, is as high as 42%.

We found in this part of Uig some crofts efficiently and energetically worked by young 241 tenants, and if reasonable stock prices are obtained the larger crofts can be worked 234 profitably. However no croft will fully support a family: ancillary employment is always
(234) sought by crofters with growing families yet many crofts are carrying less stock than they (397) might because some tenants are not interested in, or able for, agriculture. The croft is increasingly thought of as a home, as part-time employment - often for older members of the family - and as a place for retirement.

233 It is easy to list schemes for improvement and change:- dairying to supply Stornoway with milk, poultry and pig keeping on a commercial scale, cultivation under glass, the tourist industry, forestry on a small scale, lobster and crab fishing, etc. Such schemes would require capital not available in the township, careful planning, and tactful administration by people with real knowledge of this area and its people. Meanwhile even the potential production of the crofts is by no means realized.

CHAPTER SIX

AIRD

by

Madge Phillips.

181 The little township of Aird is an isolated and old-established crofting settlement along the western side of the steep-sided narrow valley of the Amhainn Dubh in Airde three miles 185 north of Crowlista. After leaving Loch Meashel, the river flows northward through a gorge (at the mouth of which are the ruins of the old corn-mill), then across a narrow 427 flood-plain into the rocky bay of Camus na h-Airde. The crofts, roughly fan-shaped in 133 arrangement and varying in size from 3½ to 7 acres, each originally included a narrow strip of the flood-plain, stretching across from just beyond the right bank of the river, up the steep, rocky slope above the left bank and climbing out over the more gently slopes between the 100 ft. and 200 ft. contours. A number of the crofts were subsequently enlarged, gaining extra land on the right bank of the stream, whilst others received additional ground to the north or south.

39.

1/4 [See figures 18 (facing p.34) and 17 (facing p.39)—Analyst]

233 maggs are needed to maintain the flock because casualties, from disease and accidents, are heavy. Wanders are also kept, until they are two or three years old, when those that survive are supposed to be good for the pot. Again, after allowing for casualties and non-productive animals, the flock is too small to support a family living an exceptionally well-managed croft. Likewise, the cattle are also too small. Calving cows is almost unknown; one man, indeed, claimed with pride the possession of a fifteen year old cow! Then it is certain that, after allowing for household consumption, very few of the little flocks of sheep yield an economic return for the time spent on them. The ideal arrangement would be to replace the 500 little individual flocks by about 50 communally owned 'club-stocks', each with a paid shepherd. This could almost certainly be financially very rewarding but would probably be socially unacceptable because so many crofters are deeply attached to their small packs of sheep.

TABLE 41

Stock carried (as a proportion of sums) according to size of units

233
317

Percentage of Units occupying in size:	0-2.5 acres	2.5-5.0 acres	5.1-7.5 acres	7.6-10.0 acres	10.1-15.0 acres	15.1-20.0 acres	more than 20.0 acres	TOTAL OF ALL UNITS
	%	%	%	%	%	%	%	%
Nil	16	5	4	1	1			4
less than 50%	36	34	31	30	28	33	29	30
51% - 100%	24	24	28	40	39	30	46	33
101% - 200%	24	29	22	21	28	27	20	23
More than 200%		12	5	8	6	8	5	8
	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100

Table 41 has been constructed in an effort to discover whether the size of the working unit (which is greater in the crofters districts) has any notable effect on stock carried. Further details will be found in appendices A(5) and C(5). It is clear that the size of the unit has no influence on the stock carried.

Finally, we may examine the stock held according to the age and employment status of crofters. Table 42 shows, apart from a natural tendency for persons over 65 to keep 233 less stock, the relatively high proportion of those under 65 who are not full-time farmers carrying less regular, or only casual employment. Some are apparently in influence the number of stock which be carried. The proportion of 'retired' workers under 65 with no other employment carrying no stock may seem curiously high until we recall that many of these persons are elderly pensioners or invalids.

an enterprising radio firm in Stornoway; its customers receive both BBC and Grampian Television programmes.

Some youth organisations are represented on the island. The first troop of Boy Scouts was connected with the Stornoway YMCA and was founded by forty boys in 1921. Founded (in 1912) on the island's close association with the sea was the Boys' Brigade (Naval), later to become the Stornoway Naval Corps and the Stornoway Boys' Naval Brigade. Its objects were to provide instruction in drilling, signalling, seamanship and first aid; and to foster a spirit of manliness and comradeship among its members. The founder was Canon H. Anderson Meaden, of the Episcopal Church in Stornoway (St Peter's). During the first war the boys acted as signallers at the Stornoway Battery.

But the provision of some organised recreational facilities for young people on the island has long been a thorny question. After the first world war, the Rector of the Nicolson Institute, Stornoway, proposed that village halls be built for village education and recreation. This scheme was never fully realised—except at Sandwick, just outside Stornoway—mainly because of the strength of puritanical opposition. This attitude has been breaking down, however, and it is now generally realised that the wealth of any community is based on its youth. Most of the efforts to set afoot activities for young people began after the second war; the work was hard and challenging with not a few failures on the way; perseverance has won to the extent that there is now a full-time youth leader. Most of the cultural and recreational activities are to be found in Stornoway, with a full range of interests. Evening non-vocational classes during the winter are also widely attended for a variety of subjects.

In 1965, an excellent Youth Hostel was established at Stockinish, Harris, with the help of the Inverness-shire Education Department. In its first season it recorded between 600 and 700 visitors (1,070 bed-nights). Also involved in the establishment of the hostel was the Harris Society of Social Service; practical help was given by the 2nd Stornoway Boy Scouts, who made a wall map, cleared up grounds and shifted furniture. A group of English enthusiasts have in previous years arranged a hotel at Rhenigidale, Harris (see Chapter 9), which provides for some fifty to

The man who seeks sensory pleasures and finds enjoyment in 785
mundane recreation is believed to be spiritually un- 779
enlightened. It seems almost an anticlimax to add that social life is restricted.

Beyond the Highlands and, indeed, within the Highlands 771
in certain prosperous areas, where poverty has not been 883
a factor of such importance that it requires religious 571
sanction, the Church of Scotland has endeavored to find
room within the church for recreational activities, especially for the youth. As in America, the church feels
a responsibility to the youth which requires a combination
of religion and recreation if the citizens of the community
are to be well-rounded adults. Youth programs and youth clubs, young adult groups, and social circles for the older men and women are an essential part of church work. In 794
an organizational sense, the Church of Scotland on Skye 571
has, at the most, a Woman's Guild which meets once a month
to hear a lecture on a topic such as missionary work in India, and which holds an occasional sale of work to reduce the church debt or buy the minister an electric tea kettle
to keep in his vestry; and a choir, which meets once a week for rehearsal. It is, as I have said before, not the overall policy of the church which determines the activities
in which the people participate or which they reject. The 888
elders are the prime movers. Were the youth in Kilmuir 561
anyone under thirty, instead of anyone under forty, the 626 control of the aged might not be as strong as it is. In

TABLE 42

Stock held, according to status of principal croft workers

	Croft workers under 65 years of age:			Over 65:
	No other employment:	Regular employment:	Casual employment:	Male:	Female:	All Units
	%	%	%	%	%	% (No.)
CATTLE HELD:
nil	16	10	14	25	17	14 (65)
1	63	68	63	60	75	65 (314)
2	20	19	19	11	8	18 (86)
more than 2	-	3	5	4	-	3 (13)
	100	100	100	100	100	100 (478)
SHEEP HELD:
nil	19	11	14	19	42	14 (68)
1 - 5	6	3	2	6	-	4 (17)
6 - 10	18	7	5	13	8	9 (45)
11 - 20	14	17	14	16	25	16 (78)
21 - 50	25	39	36	30	25	34 (164)
51 -100	16	20	25	14	-	19 (89)
100 +	1	3	5	2	-	3 (14)
	100	100	100	100	100	100 (475)

Some units omitted for lack of data.

Labour - who are the agriculturalists ?

When we recall (Table 12, page 28) that 16% of the crofter tenants are absentees, that 34% are over 65 years of age (of whom 8% are women), and that a further 7% are women under the age of 65, it becomes clear that many of the tenants cannot reasonably be expected themselves to provide active labour for agricultural operations. An attempt has been made to analyse the agricultural labour force; this must be treated with some reserve because it was necessary to decide for every effective agricultural unit, who was the principal croft worker. In some cases croft work is shared by a younger and an older man, the former having a regular job (often weaving) but being available for the heavier work, whilst the older man keeps things going from day to day. Women, even the elderly, often provide an important subsidiary source of labour, too. Where two persons were shown on the croft record as sharing the work of the croft, the older, if over 65, was ignored. Thus the analysis probably under-estimates the part played by elderly persons. Nevertheless the results are useful (Table 43): two-thirds of all effective agricultural units are worked by crofters having other a temporary feature in 1959 due to the casual employment provided by a hydro-electric scheme at Gisla (Figure 46).

In this respect the critical age-group is 15-44 years (table 54). Few older people take work away from home. Of this age-group, 338 (out of 931) persons are away. Women account for 199, men for only 139; the difference is a strong indication of the lack of employment opportunities for women in Lewis. The contrasting experiences of the different districts are quite remarkable (figure 46). A far greater proportion of men goes away from the two northern districts than from Bernera and the South, and this despite the greater importance of weaving in the north. The explanation for this lies partly in the generally smaller size of crofts of the north, partly in the type of employment available locally and partly in the customary choice of employment away, which differs from district to district. Social custom, which may vary as between one township and the next, has a strong bearing on whether and where young men and women choose to work.

TABLE 54

The 15-44 age-group, distinguishing men and women

		Resident:	Periodically away:	Permanently away:	Total:
		%	%	%	% (No.)
Uig Parish	M	71	7	22	100 (471)
	F	57	17	27	100 (460)
Districts
South Uig	M	80(1)	8	12	100 (158)
	F	62	8	30	100 (154)
Bernera	M	70(2)	14	15	100 (98)
	F	57	22	22	100 (78)
East Loch Roag	M	59	17	25	100 (142)
	F	53	18	30	100 (131)
Carloway	M	49	24	27	100 (142)
	F	56	22	22	100 (117)

Notes: (1) including at least 16 (12%) temporarily employed on construction work at Gisla.

(2) including 11 (11%) full-time fishermen.

4: Moisley et al. K-5 (1959) 1962 ES10 Highland Scots ES10 Uig

TABLE 55

Proportion of resident males, aged 15-64, in Major categories of employment

See Appendices B(2) and D(2) for details.

162
462
464

	Croft-work only	Croft-work and weaving	Croft and other regular work	Croft and periodic work	No croft work	Total (100%)
Uig Parish	11	43	16	15	14	(635)
Districts
South Uig	13	27	22	24	13	(188)
Bernera	8	36	25	19	12	(130)
East Loch Roag	9	50	11	11	19	(146)
Carloway	16	61	6	6	13	(171)

Table 55 and figure 47 summarise the main sources of employment. The small group engaged in 'croft-work only' may be briefly dismissed. A large proportion of these men are elderly or otherwise infirm; a few are pensioners (e.g. retired police or service men); very few indeed are fully occupied in the agricultural work of their crofts, thus 'full-time crofters' is a misnomer in this area.

464
288

The most important category, in all districts, is 'croft-work and weaving', but it is relatively far less important in the south where there is correspondingly greater reliance on other forms of regular employment or on periodic work, i.e. casual labour.* It is difficult to overestimate the significance of weaving in all districts. It is the only substantial source of income in the parish and it should be clear from the previous chapter that weaving is not an ancillary occupation to croft work except in a few cases in the south. The weavers are not 'crofter-weavers' so much as 'weaver-crofters'. A curious distinction between Carloway and the rest of the parish is that, whereas generally weaving is young mens' work, the great majority being under 45, in the Carloway area two-thirds of the weavers are over 45. The historical reason for this may be the earlier spread of weaving into Carloway than elsewhere for, although some weaving has always been done throughout the area, it only became a major source of employment south of Carloway in the last 20 years or so. Thus few of the older men in the south learned weaving when they were young. A corollary is greater dependance on the Merchant Navy as a source of employment for young men from Carloway than for those from the south.

464

Other sources of regular local employment are lobster fishing (Bernera only), gamekeeping and other estate work (Bernera shore and South Uig), and government establishments (South Uig). In addition there are the usual services - postmen, haulage contractors,

* For a detailed discussion of the significance of weaving see Moisley, H. A., Harris Tweed - a growing Highland industry. Economic Geography, 37, 1961, pages 353 - 370.

TEXT CONTINUES ON PAGE 152

5: Caird et al. K-5 (1958) 1959 ES10 Highland Park

162
233
311
462
463
887

TABLE IV

OCCUPATIONS AND AGES OF CROFT WORKER

RELATED TO INTENSITY OF STOCKING

(Figures in brackets are percentages)

	PERCENTAGE OF SOUMING TAKEN UP			TOTAL[1]
Labour Force	50% or less	50 - 100%	Over 100%
Full-time Croft Worker	8 (17)	16 (33)	24 (50)	48 (100)
Croft Worker with Regular Employment	8 (16)	18 (35)	25 (49)	51 (100)
Croft Worker with Periodic Employment	2 (20)	3 (30)	5 (50)	10 (100)
Croft Worker aged 65 and over	2 (9)	8 (36)	12 (55)	22 (100)
Woman Croft Worker	5 (50)	3 (30)	2 (20)	10 (100)
Total	25 (17)	48 (34)	68 (49)	141 (100)

1. It is not possible to relate all units for this purpose as some units have no souming, and in other cases the unit is worked by more than one person: such units have been omitted from the table.

/p. 8-B/

162 weaving and fishing, the fall in population would probably [167] be small, if any, in 1941. This fall in the total figure was [168] not so much a decrease in the number of families as in the number per family. The Island was only then following the restriction of population begun half a century before in the rest of Protestant Britain, though the causes, social and economic, are very dissimilar. Actually, little did occur to change either the rural situation or that of Stornoway, until the outbreak of war in 1939.

162 Since 1931 there had been no real decrease: Lewis is 178 a land of house-building, not of ruin and abandonment;
369 of increase of holdings, not diminution, and even of agri-
[657] cultural improvement. No doubt 'artificial' causes were at work: first, loans, grants and unemployment insurance
[593] and assistance—once known as 'the dole'—and, secondly, the money sent to elderly parents and dependants at home
• [888] by young folk in Glasgow or abroad, or savings brought back by the young people themselves. Yet there is some [226] fishing and agriculture still. Above all, 'hand-weaving'
[241] has grown, even if this be partly 'artificial'. Recently it was not only the elders who had returned to the Island, but [286] men and women in the prime of life, so that the question of resources, livelihood and population in Lewis needs to be re-examined afresh.

167 The emigration which took place from 1949 to 1951
[464] followed directly upon the losses and the unemployment
[651] in the Island's Harris tweed industry. This crisis resulted from the imposition in 1949 of a Purchase Tax on hand-[162] woven Harris tweed of 666 per cent. If the tax had been maintained and no adequate adjustment made, the effects on population would have been far-reaching.

175 and all was well. . . . 'How the trinkets in the water
844 could affect the case', continued the nurse, 'I do not 788 know, but that some occult power was at work . . . I am certain.'"[1] As to the gold, did not the Magi offer the 844 same 'magic' at the Nativity? Is a drink of water not the simplest physic to cool a fevered system? Is not each 788 Name of the Trinity, breathed by a mother to her daughter in labour in her turn, a Word of tender power and courage: while the slow rhythm of the three Names may calm the wild heart-beats which had brought on haemorrhage, and lead to safe delivery?

771 Throughout life there prevailed the concept of God as 'encompassing' man, woman or child, old or young, in their weakness. This image is ancient, and is found in the Psalms (10, 12, 32, 142). So long as faith were alive the Lord's aid might be called upon for another in need of help, or for one's own protection. To clarify the concept, unseen, by help of a thing seen, a circle was drawn with the hand round oneself or another, in fear, danger or distress.[2] By such innocent aid the people strengthened confidence in sickness and resistance in temptation, and concentrated prayer for delivery from evil.

• 888 As age approached, its gifts were honoured. For in age, memory, kneaded by labour, is leavened by leisure; the experience won on land and sea, or in group-farm and home, can be weighed. And gifts of feeling, sown in childhood and growing through life, ripen as grandchildren come in from their herding or play to listen and learn.
[538] When manuscripts or books were unobtainable, readings rarely heard, and the people illiterate, teaching could only be given by ear and learning come by heart. Hence elders were the holders of an inheritance of treasures which must be sought from them or be lost for ever. But to be transmitted, the word must remain alive in the mind. Thus both the faculty of memory and the fruit it bore in an elder's mind brought respect, even veneration. Accuracy in retelling is still immensely valued, but so, too, were thoughtful commentary and poetic enrichment. Respect for elders, though general, was not given blindly, but personally and by choice.

[1] Carmina, vol. iv, p. 283.
[2] Carmina, vol. ii, Notes; cf. Nos. 248-250, etc. Encircling or circuiting symbolically, was also known by a word of which only the literal meaning is now known to most: cuartachadh.

As handed down, the Fifth Commandment runs: "Honour thy parents and hold them in loving regard" (Striochd dha do pharantan 's thoir speis dhaibh).[1] The community was pervaded by the Christian concept of a Holy Family, rather than by that of a patriarchate. This concept took root from the first missions to the Celtic community, with which it harmonised and which formed fertile ground for this Christian seed. Hence there was no general assertion of paternal, still less of patriarchal, authority at the expense of youth. Where equal honour is due to both parents, the mother finds equal duty and regard with the father. And although the father's home is close at hand while the mother's may be a little distance away, her parents are likely to be the younger and the more active and helpful to their grandchildren, and the influence of all four grandparents fairly balanced.

The patriarchs Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are named in a hymn of the Lews, sung when going up with the flocks and herds to the shielings; even this may be a Presbyterian adaptation (Carmina). But until the overwhelming weight of the Old Testament made itself felt, as in Lewis-and-Harris in the nineteenth century, this narrower patriarchal example hardly affected thought.[1] Rooted in a wider form of family than a patriarchate, and reverencing a Holy Family and all fellowship, Gaelic society honoured age and parenthood for their inheritance, and childhood and youth for their promise.

[1] Rev. Allan Macdonald, p. 62, Na Faintean. The omission of the Mosaic paternal precedence may be a courtesy to motherhood implying equality in parenthood.

Such ideals of human relationship led to the veneration of the Saints of the Gospels and of later history, and also of those of legend, especially Bride. Dedications to Bride or 'Bridget' are widespread from Wales to the Lews; yet her memory has been all but lost in Britain, except in the Isles. Carmichael wrote that "Bride and her services" are dear to the hearts of the people. She is called "Bride of the white feet . . . of calmness . . . of the kine; woman-comrade . . . and woman-helper . . ." "I am in the keeping of my Saint Mary: My companion beloved is Bride" (Carmina, Nos. 70-71; 263-264). As joy, steadfastness and attainment are generally linked to one notable stage in the life of each 'holy companion', the example, aid and fellowship of each saint in turn was especially sought, at a corresponding stage or crisis of one's own life.

The Gael's veneration for saintly men and women was shared by Catholic peasantry throughout Christendom; but its special quality seems to have been closeness of

[1] Clanship has repeatedly been said to be 'patriarchal', as an ideal and a system. A different conclusion, that community is the root of clanship (even in its political forms), may come as a surprise. The English or Lowland reader has had access only to the writings of strangers such as Burt. Not knowing Gaelic, these derived their information from Highland speakers of English who, deliberately or unconsciously, were biased by ranking as chief or gentry, and not unnaturally explained their position as patriarchal. Thus strangers ignored the co-parental life of farm-groups and townships, economically humble but spiritually rich, as the root of a clan-community.

In the absence of terms for in-laws, these relatives are simply referred to as the husband's or wife's kin. Hence, structurally the extended family on Skye is comparable to the Irish system,[19] and, obviously, is dissimilar to our bilateral family structure.

Because the extended family is so very unstable, it is difficult to describe it functionally. There was a time when the people were divided into three communities of fate, the members of which were bound together by the bonds of real and fictitious kinship. Today individuals whose remote ancestors stood together in defense of their homes may not have seen their brothers in many years. The material I gathered allows only two generalizations. Any member of the extended family is always free to call upon his kinsmen for help or, at least, hospitality in need; and the closest surviving relatives always know their obligations and are ready to fulfill them. Thus, the family is a mutual aid group. The primary responsibilities of the kin are to see that all have food, shelter, and a proper burial.

There are additional social circles in the crofting community. The youth, young adults, and the aged are divided into age grades. Of these, the age grade of the old men is especially important. They control the economic progress of the island by their deliberative function concerning any innovation in the crofting system. Whether it is a suggested [19] Cf. Arensberg and Kimball, op. cit., pp. 79-85.

[20] Cf. Talcott Parsons, "The Kinship System of the Contempor United States," American Anthropologist, XLV (January-March, 1943), pp. 22-38.

pend upon the women of Skye. 000

e Spare-time Crofter. Under this type we must include not 231 ly the able-bodied, married man who tends to become a full- 241 me wage earner, but also the old, pensioned, married and 887 married men and women who are no longer able to perform
e necessary chores. For the latter, whether they have a all or medium-sized croft, the croft becomes a means of ving within a pension rather than a potential source of velihood. For the former, the croft becomes a means of ving cheaply.

When the crofter goes out to work, he either tends to 231
glect the croft or expects his wife to manage it. Oc- 241 sionally, the husband will help with the ploughing or the 593 rvest in the evening, but he never lends his wife a helping 462 nd in her domestic duties. The only men on the island that knew who helped their wives with the dishes or the care of e children, except disciplinary measures, were a minister om the Outer Isles and several Lowlanders in Portree. Since [312]
ry few crofters have plumbing, the wife must fetch water om a well and dispose of waste in the nearest stream. If ere is to be a supply of peats, she must cut them. If ere are cattle and sheep, she looks after them. Lambing
y be left to the township shepherd if the crofters can afford e, and shearing is usually left to the men of the township.
exceptional spinster or widow may shear, but it is indeed unusual married woman who will break with the traditional

621 from the ways handed down from the past. We might note at this 632 time that even the progressive crofter is not always quite en
626 rapport with modern techniques. There was, for example, a man 232 with two calves infested with liver fluke. Convinced that 178 medicine was the only solution, and equally convinced that a person cannot believe everything he reads, he obtained a bottle of liver fluke medicine which was plainly marked: "for sheep only." When asked how his calves responded to the treatment, he responded, "Och, they both died."

632 Because of the restrictions which the township system
621 imposes, there has been a growing, perceptible rumble of 626 agitation for supplanting unanimous consent with majority rule.
178 Few, however, would go as far as a retired seaman who returned to Skye after forty years. He would like to see the township system abolished. Another small group believe the Sgiathanach would be better off if the Island were given over to communal farms. Most seem to favor the continuation of the present system. Of course, the majority is composed of the conservative old men.

The Aged and the Absentee Crofter

241 No appraisal of the crofting system is complete without 427 a discussion of two additional factors which have affected the 887 use of the land and the present unsatisfactory economic condition
888 of the Island. One of the factors is the aged tenant, who,
311 as we have just seen, exercises a strong control over the younger men through township government. He has also influenced

241 the economy by subjecting many fertile acres to disuse because 427 of his infirmity. The other factor is the absentee tenant, 887 an individual who has obtained possession of a croft, normally
888 by inheritance, but who has failed to take up his inalienable
311 rights of tenancy. Let us very briefly review the economic [128] trends of the last fifty odd years and, then, try to assess the importance of the absent and the aged.

436 Although the Sgiathanach has refused to become a 433 specialist, fully involved in a money economy, he has become 241 increasingly dependent on the products of the wider commercial
178 society. Long ago he gave up growing the old staples, barley
439 and oats. Not for many years has he grown enough potatoes or turnips to feed himself and his cattle. In place of these home grown subsistence crops, he now imports a great deal of his food. In an average year Skye imports over 700 tons of bread, 10 tons of vegetables, 300 tons of canned goods, 300 tons of potatoes, 500 tons of flour, and 100 tons of milk. To pay for these products, he exports cattle, once his only marketable produce, and an ever increasing number of sheep.

436 Hance, writing about the Outer Hebrides, sees the growing 241 tendency of the crofters to buy their food as indicative of an
233 increasing cash income.[16] To a certain extent, this may be 439 true. There are, however, additional factors involved. Ecological limitations have played their role. That the climate and soil together make Skye a grassland suitable for stock breeding rather than an island fit for cultivation is an often repeated

[16] Hance, The Outer Hebrides in Relation to Highland Depopulation, p. 82.

436 belief. Since agriculture is a poor risk in the best of years, 241 the present tendency to use more and more of the land for grass
233 and hay can be regarded as a more complete adjustment to the 439 environment. The partial involvement in the outside contractual world encouraged and made possible the change. The same reasoning applies to stock production, including the declining number of horses, cattle, and, especially, dairy cows. The exports, obviously, reflect market demands. A couple of [262] crofters have unsuccessfully tried market gardening. The Sgiathanach is not a vegetable eater, and the commercial establishments, apparently, find a more dependable supply 436 elsewhere. A few crofters do sell potatoes in Portree, but 241 they will not compete with the large, east coast potato 432 farmer. In 1953, as soon as the price fell below the pre-season high, the crofters decided it was not worth the trouble 437 to dig the tubers for sale. The same held true for eggs.
436 Many crofters barter eggs with the food vans which serve the 235 rural areas for tea and meat. When the Scottish market was glutted in the summer of 1953, the crofters refused to trade at lower prices. They preferred to obtain their protein from the eggs, believing that the spring egg prices were the fair prices. For the sake of emphasis, I repeat, the involvement of the Sgiathanach in the world of commerce is only partial. Finally, in accounting for these changing economic trends, the aged and the absentee crofter must be taken into account.

• 887 The old people frequently cannot work their crofts or 241 cannot use them fully. The age at which the work becomes too

• 887 arduous is difficult to determine. In the winter of 1953, I 241 helped a small crofter thrash oats, a cooperative enterprise
[23] even with a mechanical thrasher, supplied by the Department of Agriculture. The neighbors who came over to lend a hand were two men and three women. The youngest woman would never see fifty again; her seniors were seventy-seven and seventy-eight. The youngest man, who had just been married, was sixty-three; the other seventy-three. These crofters not only showed more endurance than I did, but put me to shame by carrying the sacks of grain from the field to the byre [76] at the end of the day. Nevertheless, most of those over seventy, about 15 percent of the population, do not make use 887 of the land for more than growing a few potatoes. An old 231 man cannot keep a cow because, as one man said, "You can't 462 have a cow unless you have a woman to milk it." If he is married or lives with a sister, there may be a cow and a couple of sheep. An old woman may have her cow and sheep if she is strong enough. There comes a time, however, when all the old people will only remember the work involved. Still, they will say, "Och, but they were good for all that."

427 Absentee tenants are responsible for depopulation on 241 the one hand and falling production on the other. A reasonable 161 estimate would be 300. Their number could be as high as 400.
[433] Some townships have over 50 percent of the crofters absentee. The only townships which do not have this problem are the few which contain large crofts. On one small estate there are seventy-six crofts, held by seventy-two crofters. Only thirty

427 of the holders reside on their land for more than half the
241 year. The lowest rate of absenteeism is found among the tenants
162 of the Department of Agriculture. There are 76 absentees out of a total of 667 tenants. Most of the non-resident crofters are permanently absent. On the small estate mentioned above thirty-seven of the forty-two absentees have not been seen in years. Five of them usually return to Skye to spend their summer vacation.

427 Thus, we have a situation in which, perhaps, a third 241 of the crofts are held by people who either cannot work them
311 because of old age or infirmity, or do not choose to work
887 them because of greater opportunities elsewhere. What, then, happens to this land? Some of the old people allow a neighbor to use the land. Almost invariably this means the few fertile acres will be used for grass and hay. Absentees "entrust" the [67] croft, house and land, to a landless family. While Parliament inadvertently gave the crofter a right to keep his holding whether he resided on it or not, it is illegal to sublet. So far, this has not concerned the crofters. Other absentees "entrust" the land to someone in the township who uses it for grass.

427 Turning to the influence of old age and absenteeism on 887 stocking, we find a series of entanglements. If the township is 231 inhabited solely by old people, like Aird in Sleat, the township becomes derelict. More commonly, the absentee and the old person allows someone else to take over his "souming" so [82] that some crofters have far more than their share. Not infrequently, this gives the crofter a chance to outwit that

Table III reveals that there are 177 agricultural units with a souming; ten units are crofts in Glengravir without a souming and the remainder of the 219 units have no grazing rights. From this Table, it is clear that full stocking and overstocking increase with the size of the croft: the units of ten acres and over, on the basis of stock carry, would appear to be the most intensively worked. In all, just over half of the units take up their full souming. Table IV gives an analysis of employment ancillary to croft work for 141 of the 219 units and it would appear that neither ancillary employment nor age is significantly related to the intensity of croft working. Table V points to the fact that more full-time crofters are to be found on the larger units but that less than one in four of the younger and more active men are full-time crofters. Tables III, IV and V underline the fact that the larger units are also the more successful and it is significant that the larger units are almost all on the better land in the agricultural townships. The average size of holding in the agricultural townships is nine acres, compared with less than eight acres in the fishing townships, where the land is much poorer and the cultivable area much more restricted.

The trends in agriculture are illustrated by Tables VI and VII. The Crofters' Commission made a survey of the crofts through the medium of Estate Factors in 1883; from Table VI it is evident that the number of cattle was much higher at that time and that the cattle-sheep ratio in the selected townships was 1:3 as compared with 1:25 in 1958. Table VII gives agricultural statistics for the parish of Lochs as a whole; separate figures for Park are not available. Since 1913, radical changes in the crop and stock patterns have taken place; bere (Hordeum vulgare) has disappeared as a crop, and sown grass and permanent grass for hay have since 1947 become the leading crops. Horses have all but disappeared, and the cattle-sheep ratio has risen from less than 1:4 to 1:39 for the whole parish. Since 1938, cultivation in Lochs Parish has declined by 36 per cent. Large areas of lazy-beds, no longer cultivated, are visible landscape signs of these changes; seaweed, the sine quae non for lazybed cultivation, is no longer carried to the upper part of the crofts. In fact, many of the crofts no longer use seaweed as a fertiliser.

From the foregoing account, it is clear that there are two major agricultural problems in Park: the lack of sufficiently large crofts with good arable land and an insufficiency of common grazing; these deficiences bring in their train the problem of overstocking, and the existence of uneconomic holdings.

The more progressive crofters, significantly resident on the better crofts of the agricultural townships, have shown how croft land can be improved by re-seeding and sowing down to grass, practices which could be fruitfully extended throughout Park. In addition, several townships by co-operative effort, have reseeded small areas of the commons grazings with splendid results.

However it is clear that it is not possible for 219 viable agricultural units to be maintained on the present crofting area. The optimum size of croft which could maintain a family is a moot point, for the location and situation of a croft and the quality of the land and common pasture would all have to be taken into account in making an assessment.

This problem was referred to a practical agriculturalist who was asked to state what size of croft and number of stock would be required to provide an annual income of £300, excluding croft benefit (milk, eggs and potatoes consumed on the croft) and any costing for labour. To fulfil these conditions, one of the fishing townships was carefully analysed, and the expert came to the following approximations, assuming that the rules of good husbandry were in force after the croft had been brought up to a good standard of cultivation and re-seeding had been carried out where possible on the outrun and Common Pasture, and provided there was no overstocking, and that present favourable subsidies and prices continue:-

427 511 than the bare essentials, these people just get along. Even so, they would be unable to get by were it not for some form of [464] [651] supplementary income. This essential prerequisite for the individual or family who upholds the crofting tradition may take the form of seasonal employment on the island or away from home; contributions from a child or, less frequently, a brother or sister; or payments from the government in the form of unemployment compensation, relief, or a pension.

427 181 Many a Sgiathanach thinks of his croft as a home more than anything else. There are men who have found full time employment. Some in this catagory work the croft in the evening. Others expect their wives to care for the crops [887] and stock, or they leave the land untouched. Then, there are the old men and women who have returned to their an- [167] cestral homes to spend the twilight of their lives. These exiles come back from cities as near as Inverness and from places as far away as the sheep ranches of Montana or the cities of Australia. Perhaps, the most significant point is that for all Skyemen the croft cannot be evaluated merely in terms of acreage and income. As we shall see, it is a way of life in which an attachment to the land, as an embodiment of kinship, plays a very important part.

427 511 The incomes of three representative crofts clearly reveal the financial difficulties under which the crofting family labors. Although I have somewhat arbitrarily divided the holdings into small, medium and large on the basis of acres of arable land, it should be remembered that this

427 887 231 829 rich man, the government." Since subsidies depend on the number of stock, he may forget that all or part of his "souming" has been given away. One old crofter, for example, a few years ago asked a young lady to fill out his agricultural return. She knew his estimates gave a great deal of reason to doubt his veracity, but, preferring not to question the point, she entered his figures. When it came time to sign the report, he was canny. "Och," he said, "just put a tremble in your hand and sign it yourself." There are other crofters who puzzle the authorities by returning the same number of cattle and sheep year after year. Although even the best crofters and farmers lose a few sheep and an occasional cow, they insist [628] that their stock has produced as many as have been sold. As a means of protecting the government from paying for non-existent stock, the police have to be notified when the annual stock counts are to be made. Even when they do supervise the counting, allowances for stragglers have to be made.

654 427 888 So pernicious is the effect of non-residence and decrepit crofts, that a recent government commission has recommended the severance of the house from the land in the case of the aged and the eviction of the absentee, as a means of bolstering the economy and alleviating the widespread condition of bad husbandry.[17] This could be the final blow for the culture. Not 427 888 uncommonly, the croft is subjected to both absenteeism and the infirmity of old age. The heir does not return until he has passed the age of retirement and begins to think, "It would be

[17] Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Crofting

554 by leaving, for if he fails to conform to the traditional norms and patterns of behavior, he will be locked upon as an eccentric. This fact has continuity through all periods of Skye's history.

554 178 We have already seen how the age and sex structure of the population has changed in response to social and economic conditions and how this change has influenced the ascription of statuses within the crofters' division of labor. Briefly, there has been a contraction of the number of opportunities [462] for ascribing status. This had made it necessary for some men to perform tasks once the exclusive domain of women and for women to participate in activities which formerly were the [887] responsibility of their men folk. Older people must now function in ways which once were the responsibilities of the youth and young adults. These changes, however, have been accompanied by persistencies, in particular a continuity of basic status values. I think this will become clear through a discussion of the family structure. We shall begin with the nuclear family.

554 554 [121] The Nuclear Family. Since my interest is in status, I shall adopt the unorthodox procedure of considering the nuclear family in terms of the changing status of the individual members from birth to maturity. This will give us a dynamic picture of family life. At birth the individual's relationships within the crofting family and, to a lesser degree, within the township are established. Like those of his parents, who now have the ascribed statuses of mother and father, his relationships will remain unchanged until he marries and founds

554 626 829 New Zealanders breed sheep and make linen. One might say he knew more about the world than about Skye. He could not understand why so many people made fun of him when he was only trying to help.

626 632 In the absence of any traditionally valued status and role of leadership, administration of the common interests of the township members is the concern of all. We say in the last chapter that primitive democracy is the guiding rule. Each crofter has an equal voice in deciding any question which affects the group and all, without exception, have to agree before any action is taken. Consent is expressed by silence. Typically, the crofters will have talked the [624] matter over among themselves beforehand. At such times the fact clearly emerges that the grazing clerk and the grazing committee are no more than figureheads required by law. They have no coercive or disciplinary powers. In any group situation, their views are taken no more seriously than those of any other man.

887 888 626 632 It is the old men who gather at one anothers' homes or on the hill on a summer evening to weigh the innovation which the youth want introduced. If they find the change acceptable, they approve it at a meeting of the township by keeping silent. If they believe it will upset the communal system, they disapprove it. The dissenting voice of one old crofter is all that is required to maintain the conservative patterns, economically and socially.

182 626 In summary, we may say that within the township and on the croft the cultural patterns reveal a fundamental continuity. As of old, status is ascribed. Men have remained

888

888 STATUS AND TREATMENT OF THE AGED--cultural definition and explanation of old age; idealized and derogatory evaluations of old age; conception of the ideal old man and old woman; symbols and synonyms for age and longevity; prerogatives and disabilities of the aged; special exemptions (e.g., from legal sanctions, from taboos); etiquette toward the aged; treatment of the aged (e.g., exploitation, neglect, obedience, respect); support of the aged (e.g., investments, fees for services, annuities, pensions, assistance from relatives); care of the aged; customs of abandoning and killing the aged; etc. See also:

Investment 454
Insurance and annuities 456
Age stratification 561
Etiquette 576
Status of widows 589
Family relationships 599
Polygamy 596
Legal liability 672
Incidence and relief of old age dependency . . 737
Social insurance 745
Last favors before death 765

592 unmarried sibling. Eleven households consist only of siblings who have never married, men and women who in 1971 were 45 years old or older. Two widows live with [589] their unmarried siblings. Sixteen widows or widowers live alone, and sixteen unmarried persons live alone.

241 The large number of households occupied by single, 592 elderly people reflects the use of the croft as a place 423 of residence rather than as an agricultural unit, a 671 • 888 view of the croft that was given legal expression in [428] 1968 by the Miscellaneous Provisions Act. Before 1968, the croft went automatically to the eldest son if a crofter died intestate. Since 1968, the rights of different claimants must be considered and tenancy by a new person must be confirmed. District and county councillors argued for this change, saying that a widow was often left on the croft and her security endangered because the eldest son was usually far away from the island, in Canada or some other country. In other words, rather than an agricultural unit which should naturally be taken over and worked by the male head of the household, the croft is seen as a place of residence for the infirm and for the aged, and especially for the aged female.

657 185 423 888 311 The Crofters Commission has suggested that elderly people be allowed to rent small plots of land on which

657 their houses are located, and that most of the land be 185 freed for use by more active crofters, but the ideology 423 • 888 associated with possession of the croft makes such a 311 plan extremely difficult to implement. "The croft is your base, the only thing you have. You don't want it taken away, even if someone else is using it already anyway. Our county councillor suggested amalgamating the unused crofts at a recent meeting. No one said anything, but no one wants it."

592 Of the five households that have the use of three 241 crofts each, one consists of a bachelor who uses the 311 crofts for grazing a large number of sheep. A second household is composed of two brothers who had stayed at home to take care of their aged parents. One of these brothers recently married, after the last parent died. These men keep cattle and sheep, and both weave.

592 A third household is headed by a married man who 241 has recently sold most of his livestock in order to 311 "concentrate on the weaving." His father, who used to 288 haul peat with a horse and cart in exchange for the use of grazing land so that his family never had to go to the sheilings, died a few years ago. "My father was a crofter only. The weaving didn't start until the 30's. He was wounded in the war. He got a pension and sold a cow or a few sheep each year. But I didn't

621 The first thing that is said when for some reason 513 a woman is left alone in the house is, "Who's going to 858 go and sleep with her?" Often a child will be sent from a neighboring family, not always relatives, to stay with 621 her at night. As in the past, it is not uncommon for 592 a childless elderly couple or single person alone on a • 888 croft to take in a young, homeless couple, to whom they may or may not be related. The young couple cares for the old person or persons, and inherits the croft when they die.

602 "Keeping up the relation" is the process by which 476 relatives sustain interaction and expectations of mutual aid even though their relatedness becomes more distant 605 with succeeding generations. "I've got cousins in Ness that I stay with at the Communions. They're getting on into the third generation now." A cousin is a cousin even to the 42nd degree (Williams 1963: 142), as long as there is reason to sustain the relationship. "I know we're related, but I can't quite place it." "We're a bit related. I think she was a MacPhail before she married." "I don't quite know how we're related, but my mother and his mother considered it a close relationship, and he has kept it up."

621 Every villager has a vast amount of information 626 about other villagers and their families, which may be 582

*159 guard in a shipyard. A brother and sister married into crofts within the village, and another sister married a mainlander whom she met at a dance while working in • [888] domestic service. Cailean and a younger brother stayed together after the war, looking after their aged parents.

"The war was the biggest even in my life. I spent six and a half of the best years of my life fighting for survival. During wartime you had no future. That's where most of the men learned to drink. When you got into a port, you drank like hell. You got lectured on VD, but you knew you were going to die anyway. The only thing you lived for was sleep. You spent 24 hours on duty, keyed up and waiting for the enemy to come. When you got off duty the bombs could be screaming around you, but you slept. You got greedy. You were hungry for anything. So when you got into port on leave, you did everything for excitement. I spent one of my leaves recovering from a motorcycle accident. There's nothing to think about here; so I keep on the move, after sheep on the moor, or repairing things. It keeps me occupied. It keeps me from drinking."

Cailean was well skilled in electrical repair work, and earned trade papers during his military service. Toward the end of the war he was working in South Africa, with full intentions of staying permanently. "But I threw

nly because there are enough young people to form a strong 571 184 554 888 grade of their own. The more liberal outlook of the ingers is, however, tempered by the old men.

Religion

The attachment to the past embodied in the social and 771
nomic aspects of the culture carries over into the religious of the Sgiathanach. He is a Presbyterian who continues 715 orship and view the world within a pattern which characzed the Scots of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.
doctrine and theology are derived from the teachings of in as interpreted by John Knox and refined by the Covenanters he seventeenth century. To the original ethical code rong measure of influence from the English Puritan move-has been added. The guiding principles are still fore-nation and election. The dominant motivating factor is [785] icism.

One of the outstanding features of the island today is 348 715
large number of churches for such a limited population.
erve the 8,600 people there are 21 churches with ministers 3 mission stations. A hundred years ago, when the [178] ation was almost triple the present number, there were seven ministers on Skye. The present abundance is the out- 715 of a series of religious schisms of the past century.
are now four Presbyterian sects. Of all the neighbor- [184]
on Skye, only Glendale is religiously homogeneous.

behavior which have given the individual and the culture their 781
ability to continue in spite of social instability and acute 182 economic hardship. In many respects, the Skyemen's religion is strikingly similar to that of the Welshmen.[23]

The status of the father within the nuclear family has 182
been maintained, despite changing economic roles which might 771 [888]
have led to a loss of prestige, by his religious sanction.
The aged men of the community, in particular the elders, the [888] elected lay kirk officers, have been able to continue to exercise stringent control over their families and neighbors. In [542] a negative way, the socially inferior status of the women has been maintained by debarring them from active roles in the church. In religious activity the people find meaningful patterns of interaction. The small congregations, rarely over 300 people, give the Skyemen a sense of belonging. In the [542] home the practice of daily worship intensifies family interaction. Above all, at the semi-annual communion celebrations, 182
highly emotional meetings which partake much of revivalism, 771 781
the people find solidarity. As each church in turn celebrates [571]
the Lord's Supper, the people from the neighboring churches of the same sect come to share one to five days of worshipping together and renewing their ties of friendship. At the daily church services the people meet and hear visiting ministers of their sect and the eminent Men, members of the elect, from other parts of the island. The identical pattern is found in Wales where the intense patterns of interaction center around the singing festivals.[24]

[23] Rees, op. cit., pp. 114-130.

[24] Ibid., pp. 129-130.

In Claigan, for example, the crofters felt they would do 234
better with private flocks than with a club stock. Although 476 178
each man now has his own sheep on the township grazing, they are cared for like any club stock. The four crofters are needed for success at the dippings, marking, and shearing,
and they are always at the fank on these occasions. In larger 234 townships, those with ten or more holdings, the need for all 476
the crofters to help out at the fank is less pressing while 621 632
the felt need for auxiliary employment is stronger. In consequence, the cooperative work habits run less smoothly. In an attempt at adjustment, many townships have resorted to paying the share holders for their labor from the profits.
To the best of my knowledge, only one township has witnessed
the total suppression of the cooperative spirit; all the crofters are too busy with full-time employment to bother with
the steadily declining sheep stock.

Nevertheless, it has become commonplace for the crofters [824]
to complain of at least one individual in the township who does not pull his full share, someone who is "trying to sabotage the whole thing."

Independence is a personality trait, but it is best 157
described as a steadfast determination not to conform for the 476 829
mere sake of conformity when an innovation handed down from 888
the outside commercial world is at stake. The old ways are the best ways, even if only the old men think so. It is the old men who uphold the traditional practices. As long as they do,
and as long as unanimous consent is required for any change,

157 the Highlander will be "independent." As for being "just not 476 cooperative," what the critic really means is that the crofter 829 is unable to cooperate in the ways city people or more sophisti-888 cated farmers do. The cooperative movement has come to Skye, but it was not a local venture. The Scottish Cooperative and Wholesale Society opened its shops, without shareholders. The distinction between the crofters' simple cooperation and sophisticated cooperation, including capital investment, does not invariably hold.[11] There are sheep stock clubs. Government loans, of course, provided the initial capital.

476 In dealing with the topic of cooperation, as any part 621 of the economic aspect of the culture of the Sgiathanach, 632 the basic importance of the township again and again emerges.
Only a few crofts exist apart from a township. A more detailed analysis of the township system and the pressures it imposes on the crofter is, therefore, in order.

The Township

621 The efficient unit in the local economy is the township, 632 the modern equivalent of the joint-tenants' and tacksmen's farms. Each township consists of a variable number of individual holdings, the low-lying arable and improved grass land held under hereditary tenure, and a more or less extensive area of rough, unimproved hill grazing held in common. The common, concurrent right of each crofter to use the hill grazing under the "souming" principle gives the township its focus.

[11] Cf. Darling and Morley, loc. cit.

621 from the ways handed down from the past. We might note at this
632 time that even the progressive crofter is not always quite en
621 rapport with modern techniques. There was, for example, a man 232 with two calves infested with liver fluke. Convinced that 178 medicine was the only solution, and equally convinced that a person cannot believe everything he reads, he obtained a bottle of liver fluke medicine which was plainly marked: "for sheep only." When asked how his calves responded to the treatment, he responded, "Och, they both died."

632 Because of the restrictions which the township system
621 imposes, there has been a growing, perceptible rumble of 632 agitation for supplanting unanimous consent with majority rule.
178
Few, however, would go as far as a retired seaman who returned to Skye after forty years. He would like to see the township system abolished. Another small group believe the Sgiathanach would be better off if the Island were given over to communal farms. Most seem to favor the continuation of the present system. Of course, the majority is composed of the conservative old men.

The Aged and the Absentee Crofter

241 No appraisal of the crofting system is complete without 437 a discussion of two additional factors which have affected the 881
888 use of the land and the present unsatisfactory economic condition 311 of the Island. One of the factors is the aged tenant, who, as we have just seen, exercises a strong control over the younger men through township government. He has also influenced

241 the economy by subjecting many fertile acres to disuse because 427 of his infirmity. The other factor is the absentee tenant,
887 an individual who has obtained possession of a croft, normally
888 by inheritance, but who has failed to take up his inalienable
311 [128] rights of tenancy. Let us very briefly review the economic trends of the last fifty odd years and, then, try to assess the importance of the absent and the aged.

436 Although the Sgiathanach has refused to become a 433 specialist, fully involved in a money economy, he has become 241 increasingly dependent on the products of the wider commercial
178 society. Long ago he gave up growing the old staples, barley
439 and oats. Not for many years has he grown enough potatoes or turnips to feed himself and his cattle. In place of these home grown subsistence crops, he now imports a great deal of his food. In an average year Skye imports over 700 tons of bread, 10 tons of vegetables, 300 tons of canned goods, 300 tons of potatoes, 500 tons of flour, and 100 tons of milk. To pay for these products, he exports cattle, once his only marketable produce, and an ever increasing number of sheep.

436 Hance, writing about the Outer Hebrides, sees the growing 241 tendency of the crofters to buy their food as indicative of an
233 increasing cash income.[16] To a certain extent, this may be 439 true. There are, however, additional factors involved. Ecological limitations have played their role. That the climate and soil together make Skye a grassland suitable for stock breeding rather than an island fit for cultivation is an often repeated

[16] Hance, The Outer Hebrides in Relation to Highland Depopulation, p. 82.

427 "rich man, the government." Since subsidies depend on the 887 number of stock, he may forget that all or part of his "souming"
231 has been given away. One old crofter, for example, a few years
829 ago asked a young lady to fill out his agricultural return. She knew his estimates gave a great deal of reason to doubt his veracity, but, preferring not to question the point, she entered his figures. When it came time to sign the report, he was canny. "Och," he said, "just put a tremble in your hand and sign it yourself." There are other crofters who puzzle the authorities by returning the same number of cattle and sheep year after year. Although even the best crofters and farmers lose a few sheep and an occasional cow, they insist [625] that their stock has produced as many as have been sold. As a means of protecting the government from paying for non-existent stock, the police have to be notified when the annual stock counts are to be made. Even when they do supervise the counting, allowances for stragglers have to be made.

654 So pernicious is the effect of non-residence and decrepit
427 crofts, that a recent government commission has recommended the 888 severance of the house from the land in the case of the aged and the eviction of the absentee, as a means of bolstering the economy and alleviating the widespread condition of bad
427 husbandry.[17] This could be the final blow for the culture. Not 888 uncommonly, the croft is subjected to both absenteeism and the infirmity of old age. The heir does not return until he has passed the age of retirement and begins to think, "It would be

[17] Report of the Commission of Enquiry into Crofting Conditions, pp. 42-43, 46-47, 66.

427 fine to go home to Skye to die." I might add, "and to live on 888 a pension."

427 It is not only the tenant crofters who are non-resident.
423 About 20 percent of the owner-occupiers in Glendale are non-resident. Only two townships have no derelict crofts. Those who have sublet their homes and land have an additional problem. Apparently unaware of the full implications of the Small Landholders legislation, they have received a rude awakening. The people whom they thought were their subtenants are, in the eyes of the Land Court, crofters entitled to security of tenure.

511 One reason for absenteeism, as for emigration, is a 427 felt need for a higher standard of living than the croft can [178] provide. This desire, common to almost all European peasants, as well as American farmers, has assumed increasing importance with the extension of communication and education. The outstanding exception in Europe is Italy. There the métayer population has increased markedly since World War I. Today 92 percent in the métayer category have a substandard livelihood, judged in terms of sheer necessity.[18] Only 800,000 families out of 5,000,000 have enough land to meet subsistence needs. The difference between the European peasant and the American farmer is that the American lacks any traditional [18] Information from the files of the Italian Statistical Institute, as reported in the Glasgow Herald, Feb. 22, 1954.

554 New Zealanders breed sheep and make linen. One might say he 626 knew more about the world than about Skye. He could not under-829 stand why so many people made fun of him when he was only trying to help.

626 In the absence of any traditionally valued status and 632 role of leadership, administration of the common interests of the township members is the concern of all. We say in the last chapter that primitive democracy is the guiding rule. Each crofter has an equal voice in deciding any question which affects the group and all, without exception, have to agree before any action is taken. Consent is expressed by silence. Typically, the crofters will have talked the [624] matter over among themselves beforehand. At such times the fact clearly emerges that the grazing clerk and the grazing committee are no more than figureheads required by law. They have no coercive or disciplinary powers. In any group situation, their views are taken no more seriously than those of any other man.

887 It is the old men who gather at one anothers' homes or 888 on the hill on a summer evening to weigh the innovation which 626 the youth want introduced. If they find the change acceptable, 632 they approve it at a meeting of the township by keeping silent. If they believe it will upset the communal system, they disapprove it. The dissenting voice of one old crofter is all that is required to maintain the conservative patterns, economically and socially.

182 In summary, we may say that within the township and 626 on the croft the cultural patterns reveal a fundamental continuity. As of old, status is ascribed. Men have remained

n the use of the grazing land or a desire of the young 561
ence the crofts in an effort to improve the individual 888 626 he old men must have their say. Through their position hurches, the old men also are the paramount source of ontrol, preserving their traditional habits and statuses, g a severe limitation on all social activity of a s nature. This religiously sanctioned control is ened by the inability of the youth to form a solidarity.
one of the most serious limitations of the society of the small number of young men and women, boys and girls ew opportunities which they have to come together as The functions of the old men's age grade are identical
e described for the Irish small farmer.[21] Another 794 rcle is composed of the affiliates of the same religious ey are mainly a mutual aid group. [476] hough the status equality noted in the township for 554
e same sex and age carries over to the larger community, always a few people who have an achieved status. The [793] enjoys high social prestige as the spiritual guardian ople. The doctor is valued for his role in caring for [759] e's physical well-being. The school teacher is re- [875] ecause he educates the youth and often acts as a spoke-he group. If there is a member of the landed gentry, [565]
e accorded the highest status in the area. It is [555] ng to note that the achieved status positions are most led by newcomers to the island. The shopkeepers and rensberg, op. cit., pp. 125-139.

---

the remainder of the population, as a general rule, it may 554 184
said that a person's status depends on personal qualities her than on occupation. This is especially true of men who e an active part in the church. In terms of interaction, social hierarchy is extremely fluid. People who elsewhere [565] Britain would be "working" or "middle" class not infrequently n with members of the "upper" class in both formal and in-mal social groups.[22] This underlying equalitarian pattern [571] always characterized the interpersonal relations of Skye's iety. There is, of course, cleavage between the upper [582] el of the society and the bulk of the population; interriage is impossible.

The social life of the village revolves around the new- 571 184
ers and the landed gentry. In addition to the social 554
cles based upon age, sex, kinship, and religion, the indi-ual belongs to several small groups of friends and, perhaps, ew formally organized clubs. When the native-born take t in the formal activities they do so as participants rather n as organizers or directors. The necessary roles of leader- [565] p are left to the newcomers or to the landed gentry. The ter, in particular, are responsible for community affairs, t as the chief and his kinsmen were formerly looked to as leaders of the people. Occasionally, an influential newer gives them able assistance. The influence of the old [888] is not as marked in the village as in the crofting communities,

---

[22] Roy Lewis and Angus Maude, The English Middle Classes
ndon: Phoenix House, 1949), pp. 13-26, 87-110.

182 the social superiors of women. The aged are the social 626 superiors of the youth and young adults. The father determines [593] how his wife and children will behave as long as they remain [888] under his control. The old man, or men, determine what changes will be accepted or rejected. There is no way to question [554] their decisions, unless one leaves the croft. Still, at the bottom, there is equality. No man can step forward as a leader. We are now in a position to look at the larger social grouping, the neighborhood.

Kith and Kin within the Neighborhood

182 During the days of the clan, the residents of the 621 neighborhood were bound together by real and fictitious ties of consanguinity and affinity, which were reinforced by the strong attachment to the soil and propinquity. Only [602] the fictitious bonds have been forgotten. Like the township, the neighborhood consists of an aggregate of conjugal families whose inter-personal relationships are reinforced by a 178 complicated network of kinship. Once, perhaps as late as 182 100 years ago, the neighborhood was a highly cooperative 621 social unit. When the local mills were in use and the church had not been broken by schism, the people must have had a more definite focus for their common interests. In more remote times, it was a defensive entity. Today the neighbor-182 hood is no longer a cooperative unit. On the analogy of the 621 old horse plough and the caschrom, cooperation is essential to the township but superfluous to this larger group. That the neighborhoods have not lost the potential for concerted action in times of crisis is attested by the uprisings distinction. During the war when Skye had its own little 875 army, he came to know many of the old crofters quite well. 554 Finally, he came to use personal names when speaking to them 576 and asked to be called by his first name. The people explained that they might be older than he, but he was too important to be spoken to as anything other than mister.

The tradesmen and the shopkeepers in Glendale and 554 Kilmuir are not any different from any other man. They are 443 not specialists. They are part-time crofters. We have to turn to Portree to see what status position they fill in the society of Skye. I might just add that they are on a first name basis with their neighbors, and, like the crofters, they are known beyond the neighborhood by their first name and township, such as Ian Borve or Murdo Stein.

To summarize, there is additional evidence for cultural 596 continuity in the structure of the neighborhood. The ex- 182 tended family, although very unstable and, therefore, somewhat amorphous, is still a reality in the minds of the people.
It still has two functions which it must have had in the remote past: seeing that all are cared for and given a decent burial. The ascription of status noted for the township 554 carries over to the neighborhood, as does the underlying status 182 equality and need for unanimous consent. Among the crofters leadership is still undeveloped. The old men can enforce [888] conformity but they cannot lead. Although prestige ranking is developed, in the form of the achieved statuses of ministers, doctors, and teachers, it is significant that, except for the minister in Glendale, all holders of prestige status are 794 Prerequisite t

779 in ordering human re awareness of a disti membership. When we prominence of the pr Calling." While man Skyemen firmly belie
belief and the stric
[787] the membership of al
[888] to the numbers of th visitation from the saving change, can o of old age. Since "
steadfast conformity 794 religion, "elect" ar support the church i affairs and do not t
"elect" members. Fo
Free Presbyterians o congregation of over a rapidly aging popu Church of Scotland i
we know, contains a affiliated with the
up in a different re
free from gossip to come forward as memb

o an understanding of the role of religion lationships for the Sgiathanach is an nctive and all-pervading feature of church briefly discussed theology, we noted the inciples of "Foreordination" and "Effectual y Scots may pay them lip service, the ve in them. Because of their unfaltering t interpretation of "Effectual Calling,"
l churches is very limited. Admission
e "elect," those who have received a Holy Spirit and experienced a soul-nly be gained by attaining the status election" depends on manifesting a to the behavior patterns approved by e all well past sixty. Adherents, who n every way but have no voice in kirk ake Communion, far outnumber these r example, among the religiously homogeneous
f Glendale, there are 14 members in a 300. In Kilmuir, a neighborhood with lation, there are 58 members of the n a congregation of 211. Portree, as large number of newcomers who are Church of Scotland. Having been brought ligious atmosphere and being relatively which the convert is exposed, they have
ers. Thus, the Church of Scotland has

794 125 members. That the Sgiathanach has not been influenced by the laxity of the newcomers in self-examination is indicated by the existence of 450 adherents. Further, the Free Church has only 21 members in a congregation of some 280, and the Free Presbyterian Church only 20 members in a congregation of 320.

The esoteric religious hierarchy established by the "Men" during the nineteenth century revivals continues to influence the lives of the people. From the small number of the "elect" are chosen the elders, the venerable guardians of behavior, and the deacons. The majority have been baptized [565] but are in a fallen condition. Shall we stretch an analogy and ask is this not comparable to the social hierarchy of ceann-cinnidh (clan chief), daoin'-uaisle (tacksmen), and clanna (clansmen) of the past? This much is certain: a strong hierarchial sense must be numbered among the persistencies.

888 575 794 626 In our discussion of the Islanders' economy we noted two significant facts concerning the sodality of the old men of the neighborhoods. We saw that they have a deliberative function in discussing economic innovations before they pass down to the townships, and that they are able to block any innovation of which they disapprove through the requirement of complete unanimity in township affairs. We may also recall the statement, "If you can't respect an elder of the church, who can you respect?" We may now add they have judicial and authoritarian functions in the religious sphere of activity, and, through their status within the church, they ultimately control the patterns of social behavior.

Their deliberative, judicial, and authoritarian functions 626 are identical with those found among the Catholic small 121 farmers of Ireland.[9] Of course, it is by no means unique in 888 human groups for the aged to attempt to maintain their 575 accustomed habits and statuses while the youth endeavor to 794 find acceptance for new ideas.[10] Nor is it unique for the 121 younger members of the society to resent the restraints imposed by the older people to punish deviation from traditional behavior.[11] Culture phases, as Kroeber has pointed out, associated with age tend to correspond to changes taking place within the society, rather than reflect static lines of segregation, such as those which exist between classes.[12] If these assertions are valid, the success which the elderly, 888 as a sodality, enjoy in barring the youth from achieving 626 acceptance of novel patterns should be indicative of the importance of age controls on the Isle of Skye. In order to see how they exercise control and how successful they are, let us consider those events in the life cycle which Van Gennep has called rites of passage.[13]

Rites of Passage

Rites of Passage function in all societies to mark the 121

---

[9] Arensberg, The Irish Countryman, pp. 122-139.

[10] Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 274-275.

[11] Herskovits, Man and His Works, p. 479.

[12] Kroeber, Anthropology, pp. 274-275.

[13] Arnold Van Gennep, Les Rites de Passage (Paris: E. Nourray, 1909).

passage of the individual from birth, through his age statuses, 121
to death and to re-establish meaningful patterns of interaction
after a disturbance by an event in the life cycle. When 851
individual and reciprocal patterns of behavior following birth 794
were described, I pointed out that they were a much modified survival of the old practice of kirking, the custom of having
the parents, their "people," and "friends" attend a church service to offer thanks, followed by a feast and dance. Similar festivities once accompanied baptism. As the first event in the life cycle which concerns the church, and as one of the two sacraments celebrated in the church, baptism is of supreme importance. In addition to revealing the amount of control [121]
the elderly have over the group, it shows how the status and
role of the father has been maintained.

The child's father, as the religiously sanctioned head 626
of the family, approaches the elder for his township and 851
requests the administration of the sacrament. The elder, in 888 794 turn, intimates the father's request to the minister, who then calls a kirk session. At the kirk session the father is examined. He must live an exemplary life, in the way of the church, including regular sabbath church attendance, daily
worship in the home, and the renunciation of all forms of frivolous amusement. The elders, of course, know how he habitually behaves by observation and reputation. In Glendale, if not in Kilmuir, the minister knows as well, for, as one woman said, "You never know what your neighbors will run and tell the minister." Sudden reform is not good enough. The [779]
father must also demonstrate his ability to raise the child in the nurture of the church by being tested on his knowledge 626 of the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. The elders, then, 851 888 sit in a judicial capacity. If the father measures up to the 794 standards imposed by the elders and the minister, who is their [779] choice and, therefore, must reflect their views, the father is told to present the child for baptism. If he does not satisfy the elders, his child is refused the rewards of the church until his father mends his ways. Here the authoritarian function of the elderly finds expression.

Many men are reluctant to approach the elders to ask for the sacrament. Everyone knows when a man is going to be tested and judged. The humiliation of being refused forces the father to reform. Since the elders think in terms of habitual behavior, one or even two years may pass before the father will feel that he has continuously demonstrated his conformity to the satisfaction of the elders. Nor is the bond of affection between the elder and his people and friends strong enough to prompt any leniency. To do so would threaten the status of the elders and the continuation of their control.
In one case a first cousin of the minister was refused.

In the trade center village the question of baptism is 369
a sore point for the ministers of the Free Church and the Free 626 851 Presbyterian Church. As might be expected, the elders of the 888 794 Church of Scotland are chosen from the county families and the prominent newcomers. Neither group shares the views of the Sgiathanach as far as their interpretation of circumspect behavior is concerned. For them baptism is administered to the child. Consequently, the sacrament is normally administered 369 without even the formality of a kirk session examination. The 626

ministers of the other churches assert that non-church-going, 851
drunken fathers whom the kirk session has refused have gone to 888 794
the Church of Scotland and have secured the sacrament for their children after pretending to mend their ways. They have then gone back to their former habits. It may be so, but at least one man in Portree was very surprised to find that the Church of Scotland can require a severe examination.

At baptism the child is formally introduced into the 851
folds of his father's church. His mother and father stand 794 before the minister and are admonished to bring up the child in the nurture and admonition of God, to the best of their ability.

Marriage is not a sacrament in Scotland, and, therefore, 585
does not provoke any strong resentment beyond a feeling that [179]
the Church of Scotland should not have the exclusive right to proclaim the banns of marriage. It is the one time in 585
the life of a woman when she is the center of attention and 562
has complete control over the situation. She decides where 794 she will be married and what minister will preside. Church affiliation seems to make little difference. At least, the wedding of a daughter of a strict Free Presbyterian family in the Church of Scotland did not give the people any cause to gossip. Although a wedding is no more than a legal formality, the vows made at marriage are sacred. It would not strike Americans as being particularly significant to omit the promise to obey from the ceremony; Americans are said to have an equality of the sexes. On Skye, where women are the social 585

inferiors of men, its omission is curious. The ministers have 562
taken the promise of the ceremony out because, as one said, "The 794 man may be a rogue, irresponsible, making it impossible for the woman to obey." She nevertheless promises to be "loving, truthful, and dutiful."

Election, as a passage rite, marks the attainment of the 794
status of the elderly. We already know that to become one of 888
the "elect" the individual, man or woman, must not only [626] experience a soul-saving change but also manifest steadfast conformity to the ideals of behavior which have religious approval. These ideals are the habits and statuses which the old people are striving to maintain. Thus religion 794 sanctions the status of the venerable old people. Their 888
interpretation of "Effectual Calling" functions to provide 626
the elders, the most eminent of the "elect," with an additional [182]
means to exercise their judicial and authoritarian roles. There can be no rapid conversion. Whether or not the probationary period of three years imposed by the "Men" in the last century is still enforced I do not know. The person who believes he has experienced a saving change, "a visitation from the Holy Spirit," is examined by the minister and his elders. Like the father who is seeking baptism for his child, such an old man or woman is judged on his knowledge of the Bible and the Shorter Catechism and on his conformity to the righteous life. No one can experience a saving change unless he is known, by observation, to have lived an upright life. The person who continues to pursue his own mundane pleasures cannot be spiritually enlightened. The individual who is asked about the nature of his visitation is not judged on his ability to raise his family in the nurture of the church. He is rather judged on his preparation to carry on the tradition. He must be worthy of the respect due to one of his status. While old women are numbered among the "elect," their exclusion from any active role in the church has kept them socially inferior to the old men.

I wish I could give some examples of the nature of this "visitation;" however, Skye is a land where the direct question is not used. One can ask a direct question without offending, but the code of hospitality requires an either affirmative answer or the answer you think your guest expects. My circuitous promptings on this topic only succeeded in arousing concern for my soul.

Two groups escape from the control of the elders as it is exercised through acceptance of an individual into the "elect." As mentioned earlier, the newcomers to Skye have come from different backgrounds. Beyond the Highlands, the meaning of "Effectual Calling" has changed over the years. The youth attend a young communicants' class in which they are taught the meaning of church membership. Notestein, writing about the national character of the Scot, maintains that interest in "election" has disappeared.[14] Most of the members of the Church of Scotland in Portree would no doubt agree with him. One attempt has been made on Skye to hold a young communicants' class. It took place, of course, in the Church

[14] Notestein, op. cit., p. 153.

er than Christianity is the prevailing practice in Glendale." 795 796 attachment to a sect is all the more significant in the ting neighborhoods because there is not one iota of differ-in the Gaelic services in any church. The difference is rinal.

In the neighborhood the affiliates of the same church 571 794 795 796
been said to interact with their fellows more regularly with the remainder of the group. They come together on Sabbath for a regular service and on Wednesday night
a prayer meeting. On the Sabbath they come as families, 593 band, wife and children and they sit together. Normally 562 sexes are segregated in public. Indeed, in the home 574 keep to one side of the fire and women to the other when e are callers. They also leave in family groups. Their raction is spiritual. There are no gatherings outside church either before or after the service to gossip, uss the stock, or even comment on the weather. They all know who was absent, but they will only greet their ows with a slight nod. The Wednesday night prayer ting is different. This is a group situation. Some come ous and gossip on the way. Others get together before after the service for a chat. At these prayer meetings 554 888 stature of the "elect" again emerges. They offer the ers on behalf of the congregation. The prayers, it should 782 oted, are extempore. No form is followed. The basis for are passages from Scripture and interpretations of the sages.

ability to move their listeners. Friday is a day of self- 794 796 examination and prayer. A fellowship meeting is held. The senior minister gives the sermon. The local minister follows
the sermon with a few lines of psalm, which the precentor
will chant for the congregation to sing, and calls upon one of the "elect" to prepare a question. After the singing has finished, an elder of the host church presents his "question."
The "question" is a line from Scripture which relates to human experience, which relates to their experience as pastoralagriculturalists. The remaining "Men," customarily visitors
from other kirks, speak to the question, giving "marks" (examples)
which distinguish between those who possess Christian virtues
and those who profess the virtues essential for salvation.
The speakers interpret the meaning of the line, it is only a single verse, often using allegorical interpretations. They are not supposed to tell about their own spiritual experience
of conversion. To the contrary, their discussion is intended to have significance for all present. At the end of three or four hours of "speaking to the question," the junior minister sums up what has been said and, infrequently, makes
any necessary corrections.

In addition to establishing an emotional atmosphere of 786 888
revivalism and the tempo of interaction between the visitors
and the local congregation, the fellowship meeting introduces
the venerable old men of neighboring churches to the local people. Their prestige extends beyond their own neighborhood
and congregation. Their ability becomes a topic of conversation

for the approaching evening and many nights to come. 794

Saturday is a day of preparation. After a morning 796 service, those who have been examined by the elders and ad- [573]
mitted to church membership, and the visitors who satisfy the elders of the kirk that they are worthy to receive Communion, receive tokens which will admit them to the Lord's Table on the following day.

On the Sabbath the service is oriented around an "Action Sermon." The minister speaks of the sufferings and blessings of Christ. At the conclusion of the sermon, the Lord's Table is "fenced." Once all the Highland churches gave communion at a table with a rail around it. Now there is only one kirk on Skye with the fenced table, the old parish church in Bracadale. Today the first few pews are used. The minister 794 draws a sharp distinction between those who are entitled to 796 sit at the "table" and those who do not have the right to 573 partake of Christ's body and drink of His blood. The former are reminded of the dangers which neglecting to come forward involves. The latter are warned of their promised damnation as a consequence of partaking unworthily. Since only the [888] ● old men and women are worthy of the sacrament, the minister's [626] exhortions and denouncements function to sanction the prestige [182] of the old people before the congregation and the wider community. After reading from the Bible, offering a prayer, and 794 addressing the communicants on their humble position, the bread 796 and wine is distributed.

The Communion is concluded on Monday morning with a

that young sinners will not escape from his kingdom." 785 Another of the same church expressed himself, "One is 779 constrained to look upon this world as a great battlefield between Christ and the devil and between grace and sin. In our day the kingdom of darkness is carrying everything before it; the Prince of the kingdom of darkness is the god of this world." This attitude is not, however, carried to the extreme that characterizes the Old Order Amish in their determination to "Be not conformed to this world."[24] On Skye, the position is rather that the church, as Christ's witness, must resist the encroachment of worldly pursuits. In a world which is moving as fast as ours, the success 888 ● of the resistance of the church is indicative of the hold 626 of the pillars of the faith, the venerable old men, over 794
the group. We have learned how the prestige status of the [554]
"elect" and the elders stems from their high position in the esoteric religious hierarchy, and how, through their power to withhold the sacraments, they enforce social control. When the elders sit in judgment of the father whohas come to ask that his child be baptized, or the person who thinks he has experienced a "saving change," they base their estimation of him on his non-religious behavior as much as his knowledge of the tenets of the faith. He must [785] not only attend church regularly and conduct family worship; he must also deny himself all pleasures of a frivolous nature.

---

[24] Kollmorgen, Culture of a Contemporary Rural Community: The Older Order Amish of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, p. 1

Skye

nd in Portree. Only one girl appeared for instruction. 794 779 significance of her preparation had been fully explained, 184 ned to take the final step. She did not disagree rinister's view that she was prepared for membership nion, but she was afraid of what her friends in the ch and Free Presbyterian Church might say. She was wondering what the middle-aged adherents of her church
e to say, too. When the Sgiathanach takes his first , in Glendale, Kilmuir, or Portree, the people must o look up to him.

second exception to the age-grade requirement rules 626 county people. Because of their social position 888 565
mmunity, which rests on the expression of their statuses, 794
as landlords, village and neighborhood representatives rs, and members of the national class system, and f their education in England, the county people mbership in the church at an early age. Some have ders of the church at twenty-one. To subject them ntrol of the crofters would, obviously, be incompati-their social standing. Although they are all Church [182] nd, here again religion is a reinforcing factor for ture of the society.

ng, the final act of living, reveals a host of traits 763
y receive covert expression during an individual's 829
ile the youth is censured for his spontaneous and the adult is criticized for his behavior, the is always respected. As one woman said, "It is the in a person's life that the people have nothing but

ing his flock to attend concerts, had a point of differ- 793 with the Synod and was removed. In the Braes which had 795 as staunchly Free Presbyterian as Glendale, roughly 798
of the congregation changed their adherence to the Free
h. The remainder have continued true to their own sect
a new minister.

There are numerous Free Presbyterian families far 795
d the reach of a minister. All they can hope for is an ional visit, and there are no missionaries of this sect
e island. Although they attend services at the nearest of the Free Church, doctrinal differences are still tant enough in their minds to keep them within the folds eir sect. They were born in it and will die in it.
ver, despite the lack of a minister in Glendale between 794
1911, 1913-1920, and 1931-1933, the people are as staunch [793]
er. At such times one of the elders steps forward to 794 ct services as he would during the temporary absence 888 554 e minister. His ability to fill the role of a spiritual r fortifies his control and his prestige. This is true rtree. The elder, even a newcomer, who stands in the t is deeply respected. Identity with, and attachment [796]
e denomination is maintained in the absence of a minister siting other churches at the Communion season and by isits of a minister on the Sabbath and for annual sgiving services following the harvest. So strong is [795] ectarianism of the Glendale crofters that the Church of and minister for Duirinish is convinced that "Churchianity

the Outer Isles, an area of recent depopulation, there are enough youth to resist the dictates of their elders.[25] If they cannot have a dance in a hall, they hold their dance on a plank bridge. In Kilmuir the crofters are looking forward to "Effectual Calling." To defy the elders, or allow their children to run counter to the wishes of the elders, would mean a loss of all hope for salvation.

For the majority of crofters, any form of amusement is objectionable, but there are slight differences among the affiliates of the several sects. The Church of Scotland is the most lenient. For adherents, concerts, film shows and similar organized forms of entertainment may be admissible, especially if they are held outside the neighborhood. There is a "picture bus" from Kilmuir to Portree on Wednesday and Saturday night. Sports activities are often considered as wholesome outlets for the youth. Some of the ministers, feel the lack of social contact with their people and believe they might do some good by taking part in life outside the pulpit. The Church of Scotland minister in Kilmuir occasionally attends the Crofters' Club, the only secular activity admitted in the neighborhood. Significantly, Free Church opinion, although the voice of a minority, has prohibited the playing of pipes and recitals of the Gaelic Choir at the annual agricultural show. The Church of Scotland minister in Sleat has taken a hand in the village hall. Unorganized dances are condemned. This is not because dancing is a sin but because of the excessive drinking and immorality which might result from a promiscuous gathering. Organized dances are, in general, not objectionable. Nevertheless, in spite of the attitudes of the people to these secular activities, the Church of Scotland crofter behaves in much the same way as his neighbor who adheres to another sect. The elders of the other sects have an influence over everyone in the neighborhood. Every man must ask himself, "What will my neighbors say?"

[25] Darling and Morley, op. cit., pp. 21-24.

The Free Church and Free Presbyterian Church people condemn any and all social gatherings where songs, stories, or other diversions are admitted. When people visit, they are expected to remain circumspect in behavior. They may discuss their problems and gossip about their neighbors or the wicked newcomers. They may engage in cooperative or individual work. They may eat together in the home. They may not engage in such activities outside the home. Religion on Skye for the majority has centred attention on the home. Let us look at some of the activities which are condemned. There is the Woman's Rural Institute, an organized woman's club dedicated to stimulating home industries in rural areas and providing educational programs, especially demonstrations and lectures on domestic arts. One meeting, for example, at Uig, not far from Kilmuir, was addressed by a school teacher on the subject of Highland Folklore. He was followed by a knitting contest and tea. Youth Clubs and Young Farmers Clubs do not exist, except in Kilmuir where the Young Farmers Club is under the Crofters' Club, and, of course, in Portree. Village halls are dens of iniquity. While we were on Skye one was built that the people of Skye, including many of the have not been favorably impressed by Skye Week is that it is not representative of Skye. For the Highland Games are alright, but the concer

similar festivities only cause ill feelings.

As might be expected social life is more Here the members and the adherents of the Chur partake of a number of recreational activities
there is badminton twice a week. In the sprin there is a little golf and tennis. The limita religious; they are climatic. Then, too, ther
We have already noted the existence of many cl regular dances. Moving pictures take place tw
All of these activities are run by newcomers;
a more or less passive role. The "elect" of t sects are, to say the least, very much disturb frivolities. What is worse, the children atte and the concerts and the boys play shinty. Th enough solidarity among those of their own age weigh the threats of their elders. Apparently enough security to be unaffected by the stern
the minister from the pulpit. When they marry have to recast the pattern of their behavior, elders are in a position to exercise control b baptism from their children. Some may turn to Scotland.

Standing in marked contrast to Portree, control by the aged is complete. There is not newcomers,

. The consensus
the Sgiathanach
ts, dances and

vivid in Portree.
ch of Scotland
. In the winter
g and summer
tions are not e is shinty.
ubs. There are
ice a week.
the Skyemen have
he two smaller ed by these nd the dances
ey can find grade to out-
they find denunciations of
, however, they
for now the y withholding the Church of

in Glendale the
a single activity

at which the youth can join together as a sodality; hence, they hardly ever have a chance to question the control of the "elect." Only once in recent years has the control of the old people been criticized. After World War II, the men who returned to the neighborhood wanted to erect a village hall. This threatened both family unity and the solidarity of the neighborhood. The young people were divided between the time honored obligation to honor their parents and their own desires for a fuller life. The parents were torn between religious beliefs and their affection for their children. The minister and his elders were faced with a situation which threatened the fundamental tenets of the faith and the continued ability of the religious expression to sanction the existing order. How strong are age controls? The youth did not get their village hall. Many of them left Skye for the Lowlands where social life is less restricted.

The difficulty is that until, say, forty years ago the traditional outlets were sufficient. Middle-aged people remember how the youth used to drop in on the old widow for a visit on an evening and then make their way off in couples for a bit of courting. Two World Wars and the continuing program of National Service, not to speak of the influence of the schools, have given the youth a new perspective. They have spent one or two years in an environment where recreational activities are considered not only innocent but also wholesome. The radio and magazines have contributed to the demands of the youth for amusements. As if this were not enough, there are sanctioned the qualities which had given the people their characteristic strength of character.

The churches of Skye made conservatism an official policy in 1843, and in 1892 reaffirmed this policy. For well over 100 years religion has had a strength and vitality which has enabled the Skyeman to pass through times of extreme distress, not to mention chronic economic deficiencies. Among the most important religious sanctions are those which reinforce the status values of the culture. The father's status in the nuclear family was reaffirmed at a time when his socio-economic importance was declining. He has been held responsible for the spiritual welfare of his wife and children. The prestige of the old men, the family-head elders, and their control over the neighborhood group was similarly bolstered by making them the judges of a man's spiritual enlightenment. Spiritual enlightenment is weighed on a scale which will not balance unless a person's religious knowledge is matched by conformity to the ways the old men think a man should behave. Again we are not dealing with a completely negative attitude. In the place of frivolous amusements, religion has offered highly emotional, spiritual patterns of behavior. Religion has preserved the Gaelic language by using it in formal worship and within the home for family worship. In these and other ways religion has indeed enabled the culture to achieve a reorientation and maintain its continuity.

How similar Skye is to the Old Order Amish in this respect.[3]

---

[3] Kollmorgen, Culture of a Contemporary Rural Community: The Older Order Amish of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania.

The man who seeks sensory pleasures and finds enjoyment in 785
mundane recreation is believed to be spiritually un- 779
enlightened. It seems almost an anticlimax to add that social life is restricted.

Beyond the Highlands and, indeed, within the Highlands 771
in certain prosperous areas, where poverty has not been 883
a factor of such importance that it requires religious 571
sanction, the Church of Scotland has endeavored to find
room within the church for recreational activities, especially for the youth. As in America, the church feels
a responsibility to the youth which requires a combination
of religion and recreation if the citizens of the community
are to be well-rounded adults. Youth programs and youth clubs, young adult groups, and social circles for the older men and women are an essential part of church work. In 794
an organizational sense, the Church of Scotland on Skye 571
has, at the most, a Woman's Guild which meets once a month
to hear a lecture on a topic such as missionary work in India, and which holds an occasional sale of work to reduce the church debt or buy the minister an electric tea kettle
to keep in his vestry; and a choir, which meets once a week for rehearsal. It is, as I have said before, not the overall policy of the church which determines the activities
in which the people participate or which they reject. The 888
elders are the prime movers. Were the youth in Kilmuir 561
anyone under thirty, instead of anyone under forty, the 626 control of the aged might not be as strong as it is. In

else the spouse is likely to lose status. 626 684

The most powerful of all agents for social control are the old men of the neighborhood. Through their position in the church, a religious sanction for their prestige status, they enforce conformity to the norms of behavior which religion has sanctioned either positively or negatively. No one, nor any group, has been successful in questioning the right of these venerable men to maintain their habits and statuses which have been preserved over the generations. The baptism of a man's children and his own salvation depends on acceptance of the authority of the elders, for they will be his judges. 626 888 [794]

As far as the contemporary scene is concerned, there is no anomie. The content of the culture has been greatly modified, but the form, the underlying distinctive pattern, has been preserved. We are dealing with a single tradition in which the norms of behavior and the sanctions for them have remained common and clear. This is all the more striking because there have been periods in which cultural and social disintegration threatened to overwhelm the Sgiathanach. This brings us back to the role of religion in preserving cultural continuity. 182 178

Loomis and Beegle have employed Durkheim's theory to analyze the growth and spread of fundamentalist religious sects in contemporary United States.[16] They conclude: "It is no mere coincidence that various types of emotional religious sects are now among the most rapidly expanding 171 182 771 786 781

---

[16] Loomis and Beegle, Rural Social Systems, pp. 401-407.